PETES DROPPED BOTH GAMES ON THE HOLIDAY

Morning Game Went Eleven Innings With Creswell Pitching—In Erie Today

The Petes dropepd both games yesterday at Brantford. The morning affair went eleven innings after Brantford had tied it up in the ninth when Rube Deneau lined one to Blount which Curly just failed to hold. There were two down at the time. Creswell was hit rather hard but kept the pokes fairly scattered. The afternoon encounter was a 2-1 affair. The Petes had three errors in each game. Everybody on the club got a hit in the afternoon game but Belting and Fox while Thrallkill, Stewart, Rooney, King, Fox, got the hits in the morning game. Thrallkill's wild heave in the second game gave the Brants a run. Welsh did not play in the games yesterday, being laid up with an ulcerated tooth. Kelly replaced him in left.

Brantford, July 1.—The Red Sox took both games from the Petes today, when they won narrowly after giving a good exhibition of ball. Both games were fast and snappy, the second being a pitchers' battle in which Nichols got the better of Belting, keeping the Petes down to a run. Belting held Brantford to four bingles, but they managed to get two runs on slack team work. The game lasted eleven innings, when Burns made the plate for Brantford on hits by Deneau and Ivors. Tuesday's Win.

In Tuesday afternoon's game the Petes gathered ten hits while Tracey had the Brants guessing at all times and was backed up by errorless ball on the part of his mates. Blount had two hits, Thrallkill one, Welsh two, King, Miller and Tracey one each and Fox two.

Brantford, June 30.—The Red Sox gave a poor exhibition of baseball today when they fell again to the Petes by the score of 3 to 1. Taylor twirled great ball, but received poor support, and the Petes' score was made up on this weakness, Lacroix and Roth both making costly mistakes. The team work was poor, and Peterboro took advantage of this fact. With seven bingles, the Sox failed to make more than a single run. The score :—

FIRST SACKER FOR BLOUNTMEN

Mike Dolan Will Play in the Erie Series

Six foot three in his socks, arrived here Tuesday evening, in the person of Mike Dolan, who will cover the initial sack for the Petes. He left here yesterday morning and will play for the team in Erie this afternoon. Dolan is the first sacker the club has been angling for for some time. He covered first for the Indianapolis Feds until Charlie Carr, the Fed's leading clouter got back into the game. Dolan is a .300 clouter, and has had wide experience and should help some, as a veteran is needed on the first station. Dolan would have been here a week ago, but his wife has been ill, and as she wished to accompany him he remained home. Mrs. Dolan will make her home here for the summer.

Joe Byrne will report to the club again at Erie on Saturday. Joe's father is a little better, and the fans will be pleased to know that the danger point has been passed. Joe will leave Pete, Friday night.

Louie Schettler, who was injured last Saturday, has joined the club again and will work in the Erie series.

NORWOOD CLUB HERE TO-MORROW

The local team hooks up with the Norwood lacrosse club at Riverside to-morrow afternoon at 3.30. The club was considerably weakened in its game with Tweed yesterday, owing to the absence from the city of several players. As to-morrow's game is a championship one, the team will be at full strength. The rain of yesterday put an awful crimp into the bank rolls of the men behind the club and a good crowd should be out to-morrow afternoon to help the sport along.

All the local players are requested to be on hand this evening when a practice will be held.

Peggy—I thought you'd forgiven what I said and promised to forget it? Peggy—But I didn't promise to let you forget I'd forgiven it.

LIFT LOCKS LOST

The Lift Lock team lost both ends of a double header yesterday morning and afternoon. The first game was won by the Stars by the score of 7 to 3. It was a well played game. The batteries:—Lift Locks, Adams and McMahon; Stars, H. Adams and Hamilton.

The second game was won by a picked East City team by the score of 15-13. The game was called at the end of the sixth on account of rain.

The batteries:—Sedgwick and Hamilton; Picked Team, McCauley and McMahon.

LOCAL TEAM WAS SHORT FOUR GOALS

Small Crowd Saw Tweed Win in Lacrosse

A handful of fans braved the drizzling rain of Dominion Day and journeyed to Riverside Park only to see the local lacrosse team beaten by an 8-4 score by the Tweed aggregation. It was an unsatisfactory affair, like all exhibition encounters are, both from a playing standpoint and the standpoint of officialism. Dr. Allan of Tweed, was the referee, and with all due respects to the dental surgeon's pulling and drilling propensities, it must be admitted that he certainly "pulled" for a Tweed win even more than his town's natives did. Then there was a Tweed man acting the role of goal judge. He was some judge. On one shot he failed to lift his hand, either because of rheumatics of conscience, but after the Tweed boys had informed him that the ball had gone through the net, he raised his hand like a railway signal, after the accident had occurred. Some goal judge and some nerve on the part of both officials.

With all due respect to the officials and the local team, it must be admitted that Tweed had a little the best of the argument, but not near as much as the score shows. And then, bad decisions usually take the heart out of a team. It was only an exhibition game, however, which leads us to imagine that the Tweed officials might bring along an army of maxim guns for holding up purposes if the game were on the strictly, "get out and win, it means something, plane."

Neither team displayed any flashy checking or passing qualities, although some neat cracks were meted out. The slippery ground interfered considerable with the work of both clubs and the game lagged. At the end of the first quarter Tweed led 3-2, and the score was 4-4 at the half. Tweed scored one in the third period and three in the last, and the fans adjourned for supper. The line up follows:

COMMENT

As You Like It

The Brantford sport writers are hitting .999 in the gloom league. Did you ever notice that every time Brantford wins at home ,the game is great, etc. When they lose, the home team is rotten, etc. It looks from here as though the Brantford newspaper offices are in the throes of an epidemic of "lemonitis." The disease is evidently spreading in "The End of the World," alias Telephone City, where the natives help push the cars up the hill and sing All Hail The Power That Never Comes. Of Tuesday's game, which was won by the Petes, the Brantford writers said the home team was rotten, in face of the fact that the Petes only won by a 3-1 score and the Red Sox made but two errors. Of yesterday's games the Brantford correspondents say that everything was oranges. Judging by the closeness of the play, the morning game going eleven innings and the afternoon being a 2-1 affairs, evidently the battles were hard fought, but had Brantford lost under the same conditions, the .999 average would have been boosted a point. Only a handful of fans turned out yesterday and the guarantee paid to the Petes ate up the receipts. You can easily figure out who is to blame.

That the baseball fan is the most rabid of all was clearly shown at the lacrosse game for if any baseball umpire had meted out decisions such as Referee Allan and a Tweed goal umpire did yesterday, pop bottles, clubs and everything else would have been buried, and the air would have been blue with choice exclamations. The teams made the grave mistake of selecting Dr. Allan a former Tweed player and an official of the club, to referee the battle. Without any fear of contradiction it must be said that Dr. Allan proved the strongest man on the Tweed line-up. His decisions were very partial towards his own club. On one occasion a Tweed man deliberately held the stick of one of the Petes but the doctor failed to penalize. Another instance was the ruling off of a Pete for an unintentional crack. A Tweed player had the ball and the Pete attempted to check his stick but the Tweed player ducked and received a slight crack on the head. He ducked forward. The cream de menthe of decisions was handed out by the goal umpire in the third period. He was stationed at the easterly corner of the nets when a Tweed man shot from the west. The local goal keeper shook the shot off and it rolled almost to the gate. The umpire knew it was not a goal but when the Tween players shouted that the ball had gone through the net he raised his hand. If the ball had gone through the net it would have struck the umpire as it was knee high. Yesterday's exhibition on the part of the officials should be a lesson to those interested in the betterment and revival of lacrosse to secure officials who are not interested in any way with one team or other.

Regardless of the double defeat at the hands of the Brants yesterday the Petes are just three points out of the cellar according to the corrected standing. The locals have now won 20 and lost 27 while Hamilton has won 19 and lost 26 which gives the locals a percentage of .425 and the Hams .422. The Brants are one game ahead of the Petes. The games of Tuesday and yesterday make the race even closer than before. London and Ottawa are neck in neck with 29 wins and 19 losses or about four games ahead of Erie who moved into third place when St. Thomas lost two out of three in two days and the Sailors won one and lost one. Three games separate the Petes from fourth place. They swing over to Erie today for a big series and in order to keep within striking distance of the leaders must break even at the worst.

They are not backward in coming forward in Hamilton. Frankly, coldly and in numerous words, the sporting writers of the Ambitious City are demanding the release of Manager Yates. Evidently there is something wrong somewhere with the Hamilton club as the team looked nice when it was here. Doc Yates has placed Dudley in right field and re-hired Dolan who is on the initial sack again. Dolan must be some player in the estimation of the Hamilton manager if he can perform better than Dudley did while in this city.

Harvard defeated Leander and the Union Boat Club of Boston defeated the London Rowing Club by four lengths in the time of seven minutes, forty-eight seconds.

In the diamond sculls, Williams defeated Fripp; Sinigaglia, the Italian, defeated Ayer, of Boston, by three lengths in nine minutes and thirty seconds and Dibble of Toronto, beat Tann of the Thames Rowing Club by one length in eight minutes, fifty-eight seconds.

JIMMY DIRECT IN FRONT AT PORT HOPE

Frank Montgomery's Jimmy Direct showed his heels to the field in the last two heats of the 2.15 class at Port Hope yesterday and captured the race. The event was keenly contested all the way, and Susie Hall, owned by Dr. Johnson of this city captured the first two heats, and Manor King, owned by Hodgins of Orillia, came through in the third. The driver of Jimmy Direct was changed for the two last heats and he won handily. Although Jimmy Direct and Susie Hall each won two heats, the stallion was in better positions in the heats which he failed to win than the mare, and showed by winning the last two heats he was the class of the race. Therefore the judges awarded first money to Mr. Montgomery. Ora Medium, owned by Mr. Montgomery, was unplaced.

LOCALS HAD A SMALL LEAD

Cricket Match Called at End of First Innings Owing to Rain

Only one innings of the all day cricket match between the local club and St. Albans of Toronto was played yesterday, the second innings being called off owing to the rain. Peterboro turned in 59 runs to the visitors' 51 and captured the match. The slippery crease caused by the drizzle did not prevent each team from putting up a splendid game and the bowling on each side was deadly. Lawrence carried off the bowling honors of the day. The local man was in excellent trim and took eight wickets for 14 runs. The local victory is largely due to his good work and the fine batting of Boone who was big bat for the day with 27 runs. Hancock of the visitors was next high with 15 runs.

PROHIBITION NOW IN FORCE IN NINE STATES

Nearly Fifty Per Cent of the People of United States Under Prohibition

Charleston, W. Va., July 2.—State-wide prohibition of the liquor business in West Virginia became effective yesterday. It brings the total number of states in the prohibition column up to nine.

With West Virginia added, the list will be: Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, West Virginia. These nine states of total prohibition territory, plus the local no-license area, make up 2,132,726 square miles in which 46,029,750 persons, or nearly 50 per cent. of the country's population, live, according to the latest figures of the prohibition leaders.

The 92,000 majority by which the people of West Virginia accepted the dry proposition was relatively the largest ever given by any state. It was approximately two to one for state-wide suppression of the liquor business. It was a surprise even to the prohibition forces, who were indebted largely to the determined stand which many of the large employers took in favor of their cause. The state has a population of 1,121,119, by the census of 1910.

The mandate of the legislature, embodied in the Yost bill, for the enforcement of the new law, beginning on July 1st, departs in many respects from the methods hitherto tried along this line. The chief features centres about the creation of a commissioner of prohibition, whose particular business it will be to see that by next Tuesday midnight some twelve hundred liquor selling places in the state have disposed of their stocks and that thereafter all persons shall be punished by law if they keep liquor for sale.

The new office of commissioner of prohibition automatically falls to Tax Commissioner F. O. Blue of this city, who has been spending several months in preparation for strict enforcement of the new law.

To save the state the time and expense of taking violations before the state courts, he has been urging municipal ordinances governing the violations, thus permitting the cases to be tried in the local courts.

The Drug Store.

In an effort to instruct the people as to the provisions of the new law, Commissioner Blue has also been lecturing throughout the state.

"In other states," says Mr. Blue, "where prohibition has been adopted, one of the forces that has had to be contended with has been the drug store. The Yost law will regulate this feature. Druggists may sell alcohol only to persons not addicted to its use, upon prescription of a reputable physician, who has examined the person and in detail set forth in the prescription the reasons for the use of alcohol. The governing bodies of druggists have approved this plan. For scientific or mechanical purposes alcohol will be sold only after affidavit as to its intended and uniform records of all such sales will be kept, to be inspected periodically by those in charge of the enforcement of the law. No druggist, however, can sell in any form whiskey, brandy, ale, or any beverage of an intoxicating nature.

"The enactment of the Webb-Kenyon law by congress will be of considerable assistance in enforcing the prohibition law in this state," he said.

"One of the benefits of the federal act is that records of interstate shipments of liquor may be required, and therefore every railroad, express company, and any kind of transportation company, including steamboats and vessels carrying freight or express, either from another state into ours, or from one part of our state to another part, must obey the laws of this state respecting liquors. Every one of the transportation companies will be required to keep special records at the point of delivery showing the receipt of liquors, the kind and quantity, to whom consigned, when delivered, and the consignee must sign in person for the shipment. The Webb-Kenyon act vests the right to enforce these provisions of the law and regulations thereunder against interstate carriers. None of these carriers will be permitted to receive consignments of liquor to any point where there is not a regularly employed agent to keep such records, and have them open for inspection at all times.

Must Keep Records.

"The man who is engaged in the steamboat business upon our waters, interstate or intrastate, must keep these records, and will not be permitted to deliver any liquor or make sale of any liquors upon board his vessel while in our waters.

"This brings us to the question of how far one may get liquor for another. In the first place, if one acts as the agent of the seller, he is guilty of selling. In other words, if one has occasion to go to some point out of the state, and a friend hands him a dollar and requests that he purchase for him a quart of whiskey, and he does it and delivers it to him, he is guilty of making a sale, and by the act is guilty of making it, not where he purchased it, but where he delivered it in the state. Again, the representatives of those who sell liquor cannot come into the state to solicit verbally, by letter, circular, or otherwise. There is only one or two ways that a citizen of this state may bring liquors into it; he may upon his own initiative order it, and have it sent to himself by common carrier, for his personal use, and not for any illegal purposes, or he may go and get it. But in either event he can not bring it here for unlawful purposes. If he orders it shipped by common carrier, a record is made, open to inspection; if he goes after it and brings it with him, intending to use it for unlawful purposes, he may be arrested and the liquor seized, as soon as he comes into the state."

TWO BODIES ARE BROUGHT TO SURFACE

Rimouski, Que., June 30. — The bodies of a little girl some six or seven years of age, and a steward as indicated by his uniform, were recovered from the Empress of Ireland by the divers at work on her yesterday. Both were discovered on the promenade deck. That of the steward was not caught in any manner, but was floating by the cabin wall, while the other was entangled in a rope. Neither has been identified, and the action of the water has almost obliterated the features.

The first men who descended, Macdonald, of the cruiser Essex, and Chinchem, the New York diver, found nothing. They reached the promenade deck, but their search was unavailing, though they wandered along for some distance. Whitehead, one of the best of the naval men, then went down. He was on two decks before he caught sight of a body. From one to the other he clambered up the slippery side of the ship, a tedious and most difficult undertaking. Finally he reached the promenade deck, and there, about midships, he saw the child's body.

Chinchem then made another descent. He again landed on the side of the ship near the promenade deck and was soon over the rail. Not far from where he stood, close beside a cabin door, he saw a body.

It was the last day on the work for the Essex men. Orders came yesterday that they were to proceed to Quebec to join their ship, which is leaving for Newfoundland. And so, early in the evening, they went aboard the Lord Strathcona and she sailed up the river. The New York and Quebec divers will continue the operations. Other divers from Kingston, Ont., and New York are coming to replace the navy men.

The coroner's jury which heard the evidence into the death of Edwin Cossaboom brought in a verdict of accidental death last evening. Cossaboom, one of the divers, was killed on June 21 by falling from the forecastle, where he was attempting to fix a mooring chain. He dropped to the bed of the river, and in his confusion turned off his air. Then, in his efforts to turn the valve again it is believed he broke the handle.

CHINAMAN KILLS A WHITE MAN

Drunken Man Was Behaving Badly in Restaurant

ESTEVAN, Sask., July 2.—George Bidler, farmer, was shot and killed Tuesday evening at Bromhead by Lee Han, Chinese restaurant proprietor. The Chinaman was arrested and appeared on preliminary trial before Magistrate Speers, who committed him for trial. Bidler had been drinking and threatened to clean out the place. Lee Han told him to stand off and backed toward the rear door to get out of the way of Bidler, who continued to advance, and as the Chinaman could not get out of his way, after warning Bidler he would shoot, he fired the shot. Threats were made to lynch the Chinaman and the police, to avoid trouble, hurried the other Chinamen out of town to Estevan.

JACK KONG GETS LIFE

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 2.—Declaring that he thought Jack Kong, the Chinese servant who killed Mrs. Chas. Millard and dismembered and burned her body, was guilty of murder instead of the lesser crime of manslaughter which the jury had decided, was the crime, Justice Gregory on Tuesday emphasized his feeling by sentencing the 17-year-old criminal to spend the rest of his life in the penitentiary. Usually a life sentence means twenty-one years, but Kong under the sentence must spend all his years within prison walls. His lordship declared he was unable to see any one redeeming feature, for he regarded the crime as one of peculiar cunning and ferocity.

ANOTHER MEDIATION

Villa and Carranza Require Services of a "Dove"

EL PASO, Texas, July 2.—Miguel Diaz Lombardo, Constitutionalist representative at Paris, cabled yesterday that he would leave at once for El Paso. This was taken here as indicating that he would act as an unofficial peace commissioner between Gen. Carranza and Gen. Villa in their yet unsettled estrangement.

Lombardo was Minister of Public Instruction in the Cabinet of the late President Madero. He has been friendly with Gen. Villa since the Madero revolution, also is on good terms with Gen. Carranza, and is a close friend of Gen. Felipe Angeles, Carranza's deposed Secretary of War, whose present relation with Villa has been credited as occasioning much of the ill-feeling between the two factions of the Constitutionalists.

It was learned yesterday that the proposed conference between Villa and representatives of Carranza is far from complete. Alfonso Madero, brother of the late President, Santos Cuerano, the Peruvian poet, who has been active recently in Mexican affairs and Alberto Pani, one of Carranza's younger advisers, some days ago offered their services as mediators in the internal embroilment, it was said.

Advices received by mail from Guadalajara said that the second largest city in Mexico, was about to be attacked by Gen. Obregon's troops.

The revolutionists, it was stated, had cut off the water supply of the city which aside from making water scarce had shut off the electric light and power. The city for days has been in darkness, except for the use of candles.

120,000 CHEQUES ISSUED MONTHLY

On the fifteenth of each month the C.P.R. will pay in wages over the whole system $6,000,000. This is the monthly record in round numbers, 120,000 cheques being drawn every month. It seems only the day before yesterday when 50,000 cheques were deemed to represent a tremendous monthly wage list. The number of employees grows all the time, in spite of careful appointment, and economic working. These monthly cheques find their way into the most distant, the oddest places. They are hurried, in enclosures, to the distant parts of British Columbia. They find their way to the construction camps, removed from civilization. They reach the employees at the wayside station, showing a single tuft of grass amid the general aridity. And, however lonely or small or discouraging the locality or district, there will be someone there to cash the cheque for the employee. There may be a bank in a tent, which is very frequently the fact. If there is no bank there is a company's agent of some kind, to whom the cheques will be addressed and who will distribute them to the men in the district. To make out the pay lists and check them, and control them, and issue the cheques to correspond to the bookkeeping and get the work so advanced as to have all things ready at the right date, on the stroke of the clock, requires a large staff at headquarters. And whether the times be good or bad, the figures rising or falling, the $6,000,000 have to be provided on the fifteenth of each month to the minute. The exceptionally strong position of the Canadian Pacific has enabled it to pass through a time of stringency, always making more than its dividend, with ample funds at its instant disposal. There has been, as far as possible, retrenchment during the past few months. That does not mean that the company has parted with any of its employees; but it has not undertaken new work necessitating the employment of new hands, or the disbursement of sums other than those already arranged for under older programmes. No man in the service of the company, high or low, has any doubt about that monthly cheque, which will be honored in all parts of the Dominion.

SIR SANFORD FLEMING AGAIN CHANCELLOR OF QUEEN'S

Veteran Railway Builder Is the Sole Surviving Founder of the Royal Canadian Institute Which Was Established In 1851 — He Has Held Chancellorship of Queen's Continuously Since 1880.

In 1851 a little band of engineers, surveyors, and architects living in Toronto assembled and joined themselves into a society for the encouragement of the physical sciences, art, and manufactures, and more particularly for promoting the acquisition of those branches of knowledge which are connected with the three professions named.

Such was the genius of the Canadian Institute whose fame is worldwide, and to which royal honors came the other day. The original incorporators were William E. Logan, John O. Brown, Frederick F. Passmore, Kivas Tully, William Thomas Ridout, and Sandford Fleming.

The first-named of these, of course, was the eminent scientist, afterwards Sir William Logan. Messrs. Brown, Passmore and Ridout were well known local surveyors, and their signatures on many age-yellowing plans are familiar to lawyers and real estate men whose duties take them to the registry offices. Mr. Kivas Tully was for a great many years engineer for the Ontario Government and was the father of the late Agnes Strickland Tully, a noted Canadian artist. His heyday was before the present one of specialism, and—like John G. Howard, the architect-engineer, to whose bounty Toronto is indebted for High Park — Engineer Tully's great talents found expression in much worthy architectural work. Trinity College, on Queen street west, for instance, was designed by him and erected under his direction. He was the first president of the Toronto Engineers' Club founded in 1899.

The last mentioned of the incorporators of the noted institution in question—and who was incidentally the real "Originator and Father of the Institution" — now known as Sir Sandford Fleming, is the sole survivor of the original half-dozen. He has always supported it and sought to further the ends in view; to-day in his honored old age, he is still active in his interest in all that concerns it. Sir Sandford is a noted Imperialist. He became chancellor of Queen's University, Kingston, in 1880 and has held that office continuously since, having been re-elected a few weeks ago for another term of three years. In 1887 he was elected to the presidency of the Royal Society of Canada, he received his K.C.M.G. in 1897. He made his greatest bid for fame as chief engineer during the Canadian Pacific Railway construction, overcoming obstacles over thousands of miles of absolutely unknown territory which modern right-of-way locators and constructors know nothing about. Members of his profession take off their hat to Sir Sandfard Fleming; he is the grand old man of Canadian engineering. People do not generally know that, as a comparatively young man, the veteran knight of the transit, once served as first commanding officer of No. 3 Company Tenth Royal Grenadiers.

Sir Sandford has issued a large number of scientific works dealing with important subjects of a practical nature such as the uniform standard time, the primal meridian question and the Pacific cable.

Old Trinity House.

It was King Henry VIII., after Alfred, the virtual founder of the British navy, who granted a charter to the Corporation of Trinity House. This was in May, 1514, and recently the [illegible] the corporation celebrated the 400th anniversary by holding a banquet in London.

The Corporation of Trinity House has been unfortunate in the matter of [illegible] establishment in Water Lane, [illegible] in the Great Fire.

The [illegible] but was again [illegible] in 1714, and [illegible] the outbreak was particularly [illegible] as most of the archives of the corporation were destroyed. As a result the history of its early days is [illegible]. It is generally believed that some kind of association of maritime men for the protection of the trade of the port of London existed long before the reign of Henry VIII., and the charter, granted in 1514, seems to recognize the value of such an organization and to aim at strengthening its position. [illegible]

RENTED SCENERY.

It Was a Parisian's Idea, and It Suited the Thrifty Peasants.

M. Georges Moreau one beautiful day, in the course of a walk at Villiers-Saint Benoist, greatly admired three magnificent oaks which towered from the edge of a field.

"You'll not see 'em much more, citizen," growled the owner of the land. "They make too much shade. I'm going to cut them down."

"What a sacrilege! Cut down those magnificent trees! Better rent them to me."

"What'll you do with them?"

"I shall look at them as I pass by. Will you give to me for 15 francs a year the right to admire them?"

"Agreed! It's only a Parisian who could have such a funny idea!"

The story spread abroad, and now whenever M. Moreau takes a walk in that district the peasants hail him with: "Hey, citizen, will you rent those trees there of me? If not I'll cut 'em down. Yes or no? One, two, three"—

M. Moreau yields and pays to save the lives of the trees that delight his view. The little birds would be ungrateful did they not salute with their most harmonious roulades the preserver of their nests.—Cri de Paris.

NEW TYPE OF LIFEBOAT

A demonstration has been given at the Surrey Commercial Dock, London, of a new type of lifeboat, propelled by the crew of the passengers without oars. The demonstration was a private one, Board of Trade officials being present and conducting the trials. The Times report says:

The new feature in the lifeboat is the use of a propeller, which is operated by a series of handles, which have merely to be worked backwards and forward by those sitting on the centre seats. The motion is that frequently seen in hand drills. A spirally threaded shaft is worked up and down through a fixed threaded nut, and the twisting motion of the propeller. There is absolutely no skill required, and in a rough sea there is no chance of unskilled oarsmen losing their oars or "catching crabs." The boat is the invention of Mr. Winser, and the mechanism tried on Saturday has been constructed under the supervision of Mr. Arthur Musker, M.I.M.E., M.I.C.E. The well known shipping firm of Furness, Withy & Co., have been conducting the experiments.

After loading the boat with its full capacity of thirty-nine people on Saturday and putting a crew of eight men at the pulling handles, a short cruise was made in the dock, and various manoeuvres were carried out. The boat attained a speed of between two and three knots, though this was much excelled when "all hands" were ordered to help. As much as six knots has been done with a lighter load in the boat.

A "crew" of women was also tried, and though the speed was not very great they were able to keep the boat well under control. It is possible to turn completely in about three boats' lengths, and by moving a lever the motion is changed to drive the boat astern.

Raw Sponges.

To persons who know sponges only as they appear ready for sale and use the animal as it comes from the sea would be unrecognizable. It is a solid looking, rather slimy, fleshy body, varying in color from light grayish yellow through a range of browns to black and in form it is cup shaped, sphæroidal or cake shaped, according to the species, its age or the environment in which it grew. In general, in appearance and consistency and the manner in which it cuts with a knife, a living sheep's wool sponge is not unlike a piece of beef liver perforated with holes and canals. The sponge of the markets is merely the skeleton, the supporting framework which gives strength and form to the soft, gelatinous tissue of the living animal.

Imaginary Whys of Celibacy.

Curious how when a man remains a bachelor people will speculate concerning his celibate state:

"Well, he has had an unfortunate affair some time or other. No man as attractive as he has gone this long without a tender memory to accompany him."

Of a woman:

"Funny she never married. Now, you'd think she'd be attractive to the men, wouldn't you?"—New York Sun.

The Lunch Basket.

For the child who takes its lunch to school there are interesting boxes and baskets. Some persons think that a lunch packed in a basket always tastes fresher. The current of air which the basket permits to circulate about the lunch removes any odor of closeness that might otherwise accumulate about the lunch, and so altogether the lunch is more appetizing in a basket than in a box. For these persons there are delightful baskets to be had. It is better to pay a little more and get a basket of substantial weave than to get a cheap basket which will fall apart soon.

Mary Blomfield

BOLDEST OF THE MILITANT SUFFRAGETTES

Miss Mary Blomfield is the young woman who threw herself on her knees before King George at a recent court and cried: "For God's sake, your Majesty, stop torturing women by forcible feeding." She is well connected, her father having been Sir Arthur Blomfield, a noted architect, and her grandfather a former Bishop of London. She is 26 years old.

RECIPES FOR THE HOUSEKEEPER

CANDIED PINEAPPLE.

Method—Pare and core thick slices of pineapple and leave in rings or cut into quarters. Boil one-half cupful of water with one cupful of sugar until well dissolved, then cook the pineapple in syrup until clear. Lay on waxed paper to dry after taking up. When quite dry place in tin box between waxed paper. A little lemon juice can be added to the syrup, and for pink pineapples add a few drops of fruit coloring.

There are three ways of preparing pineapples for canning, and they can be put up according to either of the formulas given in a previous article. If cut in rings or diced they can be used as sauce or made into fruit salad, but for shortcakes or cake filling, as well as for ices or pudding and sauce, the grated or ground pineapple is usually preferred and more economical, as a very little is often sufficient owing to the concentrated form.

TO CUT IN RINGS—Select very fine flavored fruit and cut into thin slices, then pare each slice and remove core with an apple corer; be sure to use glass jars with very wide necks so rings will slip in without breaking.

TO CUT IN DICE OR STRIPS—Cut in rather thick slices, then pare and remove core and cut in small cubes or strips.

TO GRATE—Prepare as above, but run through food chopper, being careful to catch the juice in a clean bowl and adding it to the grated fruit.

PROPORTIONS—Half as much sugar as water is usually used for the syrup in which to can the sliced or cut fruit, but if grated a liberal sugaring without the addition of water is best, as much juice is extracted by running through chopper.

VARIATIONS—If canning is done rather late sour cherries, one cupful to each jar, may be added if cut in cubes and will be found very nice as sauce.

PINEAPPLE SHORTCAKE.

Ingredients:—

Two cupfuls of sifted pastry flour.

Two teaspoonfuls of baking powder.

Three teaspoonfuls of sugar.

Two tablespoonfuls of butter or butterine.

One egg.

Three-quarters cupful of milk.

Two cupfuls of ground pineapple.

Sugar as needed.

Method—Sift all dry ingredients together, rub in the butter and add beaten egg to milk. Stir this into flour with a fork, mix lightly and spread in greased layer cake pan. Bake a good color. When cold split and place sugared pineapple between and on top. Dust well with powdered sugar and serve plain or with cream.

MOLDED RICE AND PINEAPPLE.

Ingredients:—

One-half cupful of washed rice.

Three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar.

One half pint of whipped cream.

One cupful of diced and sugared pineapple.

Large sugared strawberries are needed.

Method—Boil the rice in a large kettle of slightly salted water until each kernel is tender. Drain and let cold water run through, then shake out all the water and pack rice in a ring mold or mold around a cup on a flat dish. When cold and set unmolded, or if not in mold remove the cup. Fill this centre with the pineapple, dust the rice with the powder or sugar and run the whipped cream around edge dotting it with the whole berries in one or two rows.

Honest Sam.—Teacher—Did anybody help you with this map, Sam? Sam—No, sir. Mo brother did it all himself.

ORIGIN OF BANK CHECKS.

Dense London Fogs, It Is Said, Forced Their Introduction.

It is claimed that the business world owes the idea of the bank check to nothing else than London's fogs.

These fogs are sometimes of such a density that the pedestrian can see but a few feet ahead of him. Something over a hundred years ago, it is said, the attacks of thieves and highwaymen in the British capital upon bank messengers and tradesmen going through the streets to settle their bills became so frequent in times of heavy fog as seriously to interfere with the conduct of London's business.

It was easy for the thief to ambush his victim, club him into insensibility, rob him and then disappear into the murky atmosphere, with little likelihood of apprehension or identification or that passersby would witness the commission of the crime or be of any assistance in the chase.

In these circumstances bankers, tradesmen and others set their wits to working, with the result that the bank check was devised for the payment of debts. Soon the highwaymen found that a few pieces of paper were all the booty they were likely to get from a "holdup" of even a wealthy tradesman. Accordingly the activities of the daylight robbers soon came to an end, but the convenience of the bank check proved so great that it survived not only in London, but was adopted throughout the civilized world.—Washington Star.

HENS AND COWS

HOUSING IN HOT WEATHER.

The selection of the quarters that fowls are to occupy during the summer months requires the greatest care, since with the coming of the hot weather many matters call for immediate attention.

Chief among these is the question of overcrowding. This must be avoided at all times, but particularly in summer. There are many poultry yards in which large numbers of chickens have up to the present slept in coops and brooders, and they are now gathered together and crowded into a house that probably is only capable of comfortably holding half that number. No amount of ventilation can overcome this difficulty.

Open-fronted houses are now extensively used, and they certainly have many advantages, especially for summer use. When they are properly constructed they will hold many more inmates than will a house of the same dimensions which is built on the old lines.

There is nothing that hampers the growth of chickens and retards the progress of older birds to the same extent as that of breathing the impure air of an overcrowded house. If, therefore, health is to be maintained the sleeping quarters must be adequate in size for the number to be kept herein. Ventilation should be at the highest part of the house, so that the current of air is right above the heads of the inmates.

THE FLY IN THE DAIRY.

As an instance of the numbers of bacteria the common fly can carry, the following figures given by Professor Easton may be cited:—He caught 100 flies in a kitchen, put them in a pint of sterilized water and rinsed them about, and then examined the water, and found that he had raised such a number of bacteria off them that each fly averaged over 300,000. He next caught a similar number in the cow barn, and they averaged over 800,00 each, another 100 in the pig pen, and they averaged over 1,600,000 each.

It may be said that when one goes into a factory or house and finds many flies, one is immediately justified in condemning the sanitary surroundings of such premises. One can appreciate the fact that in factories where flies abound it is next to impossible to keep them out of the milk and the seeding of the milk by the bacteria which they carry must be very appreciable. The evil deeds of the fly need emphasizing, as too many of us seem to think the fly a necessary, if annoying nuisance; but truth, is, the fly serves no good purpose or serves a purpose which can be beter performed in other ways.

MILK FOR DAIRY CALF.

A series of tests was conducted by the Illinois Experiment Station to demonstrate the value of milk in calf raising and to ascertain the minimum amount of milk necessary to insure to the calves a satisfactory start in life. The first test was preliminary and indicated that during the first two weeks the calves must be fed a reasonable amount of milk containing about three per cent. butterfat (this to be gradually changed to skim-milk), the calves receiving practically al of their nourishment up to eight weeks from the milk. Following this, a grain supplement may be fed. In the second test, in which the average amount of milk used was 153 pounds of whole milk and 435 pounds of skim-milk, the calves made an average gain of 88 pounds during the first 70 days of their lives. During the third test more whole milk was fed, but it was found to be unnecessary. The cost of the milk fed each calf varied from $1.61 to $4.62, which is considered comparatively low.

HOUSE FOR LAYING HENS

A plan of a permanent laying house for poultry with brief description and an estimate of material required for the house as planned, is contained in pamphlet No. 5 of the poultry division of the live stock branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. This plan has been specially prepared for use in the province of Prince Edward Island by W. A. Brown and T. A. Benson; however, it includes a number of features, which in the opinion of the writers, could be advantageously adopted throughout the greater part of the Dominion of Canada. Copies of this pamphlet may be obtained free upon application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

KEEP EGGS TWO YEARS

One foreign firm in Shanghai use for their export egg trade a liquid preserve, which they state keeps the eggs perfectly fresh in the shell for a period of two years, and during that time are no different from newlaid eggs, says Gordon B. Johnson, Canadian Trade commissioner at Yokohama. They pack them in casks in a manner that renders breakages liability practically nil, and are carried in the head of any steamer as ordinary cargo, and by rail in freight cars. In other cases, on reaching Vancouver or other coast ports the eggs are forwarded to their destination by express. The freight rate from Shanghai to Vancouver is $3 (gold) per ton of 40 cubic feet, equivalent to 17½ cents, so that the rate per case is 45 cents.

"As China is the largest egg-producing country in the world," he continues, "and the business of exporting this product is only in its infancy, it is probably safe to assert that the next few years will see a great development in this business with North America."

POINTS IN CALF-REARING

Mr. Sandeman, a well-known English Aberdeen-Angus breeder, has recently (says the "Newcastle Journal") given some valuable points on calf-rearing. Though an advocate of suckling or whole milk breeding for a time, he attaches considerable importance to oats as soon as the calf is able to eat. Contrary to the usual practice of crushing, these are fed whole, with bran, for the first three or four months. They are then replaced by crushed oats. Mr. Sandeman's experience indicates that young calves digest oats more easily whole than crushed. Whole oats he also finds useful in preventing scour.

His calves have constant access to rock salts and lumps of soft chalk, both of which they lick freely. To the latter is attached the virtue of correcting excessive acidity of the stomach. Briefly, Mr. Sandeman's method is to leave the calf in a box with the cow for the first ten days. The cow is then taken away, and is brought to the calf, or the calf taken to her, three times a day for a further ten days. At the end of this period the calf is suckled twice a day till the two go out to pasture together, when the cow is in calf again.

When the calves are separated from the cows several are put together in a box bedded with oat straw. A bundle of good hay is tied up within reach, a box containing rock salt and chalk is provided, and another with whole oats and bran. After the calves have sucked they are tied up round the box with an ordinary dog collar and chain for an hour or so. The tying up prevents sucking each other and breaks the calves in to the halter at a later period. Mr. Sandeman emphasizes the importance of a good supply of whole milk during the first month. A large number of well-started calves, he finds, can subsequently be reared by one good milking cow.

LIVE STOCK IN THE WEST.

Two years ago the west had a great grain harvest, but because of the unfavorable weather during the early fall much of the grain was found to be in a damaged condition, said J. T. Gordon, of the Winnipeg firm of Gordon, Ironsides & Fares, pork packers and cattle dealers. The result was that a great deal of it had to be disposed of at prices much under those estimated. The farmers saw that it would have been more profitable to feed the grain to animals, and there was a distinct movement toward acquiring stock.

This season that movement begins to show results. Already from thirty to thirty-five thousand hogs are being marketed weekly in the three Prairie provinces. These hogs for the portion of 1914 already expired has been worth to the farmers almost nine million dollars, and there is still room for much expansion. While the acquisition of cattle has been slower, Mr. Gordon is convinced that within a year or two there will be a very considerable export of cattle, and that the great barley crops of the west as well, as such portions of the wheat crop as may be under grade, will come out not in the form of grain but in the form of cattle and hogs.

Even in the matter of poultry, and dairy products, which the west formerly imported quite freely, Mr. Gordon is convinced that there will be in a very few years a considerable export movement. Already poultry and eggs are being shipped out, and the expansion in the direction of cheese and butter is most marked. The chief advantage that Mr. Gordon sees to the farmers of the plains is that they will have money in their pockets all the year round, instead of waiting long periods for the proceeds of the grain crop. This will make them much more independent of credit and greatly alter the normal business situation in the west.

THE STUDY OF WORDS.

It's a Helpful Scheme to Use Your Dictionary Every Day.

Writing an article, "Treasure In Books," in the Woman's Home Companion, Laura Spencer Portor gives the following excellent advice about the advantages to be gained from the study of words:

"The study of words—it may sound to you a dry thing, yet I promise you it is not; very far from it.

"And this brings me to suggest that the habit of one of the great writers of studying carefully from a good dictionary five words each day is one from which we might all of us get a good deal of profit. Or take a good book of synonyms, for instance, and learn from it each day five words somewhat similar, comparing and weighing carefully the meanings and values of them.

"Notice the degrees of force in the following: To dislike, to hate, to loathe, to detest, to abhor. Each note struck is a little stronger, higher, we might say, like an ascending crescendo scale. So to instruct, to teach, to educate, are each quite different in meaning, with a great nicety of difference. So, rebuke, reprimand, censure, blame, are all of one color, but of how different shades of meaning. So, too, misfortune, calamity, disaster; so, weak, feeble, decrepit, and what delicate difference between fame and renown or feminine and womanly and womanlike."

Wants Dog With Him.

Strongly attached to his faithful dog, Samuel Cornes, of Montreal, making his last will and testament provided that the dog should not long survive, if he were the first to be called.

He wrote, therefore, "I do hereby will that, at my death, my faithful dog, Dandy, be painlessly put to death and buried, and the sum of $5 be allowed for that purpose."

In his will, now entered for probate, Mr. Cornes also wrote: "I desire that my funeral shall be as plain as possible, consistent with economy. I do not consider it right for money to be buried."

Somerset House Famous.

A host of famous names are associated with Somerset House, where the London University hopes to settle down. Here, in 1652, died Inigo Jones, and here the body of Cromwell lay in state. Here, too, Mrs. Gunning, mother of the three famous beauties, was housekeeper, and during many reigns it was the residence of the Queen. During Queen Elizabeth's reign it had an occupant of another sort in one Cornelius de la Noye, who modestly undertook to "manufacture precious gems and transmute any metal into gold" in return for his lodging. And at one point in its life Somerset House all but became a religious headquarters, for after Cromwell's death it was up for sale, and the Quakers seriously considered the question of the purchase.—London Daily Chronicle.

To Suppress Opium.

The opium dens throughout India have been engaging the attention of the Government for some time, with the idea of undertaking legislation for their suppression. Originally, it was thought that it would be preferable to leave Provincial Governments to legislate for themselves, but from various quarters the necessity of an All-India Act has been pressed upon the attention of the Government of India and a circular letter has been issued inviting the opinions of Provincial Governments and Administrations upon this subject, i.e., the necessity of an All-India Act.

HALIFAX EDITOR'S ABILITY TO KEEP SECRET WON APPLAUSE

William R. McCurdy, Who Refused to Tell Name of Man Who Contributed Article to The Herald and Was Sent to Jail by Legislature, Believes Strongly in the Ethics of His Profession.

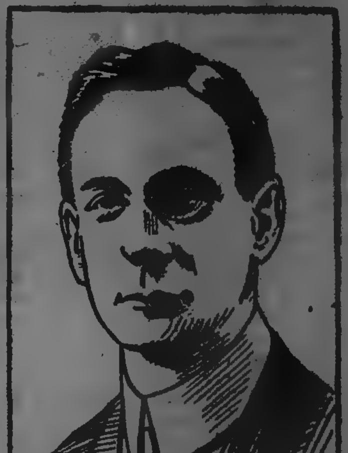
William R. McCurdy, news editor of The Halifax Herald, who was released from jail after serving his 48 hours' sentence imposed by the House of Assembly for refusing to give the name of an anonymous writer who attacked the House in connection with the Nova Scotia Tramways Bill, is one of the most popular journalists in the Maritime Provinces.

The band of the Royal Canadian Regiment serenaded McCurdy in front of the jail on the second afternoon of his incarceration, and thousands of citizens gathered and more than once broke into cheers.

Mayor Bligh, of Halifax, addressed the throng, stating that on McCurdy's behalf he expressed his appreciation of the honor done him, but that he realized it was because of the principle he stood for that the demonstration was made.

In explaining to the Legislature why he would not divulge the name, Mr. McCurdy said, in part:

"It would be a violation of the ethics of journalism and a grave breach of the time-honored traditions of the press the world over, were I to divulge the name of a correspondent received in confidence. My reputation as a journalist would suffer and my professional standing in newspaper work would be destroyed. I believe the relations between a professional journalist and the man who gives him information in confidence for publication should be just as binding and sacred as the relations which exist between a high-minded lawyer and his client, between a conscientious physician and his patient, or between a trusted confessor and the penitent."



WILLIAM R. M'CURDY.

McCurdy is a native of the Musquodoboit district of Halifax County, and has lived in the city since boyhood. At ten, he was a shop errand boy; at 12 he became a printing apprentice, and ultimately became foreman of The Chronicle. Then, about 24 years ago, he became a reporter for The Herald, and one of his earliest assignments was an interview with Prince (now King) George, then in the navy.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Hot Weather Fare.

In general, during the summer we should eat less meat, fat and sugar and starchy substances than in cold weather and partake more of fresh vegetables and fruit. Fruit and vegetables do not contain a large amount of nutriment, but they tend to increase bulk and contain salts which are refreshing and help to supply some of the requirements of the body.

At the same time, drinking in the summer is more a matter of habit than necessity, and if one makes a point of eating as much fruit and fresh vegetables as possible it will be found that the desire to drink in any large quantity will diminish, for the simple reason that the eatables mentioned supply, to a large extent, the liquid refreshment.

There is, however, one important point to bear in mind if one desires to be healthy and cool during the summer months, and that is to always eat and drink slowly and not to indulge too much in iced drinks. To swallow a glass of milk, lemonade or iced tea or coffee rapidly is, as a matter of fact, somewhat dangerous, although thirst at times makes one drink eagerly without thinking. Sip liquids if you would derive the greatest possible benefit from them, and if water or cooling lemonade is taken it should be at least one hour before and two hours after meals.

Cereal Bread For Children.

Cereal bread contains a maximum of nourishment and is an excellent food for growing children. By the omission of shortening the bread becomes more healthful, more easily digested and less expensive.

To make it, mix well one cupful whole oatmeal, one-half cupful barley flakes and one-half teaspoonful salt and stir into one quart boiling water. Cook briskly for two hours, rub through sieve and add sufficient water to make three cupfuls gruel; then add one pint milk and when lukewarm add one yeast cake dissolved in two tablespoonfuls warm water; add sufficient whole wheat flour to make soft dough; let stand until doubled in bulk, add enough more flour to make a medium stiff dough, pour into greased baking pans, let rise and bake in moderate oven forty minutes. When done it should be porous and slightly moist. This is best when one day old.

Burnt Food.

If fruit or vegetables have been burned or scorched while cooking take the stewpan and set in a pan of cold water (the colder the water the better). Remove the lid and leave the stewpan in the water about five minutes; then turn the contents into another saucepan. This prevents a burned taste or smell.

To prevent a thick cake from burning at the bottom—that is, a cake that must remain in the stove for an hour or two—sprinkle almost an inch of cornmeal over the bottom of the pan; then place a well buttered paper next to the batter.

Should a cake be burned on the outside through careless baking scrape the black parts very carefully and brush over with beaten white of egg; then dust with powdered sugar and put the cake back into the oven for five minutes, when all signs of burning will have disappeared.

Use of Citron.

Citron when properly used and prepared is so delicious that it should be introduced for a change more frequently.

Substitute citron in any recipe calling for dried fruit. For a plain cake or gingerbread add one cupful of minced citron slightly floured. Put a small cupful in the doughnut batter measured after dicing. In your lemon or vanilla icing put a little minced citron dusted with pulverized sugar, and sprinkle a little of it shaved on top of cake before icing is applied.

When the vanilla ice cream is partly frozen remove the lid, and for two quarts drop in one of the large pieces of citron previously put through the meat grinder, again cover and finish as usual.

Homemade Wedding Cake.

A bride's cake may be made at home as follows: Cream together three cupfuls of sugar and one scant cupful of butter, adding the sugar a little at a time. Add one cupful of milk. Sift thoroughly three cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one cupful of cornstarch. Beat very light the whites of twelve eggs. To the egg and sugar mixture add the sifted flour and, last of all, the beaten whites of the twelve eggs. Flavor to taste. Stir all together thoroughly. Pour into well buttered and floured tins. Bake slowly in a moderate oven.

Tomato Puree.

Canned tomato soup can masquerade as a delicious puree if it is mixed with half its bulk of cream or milk. Season highly and add the cream before the soup is heated, as it is less likely to curdle. For variety barley or cut up spaghetti can be added.

Lining Cake Tins.

Keep the inside paper in which the butter comes for lining cake tins. This plan saves both trouble and expense.

Descendant of Diving Bell.

Our modern submarine is the direct descendant of the diving-bell which had proved that air could be supplied for breathing purposes under water. England can claim priority in this kind of adventure, although the first submarine boat on record was the invention of a Dutchman. Oddly enough, however, she was propelled by oars. By command of James I. the trial trip of this grandparent of submarines was made on the Thames. The chief secret of the inventor, Drebell, was described thus: "The composition of a liquid that would speedily restore to the troubled air such a proportion of vital parts as would make it again for a good while fit for respiration." The secret was never disclosed. Plymouth Sound, near which A7 has just gone down, was the scene of the earliest submarine disaster; for here it was that in 1774 a too sanguine experimenter named Day made a descent in a vessel of 50 tons—and never came up again.—London Daily Chronicle.

THE WISE SHOPPER.

She Buys With an Eye to the Ever Changing Fashions.

Don't affect Watteau hats unless you are young, slender and at least moderately pretty. The Watteau hat, with its turned up back, its flowers and its chin ribbon, is meant only for the young and pretty woman.

Just because stripes and plaids are fashionable don't use them if they are not becoming. Some faces and many figures suffer when they are surrounded with plaids and stripes. Many plain, soft fabrics or fabrics possessing any of the attributes you are seeking can still be had by the hundred yards together in all the shops.

Styles are changing rapidly. We would do well if we wish to keep in the fashion only to buy such clothes as we really need and to wear those until they are worn out. Then we can with clear consciences buy something new and up to date when styles have settled down into some definite trend or when some still newer, changing styles have shown themselves.

A black hat is more satisfactory for the woman with few hats than one made of plaid or striped taffeta. A black hat can be becomingly worn with frocks of every color. And, more than that, a black hat is not remembered by every one who sees it as a bright hat is likely to be remembered. A third point in its favor has the black hat. It is more generally becoming than a colored one.

Don't wear a color just because you have noticed that it is often used in descriptions of the clothes shown in the French openings. Tango, for instance, is a somewhat trying color to many complexions. So are some of the odd blue and green shades. Remember that black and white and dark blue are always capable of being made to look fashionable and that they are becoming to most persons.

THE KISS STEALER

He Was Very Adroit in His Thefts.

By F. A. MITCHEL

The railroad, like everything else, is a development. The first rails were strap iron on wooden beams. The first car was a stagecoach, then several stagecoaches together mounted on wheels. Then came the passenger car of the present day, only much smaller. When these cars were pulled through a tunnel the passengers were left in total darkness. Indeed, the lighting of railway cars passing through tunnels is a feature of recent years.

When Tom Arnold was about to return to college for his sophomore year he was asked if he would escort a little girl who was going in the same direction to boarding school. Tom didn't like being burdened with the care of a "little girl," but he couldn't very well decline. When he saw his charge he didn't mind taking care of her so much as he had thought he would. Lucy Atwood was fourteen years old, but tall enough for a girl of sixteen. She was very demure and appeared to be utterly devoid of conversational powers. Her protector, having reached the advanced age (to her) of eighteen, probably filled her with such awe as to prevent conversation with him.

But if Miss Atwood was tongue tied she was very pretty. There is nothing more delicate, to a young man especially, than a pair of pink coral lips. Lucy's complexion was as soft and downy as a peach, and her lips were a combination of beautiful curves. Tom couldn't keep his eyes off them. He was young and a sophomore in college, a combination that can occur but once in a man's life. His thoughts, his arguments, therefore were sophomoric:

"I have been burdened with the care of a tongue tied kid without recompense. It behooves me to look out for my own reward. I don't know any payment that would suit me better than just one kiss of those lips. In half an hour we'll get to the tunnel. It requires three minutes for a train to go through it, and one can do a great deal in three minutes."

This was the basis of a plan Tom formed. Before reaching the tunnel he would go into another car, first noting the exact position of his charge. As soon as the train plunged into darkness he would re-enter, make his way to where Lucy sat, take the kiss and retire. Some time after the train had emerged into the light he would go back to his seat, yawn, take up a newspaper and begin to read as if unconscious of anything eventful having happened.

It was a very pretty scheme, but more tempting to a youngster of eighteen than to a full fledged man. There was one thing about it, however, that Tom didn't like. The kid had been placed in his care, and he didn't consider it quite honorable to avail himself of the situation to take what didn't belong to him. But the more criminal the act, the more horror attached to being found out, the more attractive the scheme.

Tom sat looking sideways at those lips, before which every vestige of honor faded. Nevertheless as the train approached the tunnel his courage began to fail him. What an awful thing for him to do! But how nice! Suppose the girl should scream and some one should grab him! The very thought gave him the shivers. But he was at an age when the greater the risk the greater the temptation. He fell, and great was the fall thereof.

He had often been through the tunnel and knew the approaches well. Some ten minutes before the train reached it he told his charge that he would go into the smoking car for a while if she didn't mind sitting alone. She said she didn't, and Tom, having noted that the seat was the third one from the door on the right, left the car. He didn't smoke, fearing that the odor of tobacco would give him away. He sat looking out through a window, a prey to numerous emotions.

When the train entered the tunnel, summoning all his resolution, he hurried into the car he had left and counted the seats on the right by putting a hand on each till he came to the seat required. Folding Lucy in his arms, he took the desired kiss. There was a smothered cry, followed in a few moments by the sound of an opening and closing door, then no other than the rattling of the train.

When daylight came again several passengers who sat near Lucy looked in her direction for an explanation of the cry they had heard. She gave no indication of anything unusual. She was wiping the dust from her face with her handkerchief. She would remove a portion of it, look at the smudge it had made on her handkerchief, then rub off some more, scrutinizing it also, especially in one corner.

Some twenty minutes after the train had left the tunnel Tom Arnold came back and sat down beside his charge. Had Lucy looked him in the face she would surely have seen signs of guilt which, despite his efforts, he was unable to conceal, but she was looking out through the window and did not give him a glance.

Tom was delighted with the success of his scheme. It was not the kiss that pleased him, for to have enjoyed that he should have been intent upon it rather than on committing a robbery. It was the fact that he had carried out his scheme without having been detected. He wondered that Lucy made no mention of the stolen kiss, but a very young and delicate miss might feel abashed at communicating such a thing to a young man.

When the journey was ended and Tom left his charge at the door of her school he looked scrutinizingly into her eyes to see if he could detect any evidence of her suspecting him. She returned his gaze with a childlike simplicity that reassured him, and he left her feeling very comfortable.

* * * * * * *

One June morning, when the trees, the flowers and especially the roses were in bloom, a young man who had been invited to spend a week end at the country place of a friend sauntered out on the veranda in negligee summer costume, plucked a rose, sniffed it, put it in the buttonhole of his flannel coat, descended the steps and strolled about the grounds. Having examined the tennis court, the stables and other features of the place, he sauntered toward a hedge, which was just the height to enable him to look over it. In the adjoining grounds was a pagoda, in the pagoda a hammock and in the hammock a feminine figure. But whether the lady was old, middle aged or young he could not see. He thought he would like to satisfy himself on this point. Walking back and forth along the hedge, he looked for an opening. At length, finding a place where the hedge was thinner than at others and stooping, he wormed his way through, though when he reached the other side his costume was somewhat disarranged.

Brushing off the dirt and straightening the hang of his clothing, he sauntered toward the pagoda. There was no movement of the figure in the hammock, and, the morning being warm, he fancied the occupant might be asleep. He had no business in the grounds, but he was a venturesome fellow, with no end of resource and assurance, and had an excuse ready in case he met any one. Drawing gradually nearer to the pagoda, he finally reached a point near enough for him to see a lady asleep in the hammock.

She was young—about twenty—and fair to look upon. She seemed to be sleeping so soundly that the young man drew nearer, even to the steps of the pagoda. There was something in the face of the sleeper that seemed familiar to him. He thought that he had seen her before, then that he had not, vibrating between these two opinions, at last deciding that he had not. One feature especially charmed him—the lady had a very kissable mouth.

For a young man to stand looking at a young lady asleep with a kissable mouth is dangerous—not so dangerous to the young lady as the young man, for there is certainly no harm in one being kissed who doesn't know of the fact. But the young man taking that which does not belong to him is liable to the consequences of his rash act. Then suppose the lady is awakened by the process! Such a contingency would naturally strike terror into any sensitive man.

The watcher drew nearer and nearer on tiptoe till he reached the hammock, then, bending over the sleeper, in one of the alternate risings and bendings finally lightly touched the lips with his. The sleeper slumbered on. Not a muscle twitched. The young man was tempted to take another, but suddenly the abyss on which he stood occurred to him, and, turning, he tiptoed away to the opening of the hedge and passed through. Then he began to wonder at the recklessness, the folly, the awfulness of what he had done.

When he untied his scarf at dressing for dinner that same evening he missed a stickpin surmounted with a horseshoe that he had worn during the day. He wondered how and where he had lost it. Then he remembered working his way through the hedge. He must have dropped it there. He was tempted to go out and look for it, but he had barely time to dress for dinner, so he must needs put off the search till morning.

When he went down to dinner whom should he see but the girl he had kissed in the hammock. He was seized with a terrible fright, but on being presented to her she gave no evidence whatever of having seen, met or heard of him before. He was assigned to her for a dinner companion, and by the time they were seated at table he had regained enough of his equanimity to remark that it had been a very hot day, that he hoped it would be cooler tomorrow and that he feared the summer would be an oppressive one.

However, the lady made it easy for him by being agreeable, and he gradually forgot that if she knew how he had robbed her she would despise him. After dinner the company strolled out on to the veranda and spent the evening under the moonlight amid the fragrance of roses. The thief of the kiss quite recovered from any qualms of conscience and was glad he had done it, especially since the girl had not awakened.

On Monday the young man took an early train to the city. When the postman arrived during the afternoon he brought a small package addressed to Thomas Arnold, Esq. Opening it, the recipient took out a handkerchief, in one corner of which were his initials and a stickpin with a horseshoe mounting.

Arnold sank down in a chair, with a moan.

He saw it all. When he had kissed the girl in the tunnel she had snatched his handkerchief from his pocket. She had since grown to be a young lady, and after he had kissed her a second time she had found his stickpin under the hedge.

"COURTING."

In grandma's day love's tale was told
  While lights were burning low.
 Now, out upon the fashion old,
  Designed when girls were slow!
Today the suitor takes the girl
  Into a cabaret,
And in the dizzy tango's whirl
  He pops to her this way:
"Say, kid, at dancing you're a scream,
  A whirl! 'This is the life!'
You're dolled up, kiddo, like a dream.
  Now, get me—be my wife!"
"You win!" she yells. (She had to, be;
  'Tis in a cabaret!)
Give me the love lights, burning low,
  Of dear old grandma's day!

Advantage of Early Training.

A Chicago business man is the father of a youth of a most literal tendency. Last spring, when the father left for Europe, where he was to spend the entire summer, he promised the lad that, if he were to attain a certain mark in his studies, his reward would be a continental trip with his father.

The prospect of such a trip stimulated the lad to such a degree that he attained a mark even higher than that set him by his parent. He cabled his father the one word, "Yes."

It would seem, however, that the pater had forgotten his offer, for, after thinking over the message, he cabled back, "Yes, what?"

Then, in turn, the son was perplexed. Finally after due reflection he cabled to his father, "Yes, sir."—Detroit Free Press.

Wigwagging.

Each of the ladies wore a brilliant wig. Strange to say, no two were alike in hue.

"Let's accomplish something worth while," said the lady who preferred green.

"But what can we accomplish?" asked the lady in blue.

"Women can accomplish anything if they put their heads together."

So they put their heads together and accomplished a rainbow.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

On the Road.

A man spent three days among the heavily upholstered restaurants looking, and in vain, for a native New Yorker.

"Where are the native New Yorkers?" he asked of me.

"Many of them are away traveling," I answered cheerily, "for firms managed by the adopted New Yorkers."—Puck.

Divided Opinion.

"Are you really going to marry Harold?"

"I don't know what to say. All the girls in my class read his letters."

"Well?"

"Eighteen of them think him a dear, and nineteen say he's a dub."—Washington Herald.

By Contrast.

"He is pretty bald."

"Bald? He makes a billiard ball look as if it had a full beard."—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Captious Critic.

"Here, waiter, what does this mean? I ordered veal potpie and I find several chunks of chicken meat in it."

"I can't understand it, sir. But why do you complain? Would you kick if you bought a copper mine and found gold in it?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Self Preservation.

Old Roxleigh—Marry my daughter? Why, you are supported by your father.

Suitor—Yes, sir; but my guv'nor is tired of supporting me, he says, and I thought I'd get into another family.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Tactless Menu.

"What was the business of your friend you brought home to dinner, my dear?"

"He is a Wall street man."

"And we gave him lamb to eat. No wonder he looked so sheepish."—Baltimore American.

Worth the Trouble.

Clara—Isn't it perfectly lovely—this higher education of women?

Dora—Why?

Clara—The paper says 80 per cent of college graduates get married.—New York Weekly.

How Sweet of Her.

"It is Carlyle, I believe, who says it is not well to tell all one knows."

"Oh, never mind Carlyle! You don't want to sit around and never say anything, do you?"—Judge.

Marital Sarcasm.

"Do you know where I could get a good collection of fairy tales?"

"Sure I do. Just apply to my husband."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE CLOTHES CLOSET.

Method of Keeping Garments Nice and Economizing Space.

The usual method of preparing a closet for the proper keeping of wearing apparel is to place a row of hooks along the back and ends, with possibly a long rod extending from one end to the other, from which hangers may be suspended.

As we all know, this means that garments that hang in the rear are not very easy to get at. Only those on the rod are in evidence. For the others we grope blindly, grasping a skirt to discover whether it is the blue serge, the gray voile or the white mohair we want. And as for the things suspended on the hooks behind, they might as well be in trunks and boxes as far as distinguishing one from the other goes.

Now some clever woman has found that by fixing a swinging rack—very much on the order of the towel rack, a dozen arms extending friendly ends out for holding garments—the capacity as well as the convenience is trebled. These arms are made of light wood, so they can be doubled, with light clamps on the outer ends that slip in a groove, holding fast anything placed between. In this way half a dozen pairs of trousers or the same number of skirts, hung by folded belts, may be nicely and neatly kept in order on one rack, and if there are two, one at either end of the closet or one with longer arms directly in the center at the back, it will be such a comfort to find double the amount of room with garments all visible without extra light of any sort.

SHOE POLISHER.

Homemade Article That Will Keep the Boots Spic and Span.

It is not always convenient to carry a box of polish in one's traveling bag, but a "strip polisher," which can neither upset nor smudge the contents of one's bag, answers the purpose quite as well for a short journey. In fact, it's not a bad thing to have tucked in the corner of one's bedroom shoe box at home.

To make the polisher take a strip of velvet or plush about four inches wide and eighteen inches long and attach to the ends two little sticks, round or square, about a half inch thick. The sticks should be given a coat of glue and then rolled into each end of the cloth sufficiently to cover the wood with the material.

This is to keep the sticks from slipping out of the open ends.

Then sew the sticks in tightly to keep them from being pulled out when the polisher is being used. Have the shoes polished before leaving home, and for several days one can bring them to a bright polish by simply rubbing the polisher back and forth over them. For polishing the backs and heels, place the strip back of the shoe and rub it briskly back and forth by pulling first one handle and then the other toward you—just as the shoeblack does. The right side of the velvet or plush should always, of course, be next the shoe.

CUCUMBER SANDWICHES.

Take one cupful of cream, whipped stiff; one small cucumber, cut very fine; three teaspoonfuls of powdered gelatin, salt to taste, also paprika to taste, five tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Soak the gelatin in as little cold water as possible and dilute in as little hot water as possible. Mix together and set on ice to cool. Then spread on thin slices of bread.

BOWSER'S DIARY

Mrs. Bowser's Irony is Lost Upon Our Hero.

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

MR. BOWSER threw away the stub of his cigar.

He scowled at the cat.

He got up and walked back and forth.

He looked out of the window into the back yard.

Then he seemed about to address Mrs. Bowser, but didn't carry out the gigantic enterprise.

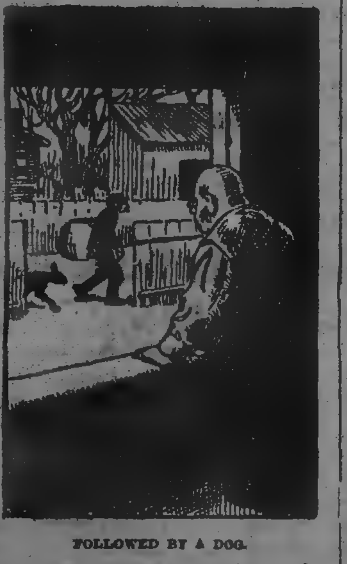
She sat reading, and, of course, she realized that he wanted to be asked why he was acting like an old hen that wanted to find a spot to lay an egg, but she was in no hurry. It was not until he produced a memoranda book and began writing on its pages that she carelessly observed:

"You seem to have got a new idea. What is it you have been writing in that book for the last three nights?"

"Perhaps I can make you understand," he replied after the lapse of two or three minutes. "Can you remember what happened to you at 10 o'clock in the forenoon day before yesterday?"

"Nothing happened."

"That is, the house didn't catch fire or any one attempt to murder you, but nevertheless things may have happened to send a man to state prison or clear him of a grave charge. The gravest cases sometimes turn upon the merest trifles. The life of a man in St. Louis was saved the other day because a woman remembered seeing him in an alley at a certain hour."



FOLLOWED BY A DOG.

"And so you are jotting down things to save human life?" she queried.

Possibilities of the Idea.

"It may be. At any rate, I have set out to jot down most of the happenings of each day, and no one can say what results may follow. History may be made of my memoranda."

"I think you are wasting time over it. If you have an hour to spare you had better work at that ingrowing toenail of yours."

"Heavens, woman, must you always lug sore heels, toenails and porous plasters into a conversation?" shouted Mr. Bowser as a red color showed in his face.

"But you are complaining of your toe," she protested.

"That may be, but don't mingle toes and brains. But for the diaries and memorandum books left behind by the people of the past where would our historians have secured their material?"

"And what have you jotted down thus far for the benefit of future history?"

"Nothing of much account, but I have been at work only three days. I think my jotting might help to unravel a few mysteries, however. I will read you what I have written.

"Wednesday.—Arose at the usual hour. Looked out of the window and saw a man passing along, followed by a dog. Man had a disreputable appearance and furtive look. Usual breakfast. Left the house at the usual hour. Saw a man on the street car with blue goggles on. He seemed anxious to escape observation. Wonder if there is any connection between him and the man with the dog?"

An Aggravating Interruption.

"I think there is," replied Mrs. Bowser. "I think the man with the dog watched outside while the goggle eyed man sneaked in and drove the dagger to the poor baby's heart!"

Mr. Bowser glared at her for a minute, and his hair could be heard curling, but with a powerful effort he held on to himself and continued:

"Thursday.—Arose as usual. Thermometer stood at 45 degrees above. Usual slipslop breakfast. Had scarcely left the house when I encountered the furtive looking man again. He had disguised himself, but I knew him at once. His dog was not following him."

"The poor animal had probably got tired out," said Mrs. Bowser, who wanted to get even for the "slipslop breakfast."

"Your case will be attended to later on, and I will now read the rest: Had scarcely taken the street car when I saw the man with the goggles. He was greatly perturbed, and it was evident that my presence upset him. I saw a wink pass between him and a man with a wart on his chin. Goggles left the car by the front door while I was [illegible] [illegible] who had stepped on my toes, but I did give the police his description. [illegible] home [illegible] [illegible]. Mrs. Bowser and the cat in the hall to welcome me."

"Is that all for Thursday?" asked Mrs. Bowser as he paused.

"Yes."

Omissions.

"Why didn't you add that you kicked the front door open when you arrived and that you told Mrs. Bowser you'd bring up in the poorhouse because you found a broken clothespin at the gate?"

"Woman, you are going too far, too far," shouted Mr. Bowser. "If I sat down here to read a chapter from the Bible you'd manage to turn it to ridicule. You seem to have less and less sense as time passes."

"I was just wondering what the future historian would find in your notes to make history on," she quietly replied.

"How can we tell that the man with the dog is not a red handed anarchist plotting against the life of the mayor? If so, my notes will convict him."

"I think he works in a livery stable down the street, and I have seen him and his dog a hundred times."

"But the man with the goggles? Suppose he is a seditionist?"

"Oh, the man with the goggles lives on the next block, and he got red pepper in his eyes two weeks ago. Our own doctor attended him. I can't exactly understand how you saw him wink at another man. Did one of the goggles wink?"

Impervious to Ridicule.

"None of your business. If you take comfort in being an idiot go ahead in it. I know the value of these notes and shall keep them up. For instance, when I came home this evening"—

"Well?" queried Mrs. Bowser as he waited.

—"a suspicious looking person was hanging over Brown's gate. He was short and squat. He was run down at the heels. Suppose Brown is murdered in his bed tonight and the house robbed? My notes will furnish a clew to the police, and within twenty-four hours the murderer is arrested."

Mrs. Bowser was convinced that the suspicious person was a man who had been beating carpets for the Browns all the afternoon, but she didn't say so and Mr. Bowser continued:

"Since we have been sitting here this evening I have heard and made notes of two fire alarms, one automobile call, a cry of seeming distress and the howling of a dog. They may not prove of value, and yet they may bring a criminal to justice."

"And you won't fix your toe this evening?" she asked as he walked around.

Adding Insult to Injury.

Mr. Bowser halted to bestow a look of contempt upon her, and then it occurred to him that he had an errand in the cellar. He was thinking of future history as he descended and presently turned head over heels, with a yell, and brought up on the cellar bottom. Mrs. Bowser hurried down to find him in a daze, and after she had felt of the bump on his head and ascertained that neither arm nor leg was broken she said:

"Friday Evening.—Have seen nothing of the man with the goggles or the man with the dog, but in descending my cellar stairs I engaged in a circus performance for the benefit of future historians. Was assisted upstairs by my wife, the cook and the cat. No change in the system of government on my account. Come, Mr. Bowser!"

He got up slowly and painfully, and, with many a sigh and leaning against the wall, he pointed his finger at her and tried to express himself in fitting language, but his outraged feelings could find no vent in words.

Sufficient.

Father—You say you want to marry this young man?

Daughter—Yes, father.

"But you've only met him twice, you say?"

"Yes, father."

"But you can't know anything about a young man by only meeting him twice."

"Oh, yes, I can, father. I know he tangoes beautifully."—Yonkers Statesman.

Hear, Hear.

Mr. Timkins—You ought to have seen our cat last night. He went out in the pantry in the dark and caught a mouse. Stood up on his hind legs and drove the mouse out from behind a baking soda can in one of the cupboards.

Mr. Buttenheim—Well, why don't you keep your mice in a more convenient place?—New York Post.

David Garrick and Spranger Barry were both playing Romeo at the same time in London. Barry played it at Drury Lane on the Monday, and Garrick played it the next night at Covent Garden, and so on, Mrs. Siddons played Juliet alternately with each of them. The town was divided as to which was the greater Romeo — in fact, there was quite a great excitement about it, as they acted it upon such different lines and with such marvelously different conceptions. So Mrs. Siddons was finally appealed to and asked which of the two Romeos she considered the better. She said:

"It is difficult to say. They are both wonderfully great, but I will tell you how they impress me in the balcony scene. In the balcony scene Garrick seems so eager, so intense and so full of fire and spirit that I'm afraid he'll jump up in the balcony to me, and Barry is so lovable and fascinating that I'm afraid I shall have to jump down from the balcony to him."

DIFFER ON FRESH AIR.

London Specialists Who Want Their Windows Shut.

Sir Robertson Nicol complains about the "detestable habit of open windows," by which he asserts that he catches cold. Despite the fact that many doctors preach the gospel of the open window, there is apparent dissonance between medical teaching and medical practice, says The London Standard.

At half-past eight o'clock one morning in Harley street there was scarce a window that let in the morning air. Later exploration at eleven o'clock and at noon of a warm, sultry day in the doctors' quarters—Harley street, Queen Anne street, Cavendish square, Wimpole street, and Devonshire street — corroborated the fact that, to outward appearance, doctors do not practice all they are believed to preach.

A physician gave the following explanation: "All up and down Harley street just now you observe the painters' ladders. I want the air, but unmixed with the odor of paint." This failed to account satisfactorily for the case, however. While the painters were busy about the house of Dr. Abercrombie, for instance, and the doctor's many windows were all sealed, the men of the brush were equally busy next door to Sir John Tweedy, yet most of his twelve windows let in the odorous air. Ladders were reared against Dr. Gordon Holmes' and Dr. Pegler's, but the windows there were open wide. Yet a tour of the district, where specialists' consulting rooms vastly outnumbered the paint pots, made it evident that eleven out of twelve of the West End medical practiced the plan of the closed window.

In Cavendish square but one half heartedly opened window let the noontide air into the house of Dr. Symes Thompson, son of the great pioneer of open-air treatment for tuberculosis. Sir Victor Horsley kept his closed, save one on the second floor, and seemingly of his mind were Sir D. Ferrier, the specialist in neurology; Dr. Sandwith, Dr. Elizabeth Patteson, Sir Arbuthnot Lane, the senior surgeon of Guy's; Dr. Dundas Grant, throat and ear specialist, and Sir Donald Ross, who has special experience of tropical medicine. There it appeared as though a six-inch opening was in deference to the wishes of a small bird that hung in a glided cage.

No. 7 Harley street, which has the plates of seven doctors on its door, had but two sparingly opened windows. On the other hand, those of Dr. Guthrie Rankin, physician to the Seamen's Hospital at Greenwich, all opened so widely that the curtains fluttered out into the zephyrs of the street, and Sir Anderson Critchett, surgeon in ordinary to the King, invited as much air as he could into every room. The practical evidence at the house of Dr. Lister, ex-president of Guy's, and an authority on consumption, was to the contrary purpose. At Dr. Wethered's, physician to the Brompton and Ventnor Hospitals, three windows out of twelve were opened a little way; but Dr. Pasteur's, senior physician to Middlesex Hospital, were opened wide. Sir Maurice Abbott-Anderson, surgeon to the Princess Royal, used the double window favored by Queen Victoria, so arranged that his first floor was aired between the panes.

But these and many open-air exceptions only proved the rule of the sealed house.

London's Homeless.

The annual census of homeless persons has just been taken by the London County Council. It shows that 2,881 persons on the night the count was made were without homes.

The numbers have declined since the original census was made, ten years ago, principally because of the new casual ward scheme, by which wanderers are questioned by the police and given tickets of admission to the casual wards. Those who, on the night of the census, were actually homeless in the streets or sleeping on staircases or beneath porches numbered 317 men, 112 women and 5 children. There were also 77 sitting in shelters, 29 in the King's tents, over 2,000 in free lodging houses and 335 in the casual wards.

"Drunk With Thy Beauty."

Charles Dickens once had an argument with a friend about Byron's expression, "Drunk with thy beauty," to which he made great objection. During the discussion the novelist gazed as if enraptured at his host's fair haired daughter, who was in the room. At last he sprang to his feet, struck a dramatic attitude, clasped his heart with his hands and stalked to the window, where he wrote on the white woodwork:

O maiden of the amber dropping hair,
  Would I, Byronically, thy praise might utter!
Drunk with thy beauty, would that I might dare
  To breathe out paeans, borne upon a shutter!

A Flinty Hearted Bishop.

An English clergyman once applied to his bishop for a living, saying that he would prefer an English benefice to one in Wales. Mr. P. H. Ditchfield tells the story in "The Old English County Squire." The bishop demanded the reason for this preference, and the chaplain replied:

"I should prefer an English living, since my wife does not speak Welsh."

"Your wife, sir! What has that got to do with it? She does not preach, does she?"

"No, my lord," replied the parson, "but she lectures."

The parson got his living, but it was in the wilds of Wales.

Her Way of Helping.

"Muriel says the poor are hard to help."

"How now?"

"She has been tramping around all day trying to give away two tickets to a cantata."

Putting wilted vegetables into ice-water will restore their freshness.

Aids to Winning

Study the picture carefully and consider how you may apply it to a person's name. The bust on the pedestal is that of a famous musical composer and the two musicians are his admirers. The conversation may give a clue to part of the name and the bust (or statue) may give the clue to another part of the name, although the last or surname will suffice.

The name of the player represented in the picture above is one of the following: Purtell, Pick, Oldham, Madden, Howley, Smith, Cunningham, Keller, Dooin, Couchman, Killifer, Shafer, Merkle, Wiltse, Otto Knabe, Tom Seaton, Archer, Hans Wagner, Whaling, Devlin, Dickson, Hyland, Rube Marquard, Bender, Groom, Rondeau, Doyle, Snodgrass, or Stock. WHICH? Study it out! Later on, we shall give no such clues, but we wish now to show you the way to proceed.

Keep your Answer Form in a safe place and await the picture in Tuesday's issue, which we intimate in advance will be that of a well-known Montreal player.

No knowledge of baseball, lacrosse, hockey or football is necessary. There is only one fully and logically correct answer to a picture. The Rules in adjoining columns state the simple conditions of the pleasurable Summer Pastime. Make a good start; and "keep at it."

RULES OF THE REVIEW'S SUMMER PASTIME

Read These and Keep Them Handy for References

A PLEASING GAME. The competition known as The Review Summer Pastime will be held through the columns of this newspaper beginning Monday, June 15th, and continuing for 75 days. In each issue of The Review there will be printed a rebus picture out of which the name of a baseball, hockey or football player can be made. The names are generally known throughout Canada, being published in newspapers frequently. A part of the names are Canadian and a part are from the important leagues of the United States.

HOW TO STUDY. See how a rebus picture will apply to any name you know. For example: MASON might be represented by a mason at work and WAGNER by a picture or statute of the famous musician. Only one name will logically fit any rebus picture when carefully analyzed. Although initials, first names or nicknames may be worked into rebus pictures as a guide to correct solving, it will suffice if surnames are written in Answer Form.

USE THE ANSWER FORM. Under each picture will be printed a numbered Summer Pastime Answer Form. On this the name of the player is to be written and when the series of Answer Form Coupons is completed, there will be 75 names. Only one name may be written on one Form. The contestant is to keep his or her Forms until the end of the series, then send to this office, the series of 75 with a separate list of the names written additionally on a form that will be printed in The Review after the last picture has appeared.

WINNERS. The person who sends in the set of 75 Answer Forms with largest number of correct names will be entitled to the first prize. If there should be a tie, then the prize will be evenly divided, unless there should be more than three participants tied for a prize, in which case those who have sent in sets of equal merit will be given a further opportunity to determine which shall win by solving a supplementary competition test. This rule will also apply to the lesser prizes. There will be no lottery or chance selection; all winners will be rewarded according to merit.

COMMITTEE. A Summer Pastime Committee of fair-minded persons of high standing, who have no personal interest in this establishment or in the Pastime, will be selected to ascertain the winners. The decision of the Committee shall be final and all who enter do so distinctly upon this understanding.

OPEN TO ALL. The Review's Summer Pastime is open to everybody—excepting employes of this newspaper establishment and their families—regardless of sex or age; and it makes no difference where a competitor lives, provided the package of Answer Forms is returned within the time allowed. There can be no favoritism of any kind.

HELP TO CONTESTANTS. As an aid to competitors who may not be familiar with the names of those who are associated with the games of baseball, lacrosse, hockey and football this year, a book has been published entitled "Summer Pastime Handbook" containing a selected list of about 2,500 players and including every one of the 75 names used in our Pastime. The book is so arranged as to present the easiest possible method of finding the desired names. The price of the handbook is 25 cents and is obtainable at the office of The Daily Review, 166-168 Hunter St., Peterborough, between 8 and 6 daily, or will be mailed on receipt of 26 cents in postage stamps. Additional to the information given in this book the purchaser will receive free, an extra supply of 75 Answer Forms which will have the same standing as those published in he Review. Any competitor who obtains this book is guaranteed that all the names illustrated by the rebus pictures can be found therein. Therefore it is possible to a mathematical certainty for a competitor to compile a correct list by due study.

COMBINATION. The Review's Summer Pastime, with its $150.00 in cash rewards, is being operated by The Peterborough Daily Review and in The Peterborough Weekly Review. Readers of The Daily Review who may wish to give distant friends the pleasure of participating in the Summer Pastime, as well as enjoying a wholesome weekly periodical of unusual interest, should call their attention to this opportunity, or better still, subscribe to the Weekly Review for a friend at $1.00 for a full year or 50 cents for six months.

GENERAL RULES. Answer Forms may be filled in with pencil, ink, or typewriter. Poor handwriting or trifling errors will not count against a participant. No sets of Answer Forms are to be sent in until called for in The Daily Review after the last rebus picture has appeared. The management reserves the right to make any modification in the rules that may be found necessary during the progress of the Summer Pastime, or until the Committee takes charge. One participant may send in as many separate sets of Answer Forms as desired but he or she will be allowed to win not over four prizes. All persons are treated as independent individuals; therefore two or more members of a family or household have the same rights as if they were strangers to each other.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED. Those who feel it necessary to ask any questions may write to Summer Pastime Department, The Review, Peterborough, and the letter will be placed with others to be answered in the columns of The Review from time to time.

Pleasant Reading.

People in the habit of noting their candid opinions in diaries should be careful when showing them to other people. Shirley Brooks records that "Delane, the editor of The London Times, Sir William Russell and Lord Hartington were in a railway carriage when some dispute arose about a date Russell affirmed that he knew, having made an entry in his diary. This was in his traveling case, and he produced it. He found the page, but not being able to read, his glasses having slipped into his trousers, he gave it to Delane to read, who read: "John Delane tells me such is the case. But, then, he is such a —— liar that one doesn't know!"

Newspaper Insurance.

Two London daily newspapers—The Mail and The Chronicle—are insuring their readers against rail accidents. The London Express figures that the odds against death from injury caused by accidents to trains are 80,000,000 to 1, while London Truth estimates the value to each subscriber is 6 cents a year.

Purpose of Knowledge.

All knowledge is that which ends in the knowing, for every truth we know is a candle given us to work by. Gain all the knowledge you can and then use it for the highest purpose. —John Ruskin.

Encouraging.

"This," said Mrs. Younglove, "is Mary's second attempt at making cake."

Mr. Witherspoon took a bite.

"After Mary has practiced awhile," he said, "she may become a fairly good cakemaker."—Chicago Record-Herald.

COMPENSATION FOR NEW YORK WORKMEN

New Law is Now Effective and Covers 1500 Occupations

New York, July 2. — The workmen's compensation law, which became effective on Wednesday, is expected to apply to employers in nearly 2,500 different occupations. These are included in forty-two groups, which comprise most kinds of manufacturing, milling, breweries, distilleries, bakeries, those engaged in printing and allied trades, painting, roofing, mining, smelting, plumbing, lumbering, handling vehicles of all sorts, stevedoring, running elevators and engines, electrical occupations, canning, packing, excavating, paving, bridge work, working on the trains and railways, and various minor employments. Public service interstate carriers amenable to federal acts are exempt.

The application to various employments is a matter of doubt that would have to be settled by the courts. Another puzzle was caused by the insertion in the bill, just before it was passed, of an amendment by Senator Foley making it reply to employees of the state, counties and municipalities. This apparently is negatived by another clause which confines the operations of the law to businesses "carried on by the employer for pecuniary gain."

The only specific exemptions apply to farm labor, domestic service and any employment not engaged in by the employer for pecuniary gain. Those who come under these classifications cannot avail themselves of the benefits of the law, no matter how hazardous any particular duty they may be called upon to perform.

The law is founded on the principle that an employer should take the same risk on his labor that he does on his machinery and buildings. All payments must be made through the state commission or those specially designated by it for that purpose. This is to prevent compromising claims. No matter who is to blame for the accident, payment must be made, unless it can be shown that the injuries are due to wilful self-infliction or to intoxication. It is made unlawful for employers to shirk their obligations by preliminary agreements.

Under the law it is allowable for large concerns to carry their own insurance under certain rigid restrictions. Otherwise, there are three methods of insuring—through the state fund, through mutual companies composed of at least 40 employers with a total of not less than 3,500 employees, and through stock casualty companies.

There is keen rivalry for the business. The stock companies claim that they are safest. They argue that the provisions allowing members of mutual companies to withdraw from a pool weakens their security, as some benefits extend over a period of many years. Also, they point out, an extraordinary catastrophe like the Triangle Shirt Waist disaster or the Binghampton fire would wipe out any ordinary mutual security. This argument is met by the mutuals by the assertion that every company would have to be bankrupt before the security failed and that the catastrophe risk is insured against the certain foreign companies.

Both these classes of private concerns reery the state fund on the ground that it can pay only to the limit of the fund provided for it and if that be exceeded it will be necessary to levy assessments on the insurer, thus putting a double burden upon them. This is denied by the manager of the state fund, F. Spencer Baldwin. While acknowledging that there is a weak point in the wording of the statute, Mr. Baldwin insists that the state has no auth-ments, and in the unlikely contingency of over-running its fund, the moral obligation would be such that ority to levy any additional assess-no legislators could fail to respond to it. Moreover, it is admitted that the state fund premiums are about 8 2-3 per cent. lower than that the private concerns are obliged to charge to meet overhead expenses. This pecuniary advantage will be permanent, as the minimum rate for private companies is fixed by the state insurance department. Premiums are to be paid semi-annually, and in the case of some of the larger corporations, will amount to more than $100,000 annually.

The Weekly Wage

The weekly wage is the basis for compensation. That is, an employee at $10 a week, who had been working only a month, would get compensation on the yearly basis of $250. There are specific compensations for the loss of different members of the body with a maximum total of $3500, and in such cases the weekly maximum is $20. If a minor is injured the presumption that he would have come into larger earnings is taken into consideration in fixing his compensation.

Death Benefits.

Death benefits are based on a maximum salary of $100 a month, and are limited to two-thirds of the actual wage.

Both the employer and employee or his representative is required to report an injury or death within a certain period. No injury benefits are due for the first two weeks after the accident.

When an injury is reported the commission is required to make an investigation. Should the injured employee refuse to submit to an examination by the commission's physician his claim is forfeited. The employer also may be represented by physicians. Findings of the commission are absolute as to facts, but the employer may appeal to the courts on all matters of law, and in the prosecution of claims the burden of proof is practically entirely upon the employer, whereas now it is upon the employee. Several penalties are attached to the failure of an employer to take out insurance.

Kidneys Wrong?—

If they are you are in danger. When through weakness or disease the kidneys fail to filter the impurities from the blood, trouble comes at once. BOTH SIGNED THE NOTE.

A Financial Formality That Puzzled Both Clay and Webster.

The men in official Washington seem to have less of a halo about them than in the good old days, when the towering form of Webster or Henry Clay would attract more attention on Pennsylvania avenue than a brass band or a tango dancer in 1914. In a bank the other day I saw a note indorsed jointly by Henry Clay and Daniel Webster. The story is told that Clay asked Webster to indorse a note with him for $500.

"All right," said the studious and thoughtful Webster, "I'll do so, Clay, if you'll make it $1,000 and give me half." Clay agreed to the compact, and the two set out for Banker Riggs, signed the note with due solemnity and secured the proceeds. As they swung across the threshold out again on the avenue and divided the money Webster in his ponderous voice remarked to Clay, "Henry, why do you suppose Mr. Riggs wanted our names on that note?"

"It baffles me, Daniel," responded Clay. "Perhaps he desired some memento to hand down to posterity, for I cannot at this moment conceive how it is going to be paid for the present generation."

The canceled note is today a valued souvenir, worth many times its face, because of the illustrious signers.—Joe Mitchell Chapple in National Magazine.

Twain's Rate.

Mark Twain went to just one automobile show in his life. He went with a Detroit friend. After he had been shown the cars and other sights the friend said: "Come on over here The greatest salesman in the automobile business is working, and I want you to hear him."

They went to a place where the salesman was talking to a possible customer about the merits of his car. He was rattling outward so fast that Twain gasped.

"Sakes alive," said Twain in his slowest drawl, "if my publishers ever heard me talk as fast as that man does they wouldn't pay me 30 cents a word or even 2 cents. They'd make me produce words about a hundred for a nickel."—Saturday Evening Post.

Scandal.

How is it that the evil which men say spreads so widely and lasts so long, while our good, kind words don't seem somehow to take root and bear blossom? Is it that in the stony hearts of mankind these pretty flowers can't find a place to grow? Certain it is that scandal is good brisk talk, whereas praise of one's neighbor is by no means lively-bearing. An acquaintance grilled, scored, deviled and served with mustard and cayenne pepper excites the appetite, whereas a slice of cold friend with currant jelly is but a sickly, unrelishing meat.—Thackeray.

AN UNEXPECTED BOOMERANG.

A Case In Which the Chickens Came Home to Roost.

Martin W. Littleton was talking at the Garden City Golf club about cross examination.

"I am a foe to harsh and overbearing cross examiners," he said, "and I wish they would all fare like Councilman Dash.

"Councilman Dash was the prosecutor in a case of alleged election fraud. His own election, a municipal one, had been all right, but in the recent state election he hoped to prove serious corruption.

"The councilman began to cross examine a voter named Washington White.

"'Wash,' he said, 'have you got any fixed income?'

"'What's that, sir?' Wash asked. 'I don't quite understand the question, sir.'

"'Have you got any fixed income?' said the councilman. 'That is to say, are there any set sums of money or appurtenances assured you on certain dates?'

"'Oh, yes, sir,' said Wash. 'Yes, there is, sir.'

"'Oho,' sneered the councilman, 'you have got a fixed income, then, have you? Well, tell us what it is.'

"'You know yourself, sir,' said Washington reproachfully, 'that every election day, just as sure as it comes around, you give me $2 and a ham.'"—Philadelphia Ledger.

An Outlet For Her Feelings.

The lovely young lady and her boresome escort were sitting in the drawing room. He had taken her to the theater and brought her safely home, which was really all that was required of him. But still he stayed and talked and couldn't seem to know what polite yawns signified.

Finally the young woman said:

"Mr. Rubbitin, would you mind closing that door? I feel a draft."

He tried and tried, but the door wouldn't latch.

"I fear it can't be done," he announced.

"Yes, it can, if you know how," said she. "You have to close it from the outside."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Incredible.

"I wouldn't have believed it of her."

"Neither would I. Jane is the last girl in the world I would have thought such a thing of."

"She doesn't seem like that sort of person."

"Indeed, she doesn't. I'd have taken my oath that she wouldn't do such a thing."

"Oh, you never can tell. I've known girls who have been to college to do worse things."

"Well, what did Jane do, anyway?"

"What did she do? She led a heart when Agnes was sitting there with a whole handful of clubs."—Detroit Free Press.

Wrong Diagnosis.

A man called upon a physician for advice. The physician diagnosed the case as one of nerves and prescribed accordingly. The fee was $5 and the prescription $2. The man had only $5. He said to the physician:

"Doc, $5 is all I have. Lend me $2 and I'll have the prescription filled."

The physician gazed at the man for a moment, then said: "I have made a mistake in my diagnosis. Your nerve is all right. You are afflicted with an enlarged gall. There is no remedy for that."—Judge.

She Might Do That Much.

"I wish," he said, "you would wear a green wig."

"But," she replied, "this red one is more becoming to me."

"I can't help that. My eyes are rather weak, and green is restful to them."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Impossible.

"There goes that Mrs. Gadabout. Do you know, I've heard that her poor husband is absolutely tied to her apron strings."

"Nonsense! I don't believe she's had an apron on since they've been married."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cutting Criticism.

Customer (who is being shaved)—Did you pass the civil service examination?

Barber—Yes, sir.

Customer—Well, you ought to get the appointment if there is anything in a pull.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

How It Happened.

Aunt Nancy—So you didn't forget your wife when you was down there in New York this trip, Eben?

Uncle Eben (her husband)—I couldn't, Nancy. Every durn girl I met kept rubbin' it into me about bein' a married man.—Puck.

Drawbacks.

"Father never really began to feel at home until we struck Italy."

"So?"

"Yes; in Venice everything was flooded, and in Pompeii the streets were all torn up."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Danger on Every Hand.

"Oh, see the sunbeams dancing on the waves!" said the poetic girl.

"Don't look!" exclaimed the severe woman. "How do we know they aren't dancing the tango or the turkey trot?"—Washington Star.

Foolish Question.

"Did that young man kiss you last night?"

"Mother, do you suppose that he came all the way up here just to hear me sing?"—Fun.

Good Form

Engagement Etiquette.

An engaged girl should write to her personal friends to tell them the news, while her mother writes to older relatives and friends.

Letters of congratulation in answer to these should be written as soon as possible.

Young girls do not write to their men friends to congratulate them on an engagement. They either congratulate them personally or not at all.

It is considered extremely bad form for engaged couples to be too demonstrative in public. They should try to be as natural and unaffected as possible, so as to avoid causing embarrassment to others.

The engagement ring should always be worn once it has been placed in position. It is useful as a friendly warning to any unwary and oversusceptible admirers.

Those who invite engaged couples to their houses should make a point of sending them down to dinner together and of doing all in their power to show that they recognize and approve of the engagement.

A girl may dance practically as often as she pleases with her fiance, although, of course, she will do well not to forget entirely all her old friends in this respect.

It is the girl's privilege to ask any friends she likes to act as her bridesmaids, but it is an understood thing that some relative of the bridegroom shall be among the number.

Friends of a bridegroom who are unacquainted with the bride's family send their wedding presents to him, and he forwards them to the bride's mother, so that they may be on view with the other presents on the wedding day.

Etiquette Notes.

If you return to live in a neighborhood again after a long absence call on all your friends without waiting for them to call on you first.

If you are inviting friends who have visitors staying with them to your house it is usual to include the visitors in the invitation except in the case of a dinner, when you need not necessarily do so. It is not necessary to call on them first, as they are only asked out of compliment to their hostess.

If at a dinner party there is one extra lady the hostess generally goes in by herself, following behind the last couple.

A hostess should always allow a visitor to enter the carriage before her when going for a drive.

When an engagement is announced write your congratulations or give them in person to the prospective bride and bridegroom as soon as possible.

When In a Street Car.

Upon entering a street car those who know how to behave will take a seat quietly, without trying to attract attention or in any manner making themselves conspicuous. Names should not be mentioned; gossip should be strictly avoided; a pleasant acknowledgment of small courtesies, such as a move to permit of passing and all those small things that in themselves seem of no importance, but in the aggregate speak loudly of the perfection of good breeding or the lack of it, as the case may be.

Inquisitive curiosity, talking over private affairs, making unpleasant remarks within hearing of those talked about—these all show the observer that politeness, which is etiquette, is unknown in that quarter.

Entering the Motor.

If a gentleman is his own chauffeur he may get in, offer his hand to the lady who accompanies him and help her into the car, wrapping her with the lap robe, etc., before taking his own seat. Different cases require different methods of meeting circumstances, and it is not well bred to haggle over such small things. Accept whatever is done without comment and be pleasant over any little mishap that may seem different.

After Dinner Coffee.

At a family meal the after dinner coffee may be served before leaving the table, but when guests are present it is customary to have the coffee passed on a tray after the ladies have returned to the drawing room. This is done, as a general rule, in most families. The coffee is in small cups, with coffee spoons laid on the saucers. A sugar bowl and tongs accompany the service.

Moderate Praise.

It is quite right to praise where praise is due. But don't overdo it, as the man did who, when praising a preacher for the blessings received through his ministrations, said, "Before you came to this place we cared for neither God nor the devil, but through listening to your splendid preaching we have learned to love them both."

Signing One's Name.

The prefix should not be signed with one's name unless the person to whom one writes does not know whether she be married or single. If the writer is married she should sign her Christian and surname and below her signature or in the lower left hand corner of the sheet write her husband's name, with the prefix "Mrs."

She Waited.

Mr. J. E. Vernham, organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in a letter to The London Mail on the subject of organists' records—he has played at over two hundred society weddings—observes that on one occasion it was remarked that the anthem was especially appropriate. Miss —— married Lord —— and had to wait ten minutes for his arrival. The anthem (on this occasion chosen by the bride) was "I waited for the Lord."

Worth Saving?

A bar of N.P. SOAP costs 15¢. It takes from four to five 5 cent cakes of other soaps to come near the same weight. That's a difference of at least 5¢. On a dollars worth of soap it amounts to from 25¢ to 40¢.

And N.P. SOAP is better soap.

Try it and see.

Uncovered by the Wind.

"In the year 1793," says an old chronicle, "the waters of the Rio de la Plata were forced in the month of April by a most violent current of wind to the distance of ten leagues, so that the neighboring plains were entirely inundated, and the bed of the stream was left dry. A number of ships which had been sunk in the river for upward of thirty years were uncovered and, among others, an English vessel which was cast away in 1762. Several persons repaired to the bed of the river, on which they could walk without wetting their feet, and returned laden with silver and other riches, which had been long buried under the water. The phenomenon obtained for three days, at the end of which the wind ceased, and the water returned with great violence to its native bed."

It's up to the man who would live long to live slowly.

JAMES COWIE MET TERRIBLE DEATH WHEN PASSENGER TRAIN CRASHED INTO RIG

Elmore Liddell, His Companion Landed on Engine and Escaped Serious Injury — Cowie Was Ground to Death Under the Wheels — Men Were Driving to Port Hope

Two men, James Cowie and Elmore Liddell, had their bonds of friendship cut off abruptly and in a very sad manner shortly after the noon hour yesterday, when a rig in which they were driving was mowed down by the G.T.R. train which left here about twelve o'clock for Port Hope, killing instantly Cowie and injuring Liddell to the extent of a fractured knee cap. The dead man resided with his mother-in-law, Mrs. Hagerman, on Dixon Lane, while Liddell, whose injuries were attended to at his home, is well known and lives at the corner of Wolfe and Aylmer Streets. Cowie originally came from Hiawatha, and had been employed at the Matthews-Blackwell Packing Company for some time. A widow and one child survive him.

The death of Cowie was both instantaneous and horrible. He was ground to a pulp under the big steel wheels of the train. Two engines, as the train was a double header, and numerous cars, help to crush out his life.

Liddell Was Fortunate.

Liddell's escape was a remarkable instance. When the crash occurred he was hurled into space, only to be caught as he fell by the boiler top and front piece of the engine. He was carried more than one hundred yards before the train was brought to a standstill. The train backed slowly up, funereal in motion, and it was then that the worst was known. Cowie's remains were scattered here and there. Even the more hard-hearted of the onlookers turned away.

The rig in which the two men were driving belonged to Arthur Kennedy, a local contractor. The buggy was practically demolished but the horse escaped without a scratch. It stood still and nibbled quietly on the grass, the road side had to offer. Between intervals it looked around as though it were aware of the fatality which had taken place.

A Bad Crossing.

The scene of the accident is just south of the Roman Catholic Cemetery. The crossing is a dangerous one and although no name has been to it "morgue crossing" might prove appropriate. Several people have met their deaths at the same spot and yesterday's accident is strong evidence in favor of E. A. Lancaster M.P.'s anti-level crossing fight.

On a Holiday.

Cowie and Liddell started out to enjoy the anniversary of confederation and stated they were going to Port Hope. Cowie had charge of the reins. The men headed for Port Hope and took the road which runs south across the Peterboro-Port Hope line. The train which is due to leave here at 11.40 was late and it was after the noon hour that it reached the crossing. Some persons who were near the scene of the accident claim that the horse balked when near the tracks and then lurched forward. Cowie was on the west side of the seat which was the side farthest away from the approaching train. A high embankment obstructs the view from the road at the point. The collision occurred and Liddell who was nearest the engines was bumped against Cowie, hurled into the air, to alight on the front of the first engine while Cowie fell among the debris of the buggy and was ground to a pulp. When found the lower part of his body was on the southerly side of the track and the upper part of his body in the middle of the tracks some distance from the upper part of his body. His head was badly cut which leads the officials to believe that he was struck by the fender bumper and hurled some distance before the wheels passed over him. Portions of the rig were strewn for fifty yards along the side of the tracks. Liddell was removed from the engine and taken to his home. Traffic was blocked for some time as an incoming train from Port Hope had to wait until the outgoing reached a siding below the scene of the accident. Comstock took charge of Cowie's remains and also brought Liddell to the city.

The Inquest.

Dr. Greer was summoned as soon as the news of the fatality reached the city and he immediately called Acting Chief Newhall and Detective Meagher to assist him. The police officers did admirable work in securing witnesses and rounding up a jury. The jurors met last evening at Comstock's Undertaking Parlors to which place the remains had been conveyed and adjourned until Friday night when the inquest will be continued in the police court chamber. Acting Crown Attorney Wearing and a G.T.R. representative attended the opening period of the inquest. The jurors follow: John White, Adelard Guerin, Robert Begley, Wm. Irvine, Andrew Forrest, Dennis Corkary, Thomas McCabe, David Morrow, Thos. Halyman, W. J. Outram, J. C. Masterson, and Jos. Metheral.

The Hand of Fate.

A brother of Liddell met death some time ago at the C.P.R. station, when he endeavored to board a special train carrying the Queen's Own from Toronto.

A Pitiful Situation.

It is another terrible blow to Mrs. Cowie. Only a comparatively short time ago, two of her children were taken from her, both having died from diphtheria. The stricken mother made a brave attempt to bear up under her sorrow but it was plain to her friends that she was suffering greatly. A few days ago, Mrs. Cowie went to Port Hope to visit relatives, with the hope that a change of scenes and faces will help her to try and forget, and assist in benefitting her health. She returned from Port Hope yesterday afternoon, after having been informed that her husband had been killed, and her condition today is more serious and her condition pitiable.

Liddell's Statement.

Liddell when seen by a Review reporter, was was on the train, was unable to give an explanation as to how the accident happened. All he could say was that the train struck the buggy, at the crossing. Both he and Cowie landed on the engine but Cowie fell off.

It was stated by passengers that they did not hear the engine whistle for the crossing. The engineer, Thos, Lamb of Toronto would not make any statement. Conductor Thos. McCarthy, also of Toronto was in charge of the train.

The funeral of the late James Cowie will take place Saturday afternoon from the residence of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Hagerman, Dixon Lane and Victoria Avenue, at 2 o'clock. Interment will be made at Little Lake Cemetery.

Conservatives Compliment Him on His Good Fight

A large deputation of influential Conservatives waited upon Mr. R. J. They complimented him on the clean, plucky fight he put up against heavy odds, and stated that they were satisfied it was the unanimous wish of the party that he should lead them again. Mr. Soden thanked them for their consideration and kindness, and promised to give the matter his careful thought and give them a reply at a later date.

ROBERT DOBBIN INJURED AT BARN RAISING

The barn raising at the farm of H. Snowden in Smith, on Tuesday was marred by a very serious accident that may prove fatal. The victim of the accident is Robert Dobbin, the well known councillor of North Monaghan. The men were endeavoring to place a cross beam and having the tenon on one end partially into the mortise of an upright post they proceeded to lift up the other end. The tenon slipped out with the result that the huge timber fell to the ground. Mr. Dobbin was working on a cross beam some fifteen of eighteen feet from the floor and when the timber fell it knocked out the support of the beam upon which he stood and he fell. It was immediately known that he was seriously injured and medical aid was called. He was found to be suffering from a fracture of the left arm, a fracture of the shoulder blade and badly bruised about the face. Yesterday he was removed to Nicholls Hospital where he is now in a critical condition.

The Review learned today that the demand is exceeding the supply.

AVIATOR FELL AT PORT HOPE

Capt. Baldwin Was Lucky to Escape With His Life

A Review reporter saw aviator Captain Baldwin of New York, fall fully two hundred feet with his aeroplane at Port Hope, yesterday, sustaining several bad gashes about the head and severe internal injuries. Baldwin made his first flight with safety and in his attempt at the second flight he had considerable difficulty with his engines which were in bad shape owing to the heavy rain. When up about three hundred feet, the engines stopped and the machine toppled to the earth, some two hundred yards from the Exhibition Park. Baldwin was removed to the Port Hope General Hospital. The machine was badly damaged.

ALL MUST TESTIFY

Anybody Doing Business with Province, Liable Says Judge

FREDERICTON, N.B., July 2.—Judge McKeown made an important ruling Tuesday during the inquiry into the cost of the St. John Valley Railway Co. and the charges against Premier Flemming.

The occasion came somewhat unexpectedly to all concerned in the enquiry. Hermann Corbett, a member of the firm of James H. Corbett & Son, contractors upon the Valley Railway, was about closing his testimony when Mr. Carvell asked him where his father was. One question after another in rapid succession concerning the man whom Mr. Dugal charged with having paid Premier Flemming $10,000 in order to obtain his contract on the railway, aroused the objections of the Premier's counsel.

In the course of the discussion, Chairman McKeown laid down the broad principle that any person who was doing business with the province of New Brunswick should appear and give evidence if he was required to do so.

Commissioner Fisher took an equally firm stand that the public interest demanded that the facts should be got at.

SETTLEMENT OF HOME RULE QUESTION SEEMS NEARER

Lord Lansdowne, in Speech on Bill in Upper House, Says Exclusion Bill Has Few Friends and Statement is Looked on as Significant—Amendments Likely During Committee Stage.

LONDON, July 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—"I doubt extremely whether the policy of exclusion on its merits has any real friends." This sentence towards the close of the Marquis of Lansdowne's speech in the Lords' debate is regarded by to-day's papers as significant. The Daily News, one of the principal Liberal organs, says it encourages hope that something deserving the title of settlement will be achieved. The Morning Post fully agrees with Lansdowne, owing to the futility of exclusion, but is still convinced that no amendments could ever make the bill acceptable to the Unionists, and declares their first duty will be to strike it off the statute book.

Lansdowne's speech was subsequently keenly discussed by members of both Houses, says The Standard's lobby correspondent. Although Lord Morley on behalf of the Government gave little hope of peace, Lansdowne's subsequent statement was marked by a moderately conciliatory spirit, and certainly in the estimation of a majority formed a notable contribution towards pacific settlement. The Unionist leader in the Lords was careful even at this late hour to leave open the door to negotiations. It will come as a surprise to most if the leaders do not confer with one another shortly after the committee stage of the amending bill is completed in the Upper House.

When the bill came up yesterday for second reading in the Lords, the Marquis of Lansdowne announced that as Ireland was one vast armed camp, it was necessary to find a way out of the calamity which was threatening. The Unionists, therefore, he said, would give the amending bill a second reading and introduce amendments during the committee stage in regard to the area to be excluded from the operations of the Home Rule bill, the duration of the exclusion and the Government of the excluded area.

The Unionists, he concluded, would not agree to the second reading of the Home Rule bill itself.

Lord Lansdowne added that their action in passing the second reading of the amending bill would be misunderstood and misrepresented in many quarters, but there was no other way by which breathing space could be obtained, with the prospects of averting the horrors of civil war. The amending to be introduced in the committee stage would be directed solely to making the bill a really adequate exclusion bill.

"The peers are so fast bound by the meshes of the Parliament Act," he said, "that there is no other course open to them which would be likely to prove effective."

Most of the other speakers were equally conciliatory in tone. A notable exception was Lord Willoughby de Broke, the leader of the "die hards," who moved the rejection of the bill.

The precise effect of the House of Lords' proposed amendments to the Government's amending bill will not be known until the Home Rule bill reaches the committee stage next week, but favorable omens are drawn by the London morning newspaper from the conciliatory tone of the speeches on both sides of the House of Lords yesterday for a renewal of the negotiations between the party leaders, which it is believed will result in an agreement.

The Daily Mail asserts that Premier Asquith's attitude has undergone a modification, and that he now is ready to grant exclusion to Ulster by statute instead of by the ballot.

BIG CROWD AT T.A.S. PICNIC

Baseball and Some Sports Carried Out, Despite the Rain

Notwithstanding the decidedly inclement weather, a vast number enjoyed the fifteenth annual T.A.S. picnic, held yesterday at their park down the river. The morning broke almost perfect, but by ten o'clock dark threatening clouds became visible and by one o'clock the rain was felt. For the first time the new pavilion was pressed into service and a large number, particularly ladies, sought shelter there. The rain was not exceedingly heavy, and with the protection offered by the trees the various amusements were carried on almost continually.

The meals served on the grounds were truly a credit to the committee in charge and the society as a whole. Mr. B. Brooks, the chairman of the committee, assisted by the young ladies of St. Peter's Sodality, worked untiringly and to them the credit is due. The committees in charge of the various booths and forms of amusement are likewise to be congratulated upon their work.

A long list of sports had to be cut down considerably and the events run off between showers. It was rather unfortunate that all the items on the program could not be held as the athletic field is in extra fine condition. In the morning the Sacred Heart nine had the satisfaction of carrying away an 8-1 victory over the St. Peter's aggregation. The game is usually one of the main features of the bill, and this year it was no exception. The team from the south were easily the better team and their heaver, O'Connell had the St. Peter's crew eating out of his hand. Hatrick who worked on the mound for the vanquished, pitched nice ball, but received rather poor support. The following were the teams:—

St. Peter's:—Murty, c.; Hatrick, p; May, 1b; Murphy, 2b; Walker, 3b; Heenan, ss; Minicola lf; O'Brien, cf; M. Murty, rf.

Sacred Heart: — Kenneally, c; O'Connell, p; Neary, 1b; Gorman, 2b; Barnett, ss; Rose, 3b; Henry, lf; Milloy, cf; Condon, rf.

Mr. Wallie Harris handled the game to perfection.

In the game between the Sacred Heart School and St. Peter's School the Sacred Heart boys were also victorious. The score was 3-1. Batteries:

Sacred Heart: Murray and Kenneally.

St. Peter's:—A'Hearne and Rutherford.

Umpire—Paddy Gorman.

Some Winners.

The winners of the events run off were:—

100 yards (open) J. McMartin.

100 yds. (T.A.S.) W. Hatrick.

220 yds. (open) J. McMartin 1st, W. Hatrick, 2nd.

Pole vault, J. McMartin 1st, A. O'Brien 2nd.

Throwing of baseball (under 16 years) A. O'Brien.

NO BOOZE IN WEST VIRGINIA

New Yost Act Enforced with Drastic Effect

WHEELING, W. Va., July 2.—West Virginia entered the column of prohibition states midnight June 30, and yesterday its residents were trying to adjust themselves to the new conditions imposed by the Yost Act, said to be one of the most drastic prohibitory measures ever enacted in the United States.

"For rent" signs are in windows of nearly six hundred buildings throughout the state where Tuesday intoxicating liquors were sold in abundance, give mute evidence of the change wrought by the new law. Not a liquor sign or advertisement can be seen in the important cities and towns.

FIRE RETURNS

The fire returns for the month of June reports 13 fires with a total damage of $2,500. The month of June, 1913, had 14 fires and $545 damage.

HON. MR. PERLEY DISCUSSES FUTURE OF DOMINION

Town Lots in Outside Subdivisions and Uncertain Oil Shares Are Pure Speculation, and Their Failure Should Not be Blamed on Canada, Declares Minister at London Dominion Day Banquet.

LONDON, July 2.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Dominion Day was generally celebrated by the Canadian colony here. Hon. G. H. and Mrs. Perley gave a reception in the afternoon. The customary dinner in the evening was attended by about 500 guests. Mr. Perley presided and the principal guests were: Prince Alexander of Teck, Colonial Secretary Harcourt, Henri Bourassa, Sir Thomas Skinner, Lord Emmett and John Stanfield, M.P.

Messages of greeting were read from Premier Sir Robert Borden and Sir Charles Tupper.

Mr. Perley, in proposing the toast of the "Dominion," opened his remarks with a graceful reference to the late Lord Strathcona and passed on to review the general conditions in Canada. He claimed that the Dominion had passed through the period of depression as well as any other part of the world. He added:

"I stand up for Canadian business honesty and probity as being as great as anywhere in the world, but at the same time the investor, should exercise his usual wise care and caution before deciding what he had better invest in. If you buy town lots in outside subdivisions or make purchases of oil shares, you are really entering into a speculation rather than investment, and the country should not be blamed if it turns out wrong. (Cheers.)

Hon. Mr. Perley dealt briefly with the railway situation, citing the recent advances to the C. N. R. and G. T. P. as ample proof of Canada's confidence in her future and her good faith with investors.

"With regard to the future and pessimistic suggestions which I understand are put forward by some here, that our growth has been too rapid, I only wish that everyone could travel through Canada and see the country for himself. Our immense natural resources are still there unaffected by any financial condition. There have been reports lately of lack of employment in Canada, but these reports are a good deal exaggerated. At the same time, we feel for the present that it is not well that any should emigrate without means.

Prince Alexander, in responding, followed his usual practice of reading his speech. In it he briefly reviewed some non-controversial aspects of Canadian life and character, assuring the gathering how eagerly the princess and he looked forward to life in the Dominion.

Henri Bourassa, also responding to the toast, alluded to his connection with the Dominion, and said, in part:

"There are many ways of serving the crown, there are many who thought that the glory and strength of the British Empire rested upon the unity of parties, but I venture to point out that I belong to another school which consider that the greatest glory, the most enduring strength of the British Empire lies in the fact that it first in history found the secret of allowing individual liberty and national aspirations to grow unfettered and free."

The toast of the "chairman" was proposed by Colonial Secretary Harcourt.

Merchants' Meeting.

The executive members of the Merchants' Association who are in charge of the picnic and all other merchants interested are requested to be present at the meeting tonight in the Y.M.C.A. at eight o'clock.

HON G. H. PERLEY.

COL. HUGHES GETS BLACK HAND "LETTER"

OTTAWA, July 2. — Col. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, was the recipient Tuesday through the mail of a harmless-looking envelope, which, however, contained a dire warning. In the envelope was a black hand, carefully cut to the shape and colored with ink. In the palm of the hand traced around in red were the words "Beware."

The colonel appeared little perturbed at the message of doom. "I have been shot at too many times to be scared at all," said he, and he dismissed it from his mind.

CUSTOMS RETURNS.

The customs returns for the past month were $25,366.19; for the same month last year, $47,836.40.

ALBERT STRONG RECEIVED FATAL INJURY AT HIS HOME

Missed His Footing and Fell Down the Stairs— Died at the Hospital

A deep gloom overspread East City to-day when it was learned that one of its highly respected and well known residents had passed away in the person of Mr. Albert M. Strong, of the firm of Manning and Strong, automobile dealers, Water Street. Mr. Strong's death was due to a hemorrhage caused by falling down stairs at his residence on Sophia Street this morning about three o'clock. It seems that Mr. Strong had gone to the bathrom for a drink of water and in returning in the dark stepped too close to the stairway, which at this particular spot war narrow. He lost his footing, falling across the balustrade, and fell downstairs. He was removed to Nicholls Hospital and Drs. Moir and McClelland attended him. Everything possible was done for the injured man, but he passed away this morning about ten o'clock.

A sorrowing widow and two small children are left to mourn his loss. The late Mr. Strong came from Millbrook and was thirty-four years of age. His host of friends in the city will deeply regret to learn of his sad death.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Strong reside at Millbrook. There are two brothers, H. S. and A. F., of Millbrook, and two sisters, Mrs. T. W. Thorne of Millbrook and Mrs. R. F. Thorne of Reaboro.

RACED WITH PIRATES

SARNIA, July 2. — The River St. Clair was the scene of an exciting race yesterday between a Port Huron tug, with police of that city on board, and two river pirates in a row-boat. The pirates managed to gain the shore and escaped, but the row-boat and a quantity of stolen copper were recovered.

DIED AFTER VOTING.

Mr. Solomon Vermilyea of Belmont Lake, dropped dead while sitting in his woodshed on Monday afternoon, shortly after dinner. He was apparently in the best of health and had just returned from casting his vote. Heart disease was the cause of his untimely demise.—Havelock Standard.

DOMINION DAY.

CANADA has just had another birthday. The year 1867 is not so far away, yet the strides this young country has made since that time when it definitely took on the robe of nationality, have been great and far reaching. Canadians have been subjected to views on their nationality of at least a twofold nature. The unthinking patriot will remind us of Canada's vast area and resources, her great railways and waterways, her immense wheatfields. The Englishman, perhaps, will remind the Canadians that Canada is in many respects a very young country, of small population and limited means. While both are true, Canadians should not forget that though a young country, they have a great heritage, and a great responsibility. The nature of this country necessitates thinking big things and doing big things, but, at the same time, any tendency to bumptiousness and to exaggeration should be suppressed. Canada has its limitations and is a young country, but though Canadians have to think big thoughts they should remember that their work is for society, that it involves sacrifice, more than acquisition or triumphs. Their work is to be a factor in world progress, rather than a mighty power. Strength is necessary to maintain peace and progress, but the aim should not be to acquire wealth and power for their own sakes, but to use these for the general good of humanity.

SOME LEGAL REFORM NECESSARY.

THE INVESTIGATION conducted by Lord Mersey is creating comment on other things than sea travelling. The Canadian Courier takes the expeditious manner of handling the inquiry as a reason for the institution of public lawyers, and also advocates public doctors. This editorial comment is strange, coming as it does from an organ controlled, it is said, by Mackenzie and Mann. We have not heard the Courier crying out vehemently for expropriation of the Canadian Northern system, nor do we consider support of such a thing as public lawyers a sound position except for those who favor impossible socialistic views. If we are to have public lawyers we ought to have public newspapers, public railroads, public grocery stores, public hotels, etc. We should all become civil servants, work for so much a year, and have our names and ages in the civil service blue book. Every man's wife would know how much he got and how much he spent. The country would be one vast workshop, where many things would be done indifferently, scarcely any well, and a great many very badly.

If there are defects in the Canadian legal system, as we doubt not, that is no argument that the whole system ought to be kicked inside out on the first provocation. We believe in individual initiative, in competition, and to make civil servants out of the legal profession would do away with that characteristic as well as totally demoralize it. If there is too much routine, formality, technicality, or what is usually termed red tape, legislation to correct these things is required. If the big legal battles had to be fought by the fourth-raters that became public lawyers or doctors, the legal profession would soon degenerate into a body of thick-witted clerks.

CANADA'S HUMILIATION.

BRITISH WARSHIPS, built by British workmen, paid for by British taxpayers, and manned by British sailors, are protecting Canadian life and property in Mexico. The trembling poltroons in the Liberal party and their hirelings in the Senate have placed Canadians in the humiliating position of once more being compelled to shelter themselves behind the protection of the British navy, towards the upkeep of which they have never contributed one dollar. Canadian property in Mexico may be destroyed, Canadian lives may be sacrificed, and Canadian womanhood outraged, but all Canadians at home can do is hang their heads in humiliation and ask other men to fight for their protection. Last year, through the action of the Liberal majority in the Senate, Canadians refused to contribute one penny to help Mother England. Today she stands ready to protect our lives and our property, as she has ever been ready and willing to do in the past. Let the traitor who says "we don't owe anything to England" go hang his head for shame.

NEW FIELD FOR SPECULATION.

THE MILLIONS of people who daily pay five or ten cents to go to moving picture shows do not realize that they have been instrumental in opening for Wall Street a new field for financial speculation or investment.

Recently three film companies, with an aggregate capitalization of $4,500,000, were floated by a New York Stock Exchange house.

A few days ago a single enterprise was incorporated for $2,000,000 — an alliance between a large film-producing concern and some of New York's most powerful theatrical interests. The stock issue was underwritten by New York and Philadelphia bankers.

About the same time there was a $5,000,000 merger of three film-producing companies, backed by Pittsburgh and San Francisco capital. A $25,000,000 amalgamation is being talked of.

ROAD-BUILDING BY CONVICTS.

THE STATE of Colorado has built 1,000 miles of roads by convict labor during the last three years.

This is interesting to Canadians, who are now turning their attention to the problem of establishing national highways. The belief that convicts, who have been imprisoned for minor offences against the law, should be employed in outdoor work is gaining adherents steadily, especially in Ontario, where the Government has experimented successfully with prison farms. We are beginning to admit that the majority of prisoners are not bad men from deliberate choice, but because certain mental, moral and physical weaknesses force them to succumb to sudden and overpowering temptations. Hard work in the open air, good food, medical supervision, and the observance of regular habits would probably redeem many of them to society, while part of the money they actually earned could be sent to their families.

DON'T BE TAN FOOLISH.

THE REMARKABLY COOL weather this month has its advantages. Every year there are a number of people who are usually credited with good sense, but who deem it fashionable to expose themselves to a strong sun in order to acquire "a good healthy tan." Frequently these foolish people get, instead of a good tan, an inflamed skin on face, neck and arms that spoils any good looks they ever had. Their faces appear to have been spanked to a blister and often a good complexion is seriously injured by such foolish exposure. City people going to the country would do well to protect themselves from the sun, but, if they must be tanned, a slow process will not be found injurious. So far, the cool weather has protected the foolish from serious results, but Nature does not always interpose an obstacle to foolishness, and a word of warning should be heeded.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A NUMBER of patriotic pieces were played on the chimes of St. John's Anglican Church yesterday morning. In view of the fact that there were few flags displayed, the music of the bells was distinctly appropriate and served to remind the people of the kind of day it was. Canada should take a lesson from the United States and display the flag a little more on the days when it is appropriate to do so. It is not necessary to work the flag to death as the Americans do, but Canadians are a shade too lethargic in this matter. The flag is worth flying—why not display it?

When Gentlemen Swore.

London Chronicle.

It is not so long since swearing was considered an indispensable accomplishment in a gentleman. When the great Lord Shaftesbury succeeded to the title his sister said to him quite seriously: "Now that you have come into the title you must learn to swear. Your father always did, and gained great respect by it in the county."

Don't Get in a Rut.

Los Angeles Times.

People in asylums play all the games they knew before they went crazy, and they play them just as well. Unless they are violent they can even play whist, although they do better with something more mechanical. They cannot learn anything new in that condition. They take no fresh steps. They have no invention, no initial energy. If you are not learning anything new and if you hate to do anything different, you may be in a bad way. Don't think the same thing all the time and don't do it. Beware of the rut.

Stop the Croaking.

London Telegraph.

Perhaps now there will be a brief respite from the persistent croakers who bewail the decadence of England in manly sports. The polo victory does not stand alone. It is only a month since the invading company of American amateur golfers found that the English championship was not quite so easily carried off as their patriotic enthusiasm had caused them to believe. Mr. Ouimet's astonishing victory over Vardon and Ray in America last year led to some rather rash deductions, the falsity of which was decisively established at Sandwich. So, too, it was hastily assumed that the third attempt of an English four to retrieve the disaster suffered at Hurlingham in 1909 would end in emphasizing the superiority of the Americans. Events have turned out otherwise.

THE ONE THEME

By Walt Mason

You talk of Pope and Byron, of Milton, Keats and Scott, and I admit I'm tirin' of all that kind of rot; you say the world is richer since Shakespeare sung his lays; to Jones, our southpaw pitcher, you give no word of praise. Through inning after inning he pitched a hitless game, and yet you come here grinning to talk of Wordsworth's fame. You speak of Alexander, and say he was a brick, that storied old commander who sighed for worlds to lick; I fear there's nothing in it, this clawing o'er his bones, and at the present minute my thoughts are all of Jones. Your musty ancient heroes were doubtless wearing bells, your Hannibals and Neros, your dauntless William Tells, but they are dead and planted, long since they met their fate, and I am now enchanted with Jones, whose curves are great. Of statesmen and of thinkers you come to spiel awhile, and they are surely clinkers when tommyrot's in style, but statesmanship is musty, and thinkers are a bore; when Jones, the true and trusty, is making batsmen sore. Forget the printed pages, the wreaths and halls of fame, forget the bards and sages, and come and see the game.

KEEPING UP-TO-DATE

IT doesn't cost no more ter keep up to present century times than it does to stick behind with the past century; keepin' a leetle in advance of the times is what puts the plasters on homes. Right ter day there are a dinged sight more people who don't own automobiles than people who do, if ye'd only stop ter think of it, still we've somehow got the idea that present-day life is supposed to be rid out in a benzine wagon. Somehow though, I like ter think that goin' slower and havin' a few quiet home-comforts is preferable to luxuries I can't well afford. Old bay Nell and the buckboard ain't much fer speed nor looks and maybe I can't get hum from the village till long arter sundown, but when I'm drivin' up my lane it's a kinder good thing to feel thet anyway that vine-covered house is clear of mortgage. My motto is go slow and enjoy what ye've got.

ARCHDUKE AND WIFE COULD NEVER HAVE ESCAPED DEATH

Officials Say Two Clockwork Bombs Were Found Under the Luncheon Table, Another in Chimney of Room and a Woman Has Been Caught With Several—Prinzip Glories in His Guilt.

VIENNA, July 2.—The conspiracy against the lives of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the Duchess of Hohenberg was so well planned that it would have been impossible for them to escape from Bosnia alive, according to some members of the late archduke's suite, who returned here yesterday.

The officials declare that two clockwork bombs were found beneath the table on which luncheon was awaiting the archducal party on their return to the city hall. A similar infernal machine also was discovered in the chimney of the room occupied by the Duchess of Hohenberg at Ilije, a watering place a few miles from Sarayevo, and a woman was caught with seven bombs in her possession.

The bullet which killed the archduke was an explosive one.

It has been ascertained by the authorities that Gavrio Prinzip, the assassin, is the son of the proprietor of an hotel at Sarayevo, and that he has passed his 20th year, so that he may be sentenced to death for the crime.

Paper Publishes Confession.

BUDAPEST, July 2. — The newspaper As Ujsag publishes yesterday what it declares to be the confession of Gavrio Prinsip, the assassin of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the Duchess of Hohenberg.

According to this statement Prinsip began to read Anarchistic works while he was a reservist with the colors, with the result that he became an Anarchist and formed a resolution to destroy one of the pillars of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. When at Belgrade he read of the archduke's intended visit to Sarayevo, he decided to go there and try to kill him. He obtained a revolver and cartridges from a member of one of the revolutionary groups at Belgrade, who, however, he said, was ignorant of the purpose for which it was wanted.

He had at first intended to shoot the archduke as he was driving to the town hall, but decided to await his return. When he saw a woman with the archduke he hesitated for a moment, then fired, but could not tell what was the effect of his shots, because the people closed in on him and struck him. He concluded by saying:

"I do not regret what I have done. I am well satisfied because I have accomplished what I desired to do for a long time."

Martial Law Declared.

SARAYEVO, July 2.—Martial law has been proclaimed at Tuzla and Malaj, because of the serious rioting in these towns, where much Servian property has been destroyed.

The preliminary examination by a magistrate yesterday into the assassination of the archduke and his wife, showed that it had been the intention of Prinzip to commit the deed at the time of the manoeuvres at Tarsini, but the attempt was abandoned owing to the strict military guard which prevented any outsider from approaching the archduke.

There was rioting yesterday also at Arevo and Gubelio, in the Stolac district, where Servian churches were stormed and destroyed by Mussulman mobs.

Martial law has been declared throughout Bosnia and Herzgovnia.

Riots Throughout Croatia.

AGRAN, Croatia, July 2. — Anti-Servian demonstrations continued here yesterday when a crowd gathered in front of the town hall and demanded that the mayor return a Servian decoration recently conferred on him.

Another crowd went to the house of the Speaker of the Croatian Diet, who is a Servian, and made a noisy demonstration against him.

Several people were arrested, but later released.

Born in 1818, the Earl of Wemyss was until quite recently considered one of the liveliest members of the British House of Lords. Long after he reached the age of 80 he played an excellent game of golf. At the age of 82 he contracted a second marriage.

The Earl of Wemyss owned about 62,000 acres. His heir is Lord Elcho, who in 1911 married Lady Violent Manners, daughter of the Duke of Rutland.

THE LINEN DRESS.

This Season's Models Are Finished With Graceful Tunics.

BLUE LINEN DRESS.

Every summer wardrobe which makes any pretension to style includes at least one linen dress. Fashion designers have a way of slightly varying the mode so that the dress of one season cannot well be exploited the following summer. This season the gown with the tunic seems to be the most popular style. The tunics differ a trifle, but the gown of blue linen shown here may be said to be typical. These colored linen dresses have a charming finish in the white organdie collars that are so much in vogue.

Plaited fabrics are much used in the present fashions. There are straight plaited skirts with flaring tunics or puffed panniers at the hips that are good models for taffeta frocks. Sometimes the fullness is held in with a hip yoke; sometimes it is not held in, but is, rather, accentuated by the panniers or tunics.

MILLINERY GOSSIP.

The Latest Rulings of the French Fashion Dictators.

Simplicity is the most dominant feature of the smart street hat, the shape lending itself admirably to trimming ideas, says the Millinery Trade Review.

Paris quotes the era of weird shapes to be on the wane, as they feel they have been given an overdose of eccentricity, although there is no lack of variety and fantastic design in the latest productions.

In straws fine, closely plaited varieties predominate in Paris. Highly glazed lisere and Italian milan have been singled out. The former is fancied mostly in black, but tete de negre, navy and dark blues are favored. Of the Italian milan yellow shades, running from cream to deep maize, are most popular.

There is a tendency to greater width of brim and height of crown in recently launched shapes, but this has not been persevered in, excepting in the height of the crown.

Plumage is by no means set on one side. Many of the aigrets used are very tall and straight.

Paris says a great many of the tall fancies are made up of ostrich. Two small tips, surmounting a rod covered with the fiber wrapped around it, is most favored form. Burnt ostrich, made into high quill effect, is popular.

Another new idea in Paris is a trimming of true lovers' knots, for which one inch wide velvet ribbon is used.

The new sensation in Paris is a satin ribbon, having much the appearance of toile cire or stove polish ribbon, but in reality being a new species of thick satin, which stays in place without support.

Flowers are being given a prominent place in Paris, those closely copied from nature finding most favor, lilacs especially being used, together with leaves in glossy bronze green shades.

In Vanity Fair.

Collars and cuffs of figured linen appear on suits of serge and poplin.

Bodices are extremely simple in line, while skirts grow more elaborate.

The feather pompon is an important feature in the millinery this spring.

Make your waists full at the back and front if you would be in fashion

The cameo buckle is made in special size and design for shoes and slippers.

This season the bolero costume is favored above all others for the sunny spring days.

A charming feature of the new suits is the high roll collar, suggesting the calla lily.

The newest collars seem to stand away from the neck in a loose, unfitted manner.

Net scarfs are embroidered in all sorts of fanciful designs with silver or colored beads.

The world soon gets tired of a chronic kicker.

VITALITY REGAINED KIDNEYS CURED

Health Restored By "Fruit-a-tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th. 1913.
"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My kidneys and liver were not doing their work, and I became all run-down. I felt the need of some good remedy, and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them.

Their effect, I found more than satisfactory. Their action was mild and the results all that could have been expected.

My liver and kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old time vitality. Today, I am as well as ever, the best health I have ever enjoyed, and I unhesitatingly give you this testimonial for publication if you wish"
B. A. KELLY.

In hundreds of letters received by the Fruit-a-tives Company, the same expression is used "Fruit-a-tives is the best kidney remedy in the world". At any rate, these tablets have proved the best to the hundreds of men and women who have been cured by taking them. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited. Ottawa.

Kidnapping Gang Caught.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The return home yesterday of Frank Longo, an eight-year-old boy who was kidnapped on May 13, led to the arrest of eight men who, the police say, form the nucleus of a band of kidnappers who have been terrorizing Italian merchants of the city for several years. Most of the men arrested are in some way connected with the bakery business, and it is believed they preyed mostly on those with whom their business brought them in contact. Longo, a baker, paid a ransom of $700 before his son was returned to him.

Uncle Sam's Navy Goes Dry.

WASHINGTON, July 2.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels' famous order banishing intoxicants from the United States navy went into effect yesterday. It not only abolished the traditional wine mess of the officers, but bars all alcoholic liquors from every ship and shore station of the navy. Beginning yesterday any officer found in possession of alcoholic liquor on board ship or any naval station will be guilty of misconduct. Commanding officers will be held directly responsible for the enforcement of the "dry edict."

TRAPPED IN MINE.

Five Men Are Imprisoned In Burning Shaft In W. Virginia.

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., July 2.—With little hope for their rescue five miners are imprisoned in the burning shaft of Sycamore Mine No. 1 of the Sycamore Coal Co., three miles from Williamson, Mingo County. Those imprisoned constitute the night force of the mine and were unable to escape when the mine caught fire shortly before Tuesday midnight. Efforts to reach the men have been futile and the mine is burning fiercely. Dense columns of smoke are being emitted and firemen say there is little chance for the rescue of the imprisoned men.

Defective electric wiring is believed to have caused the fire.

The entombed miners were believed by Deputy Mine Inspector Lambert to be in a part of the mine not yet reached by the fire. He said they had probably been cut off by the flames, and had taken refuge in a room about a thousand feet from the mouth. If they could live during the day there was some hope of saving them, experienced miners declared.

One hundred men were usually employed in the mine at night, but many of them did not report Tuesday night.

REBEL FORCE WINS.

Albanian Government Troops Defeated by Tribesmen.

DURAZZO, Albania, July 2. — A force of Albanian Government troops, which had remained loyal to Prince William, was defeated by the insurgent Albanian Mussulman tribesmen at Malkuch, a little to the north of Durazzo on Sunday, but the news was suppressed until yesterday. The Government troops under the command of Prenk Bib Doda were compelled to retire to Ishmi, near the coast between Durazzo and Alessio.

The defeat and flight of the loyal troops are attributed in Government circles here to foreign influences and also to the fact that Prenk Bib Doda's men had dispersed into small bodies and gone on pillaging expeditions on their own account.

It is feared by the authorities here that the rebels are now concentrating their forces preparatory to making another attack on the capital.

Boys' Superstitions.

The subject of luck makes all boys akin. If a horseshoe is found in the road the finder has but to pick it up, make a wish, expectorate lustily upon the horseshoe, hurl it backward over his head and walk away whistling a certain tune. If he keeps on going, without looking back, the wish will be realized. If a horseshoe is not available a perfectly round stone treated in the same way will produce similar results. That rule will work on all subjects but one, and that is a wish that the schoolhouse will burn down. All sorts of tricks of black magic have been tried without avail in that case.

SAYS THE CHURCH SHOULD ADVERTISE

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., July 2.—More publicity for the Catholic Church and its doctrines was advanced by Bishop McFaul of the Trenton diocese, following a pontifical mass which normally opened the annual convention of the American Catholic Educational Association.

"We want to get our church and her doctrines before the public," said the bishop. "We must let the people know who we are and what we stand for. There has been too much of a disposition to keep our religion to ourselves."

Turnbull's New Building

Peterboro's Modern Shopping Centre will Throw Open Its Doors to the Public Saturday Morning, July 4th, at 10.30

AT THE urgent request of many of our old customers, we have decided to open our new establishment on the above date ; although the interior of our building is not yet completed, and, though our formal opening with every departmental section finished and thoroughly stocked, is necessarily deferred till September.

A cordial invitation is hereby extended to everyone for Saturday, July 4th. Trusting that the visitor will bear in mind that through failure of the prompt supply of material, some departments are structurally unfinished ; still we can assure our customers and the public that our new building, on the corner of George and Simcoe streets, is the most solidly built, and the most substantial structure of its kind in any city of the population of Peterborough within the British Empire.

We invite your presence on Saturday morning, July 4th, confidently willing to let the building and the goods speak for themselves.

MR. PECK EXPLAINS.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—In the comments made by Mr. Burnham on the recent election, published in Tuesday's issue, Mr. Burnham is reported to have said: "Mr. Peck notified the executive committee at a meeting called for that purpose that he would not be a candidate." I desire to be understood, as not for a moment questioning Mr. Burnham's sincerity in making this statement, but my recollection of the matter is this: The only meeting of the executive at which I was present and my candidature was discussed, was one held on Monday, the 18th of May last, called for the purpose of making arrangements about the Conservative convention. Mr. Burnham was not present. I then stated I was very doubtful about being a candidate, but after discussion, an understanding was come to, as I considered, that if I did not intend to be a candidate I would give public notice thereof in good time before the convention was held. Later I decided to be a candidate, but finding there was considerable doubt as to the position I was going to take at the convention, I caused an item to be inserted in the Review on Saturday, the 23rd May, that my name would go before the convention. This was eight days before the convention met, and two or three days before the first meeting called to select delegates, so that every one interested in the convention had ample opportunity of knowing my position.

Yours truly,
E. A. PECK.

AN OLD CONSERVATIVE.

Editor Review,

Sir,—Allow me as an old Conservative and one who has been round about a good deal to give my impressions of the contest for election in this city. To begin with regular conventions were held by both parties and there was more than one choice but the Liberals were loyal to their leader and their party and did not let any disappointment work itself up. They were a united party and so were the Conservatives who went through the usual way of electing delegates and chose their man. A few friends try to make out that another man should have been chosen but the will of a large majority must and will prevail. There are always little troubles like that on both sides at election times so they are about equal and do no harm. The vote was about 600 short in the city and that tells the tale. Large numbers would not vote against Whitney and would not vote against Rowell's policy which they thought it was something entirely different from what it was. A petition signed by over 500 Conservatives has been privately handed in asking Mr .Soden to run again. It is to be hoped he will for if 500 want it they will be disappointed if he don't accept. But over and above all was the work of the ministers who though they fell down otherwhere (6 ministerial candidates out of 7 were beaten) were very strong here and I think and many think were carried away with an idea that was not really in the fight at all. Everything from start to finish was regular and right and the Conservative party though sorry here is satisfied and they have no real reason to be anything else, unless they want it all.

Yours truly,
CONSERVATIVE TRUE.

AUTO PARTY WENT INTO THE LAKE

A motor party consisting of five young men from Cobourg while motoring from Cobourg to Port Hope yesterday morning, narrowly escaped serious and probably fatal injuries when their car turned turtle throwing its occupants in the lake. Motor parties coming in the rear assisted the men and managed to remove the car which was slightly damaged. The party after repairing their car continued to Port Hope.

HORSE MADE FOR SEWER

Two young ladies were given a thrill this morning on Charlotte St. which they will remember for a few days. They were driving west between Bethune and Stewart Streets and their horse becoming frightened jumped over the embankment at the side of the sewer excavation and fell. Dr. Sutton, who resides near the scene of the accident rushed to their assistance and after getting the ladies out of the buggy he and two or three other men got the horse back to the road. After a few minutes the ladies were able to proceed on their way little the worse for the circus stunt.

SPRINGFIELD POLICE MADE TWO ARRESTS

Capt. Boyle and Inspector Quilty Place Parents in Custody

CHILD IS MURDERED

Captain Boyle and Inspector Quilty, who came to this city to take charge of Brodeur, the alleged murderer, have just brought about important arrests in Springfield. The Springfield Union says:

Through information furnished to Dist. Atty. James O'Shea yesterday afternoon by a man whose name is withheld by the police, William Roy, aged 28, of 102 State street, a body-maker employed by the Stevens-Duryea Company, was placed under arrest by Capt. Boyle, charged with the murder of his three-weeks-old son on December 23, 1913. He will be arraigned in court this morning. The mother of the child was arrested by Inspector Quilty and is being held as a witness.

According to the district attorney a man telephoned him at his home in Holyoke early yesterday afternoon to the effect that he had important information to impart. The call came from Springfield and accordingly Mr. O'Shea made an appointment with his caller, and hurrying to Springfield, met him in the Worthy Hotel. After remaining closeted with him for about an hour, Mr. O'Shea went to police headquarters and acquainted Capt. Boyle with the information.

It is alleged by the police that Roy is a bigamist, having a wife and family living in Lawrence. He was arrested here for the Lawrence police on a charge of non-support on June 14 1910, and was turned over to them. The story told by the police is to the effect that Roy and a woman named Carrie Terrio, aged 20, of Amesbury, went through a ceremony of marriage in New Britain, Conn., in December, 1912. From all appearances the woman is thought to be innocent of any wrongdoing and supposed she was legally married to Roy. A child was born to her early last September in the Mercy Hospital. Two weeks later she was discharged from the hospital and with Roy returned to 318 Chestnut street, where they were living at that time. About a week after her return from the hospital, it is asserted, Roy made arrangements to move, and said that he would take care of the baby. He left the house, taking the child with him, and is supposed by the police to have murdered it and buried the body at a place in the outskirts of the city.

No reason is given for the failure of the woman to report the loss of child to the authorities. It is supposed by the police, however, that fear of Roy kept her lips sealed. For a time the couple have been separated, but of late have been living together at 102 State street. On receiving the information, Capt. Boyle verified the birth of the child from the hospital authorities. He then started out and succeeded in finding Roy at the State street address. The arrest was made shortly after four o'clock. The woman was arrested about the same time by Inspector Quilty at the post office. It was asserted by Dist. Atty. O'Shea that the facts given him by his informant were gained in Connecticut. His name is being withheld for the present, but will be brought out later. It is understood he is perfectly willing to testify. Nothing could be learned from the police as to any statements which Roy or the woman have made since their arrest. The police will endeavor to locate the body of the child today.

ST. ANDREW'S TRIP TO KEENE

Some Were Left Behind at Station

Several prospective picnickers of the St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church were left at the post yesterday, owing to a misunderstanding regarding transportation arrangements. About one hundred and fifty of the merry makers swooped down on the G.T.R. ticket agent about 1.20 and asked for tickets for Keene. The task was more than the agent could handle alone and when the train pulled out at 1.20 several were left behind. In some way the railway officials had not been notified of the excursion and the agent was called upon to fill in the tickets in the usual way whereas if he had been notified the tickets would have been ready. However those who caught the train enjoyed themselves immensely regardless of the weather and some good sports were pulled off.

LOCAL TALENT AT BAILIEBORO.

Mrs. Stewart of Cobourg, Mr. C. E. Coleman and Master Sam Whitehouse of this city, had a large share in the program given at the garden party at Christ Church, Bailieboro, on Tuesday evening. The sweet voice of Master Sam Whitehouse was heard with great pleasure and Mr. Coleman was in a very happy mood. All his numbers were encored.

Picnicked at Kelly's Grove.

The Sunday School of the Bridgenorth Methodist Church held a very enjoyable picnic yesterday at Kelly's Grove, despite the unfavorable weather. While rain fell in torrents, the baseball aggregation from Bridgenorth succeeded in vanquishing the nine from the Fourth Line by 6-4. When the day cleared the usual sports which feature picnics were held and supper served.

Cherries or strawberries combined with bits of pineapple is a new combination for tarts.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN THIS CITY

As Reported by Local Correspondent of the Gazette

Labor conditions in Peterboro are reported in the Labor Gazette as follows:

Industrial conditions during the month of May showed marked improvement over the previous month, due somewhat to weather conditions, which were very favourable to the building trades and outside work. Some sewer work and street paving as well as street railway extensions, gave considerable employment to the large number of men who were idle most part of the winter. The Peterborough Novelty Company have commenced business, and will manufacture everything in the line of cabinet work. Outside of activity in real estate and building, other lines were quiet.

On May 18 bakers raised the price of bread from ten cents to eleven cents per loaf.

The City Council have passed a by-law enforcing the sale of poultry by weight on the market.

Arrangements were being made to establish a clearing house in Peterborough for the convenience of the local banks.

The dry weather somewhat hindered farmers in ploughing operations the first part of the month, but the latter part of the month was very favourable. The grass was good, and prospects were for a heavy crop. The wheat did not do as well as expected.

Dry weather delayed work on the drives, and some of the logs will have to wait until next year unless there is an abundant rainfall next month. The mills have started cutting; orders were active at the end of the month.

The first meeting of the cheese board for the season was held on the 20th of the month, fewer cheese being manufactured, but prices were higher, the top price for May, 1913, being 11 3-16; for May, 1914, 12 1-16 The reason given for fewer cheese being made is that the profit is small and the factory finds it pays better to make butter.

A SUBSCRIBER IN THE WEST

W. R. Emmerson Writes on Crop Prospects

In remitting for his Review, Mr. W. R. Emerson, of "Westwood Grove," of Kenlis, Sask., writes that the summer until the 23rd of June had been very dry, but on that day a splendid rain improved the crops, but too late for a big crop from early sowing. Mr. Emmerson, however, writes hopefully of the crops in general. He has wheat already headed out, the earliest in years; summer fallow 12 inches long, and stubble eight inches long. At the date of writing, June 29, rain was falling and the outlook was encouraging.

TWO WOMEN TESTIFY

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did For Their Health—Their own Statements Follow.

Haliburton, P.E.I.:—"I had a doctor examine me and he said I had falling of the womb, so I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. All the bearing-down pains have vanished. I have gained ten pounds in weight, the discharge is all gone, and I feel better than I have for a long time. I think any woman is foolish to suffer as I did for the sake of a few dollars.

"You can use my letter as a testimonial. It may encourage other poor women who suffer as I did to use your Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. GEO. COLLICUTT, Haliburton, Lot 7, P.E.I.

Read What This Woman Says:

New Moorefield, Ohio.—"I take great pleasure in thanking you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had bearing down pains, was dizzy and weak, had pains in lower back and could not be upon my feet long enough to get a meal. As long as I laid on my back I would feel better, but when I would get up those bearing down pains would come back, and the doctor said I had female trouble. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was the only medicine that helped me and I have been growing stronger ever since I commenced to take it. I hope it will help other suffering women as it has me. You can use this letter."—Mrs. CASSIE LLOYD, New Moorefield, Clark Co., Ohio.

PETES DROPPED BOTH GAMES ON THE HOLIDAY

Morning Game Went Eleven Innings With Creswell Pitching—In Erie Today

The Petes dropepd both games yesterday at Brantford. The morning affair went eleven innings after Brantford had tied it up in the ninth when Rube Deneau lined one to Blount which Curly just failed to hold. There were two down at the time. Creswell was hit rather hard but kept the pokes fairly scattered. The afternoon encounter was a 2-1 affair. The Petes had three errors in each game. Everybody on the club got a hit in the afternoon game but Belting and Fox while Thrallkill, Stewart, Rooney, King, Fox, got the hits in the morning game. Thrallkill's wild heave in the second game gave the Brants a run. Welsh did not play in the games yesterday, being laid up with an ulcerated tooth. Kelly replaced him in left.

Brantford, July 1.—The Red Sox took both games from the Petes today, when they won narrowly after giving a good exhibition of ball. Both games were fast and snappy, the second being a pitchers' battle in which Nichols got the better of Belting, keeping the Petes down to a run. Belting held Brantford to four bingles, but they managed to get two runs on slack team work. The game lasted eleven innings, when Burns made the plate for Brantford on hits by Deneau and Ivors. Scores:—

Tuesday's Win.

In Tuesday afternoon's game the Petes gathered ten hits while Tracey had the Brants guessing at all times and was backed up by errorless ball on the part of his mates. Blount had two hits, Thrallkill one, Welsh two, King, Miller and Tracey one each and Fox two.

Brantford, June 30.—The Red Sox gave a poor exhibition of baseball today when they fell again to the Petes by the score of 3 to 1. Taylor twirled great ball, but received poor support, and the Petes' score was made up on this weakness, Lacroix and Roth both making costly mistakes. The team work was poor, and Peterboro took advantage of this fact. With seven bingles, the Sox failed to make more than a single run. The score:—

By innings—

Peterboro—

Brantford—

FIRST SACKER FOR BLOUNTMEN

Mike Dolan Will Play in the Erie Series

Six foot three in his socks, arrived here Tuesday evening, in the person of Mike Dolan, who will cover the initial sack for the Petes. He left here yesterday morning and will play for the team in Erie this afternoon. Dolan is the first sacker the club has been angling for for some time. He covered first for the Indianapolis Feds until Charlie Carr, the Fed's leading clouter got back into the game. Dolan is a .300 clouter, and has had wide experience and should help some, as a veteran is needed on the first station. Dolan would have been here a week ago, but his wife has been ill, and as she wished to accompany him he remained home. Mrs. Dolan will make her home here for the summer.

Joe Byrne will report to the club again at Erie on Saturday. Joe's father is a little better, and the fans will be pleased to know that the danger point has been passed. Joe will leave Philly, Friday night.

Louie Schettler, who was injured last Saturday, has joined the club again and will work in the Erie series.

NORWOOD CLUB HERE TO-MORROW

The local team hooks up with the Norwood lacrosse club at Riverside to-morrow afternoon at 3.30. The club was considerably weakened in its game with Tweed yesterday, owing to the absence from the city of several players. As to-morrow's game is a championship one, the team will be at full strength. The rain of yesterday put an awful crimp into the bank rolls of the men behind the club and a good crowd should be out to-morrow afternoon to help the sport along.

All the local players are requested to be on hand this evening when a practice will be held.

Reggy—I thought you'd forgiven what I said and promised to forget it? Peggy—But I didn't promise to let you forget I'd forgiven it.

LIFT LOCKS LOST

The Lift Lock team lost both ends of a double header yesterday morning and afternoon. The first game was won by the Stars by the score of 7 to 3. It was a well played game.

The batteries:—Lift Locks, Adams and McMahon; Stars, H. Adams and Hamilton.

The second game was won by a picked East City team by the score of 15-13. The game was called at the end of the sixth on account of rain.

The batteries:—Sedgwick and Hamilton; Picked Team, McCauley and McMahon.

LOCAL TEAM WAS SHORT FOUR GOALS

Small Crowd Saw Tweed Win in Lacrosse

A handful of fans braved the drizzling rain of Dominion Day and journeyed to Riverside Park only to see the local lacrosse team beaten by an 8-4 score by the Tweed aggregation. It was an unsatisfactory affair, like all exhibition encounters are, both from a playing standpoint and the standpoint of officialism. Dr. Allan of Tweed, was the referee, and with all due respects to the dental surgeon's pulling and drilling propensities, it must be admitted that he certainly "pulled" for a Tweed win even more than his town's natives did. Then there was a Tweed man acting the role of goal judge. He was some judge. On one shot he failed to lift his hand, either because of rheumatics of conscience, but after the Tweed boys had informed him that the ball had gone through the net, he raised his hand like a railway signal, after the accident had occurred. Some goal judge and some nerve on the part of both officials.

With all due respect to the officials and the local team, it must be admitted that Tweed had a little the best of the argument, but not near as much as the score shows. And then, bad decisions usually take the heart out of a team. It was only an exhibition game, however, which leads us to imagine that the Tweed officials might bring along an army of maxim guns for holding up purposes if the game were on the strictly, "get out and win, it means something, plane."

Neither team displayed any flashy checking or passing qualities, although some neat cracks were meted out. The slippery ground interfered considerable with the work of both clubs and the game lagged. At the end of the first quarter Tweed led 3-2, and the score was 4-4 at the half. Tweed scored one in the third period and three in the last, and the fans adjourned for supper. The line up follows:

Tweed		Peterboro
Wil. Turcott	goal	Hatton
Elliott	point	Dunford
Rashtte	cover	Hart

Palmetier	centre	Kenneally

COMMENT

As You Like It

The Brantford sport writers are hitting .999 in the gloom league. Did you ever notice that every time Brantford wins at home, the game is great, etc. When they lose, the home team is rotten, etc. It looks from here as though the Brantford newspaper offices are in the throes of an epidemic of "lemonitis." The disease is evidently spreading in "The End of the World," alias Telephone City, where the natives help push the cars up the hill and sing All Hail The Power That Never Comes. Of Tuesday's game, which was won by the Petes, the Brantford writers said the home team was rotten, in face of the fact that the Petes only won by a 3-1 score and the Red Sox made but two errors. Of yesterday's games the Brantford correspondents say that everything was oranges. Judging by the closeness of the play, the morning game going eleven innings and the afternoon being a 2-1 affairs, evidently the battles were hard fought, but had Brantford lost under the same conditions, the .999 average would have been boosted a point. Only a handful of fans turned out yesterday and the guarantee paid to the Petes ate up the receipts. You can easily figure out who is to blame.

That the baseball fan is the most rabid of all was clearly shown at the lacrosse game for if any baseball umpire had meted out decisions such as Referee Allan and a Tweed goal umpire did yesterday, pop bottles, clubs and everything else would have been hurled, and the air would have been blue with choice exclamations. The teams made the grave mistake of selecting Dr. Allan a former Tweed player and an official of the club, to referee the battle. Without any fear of contradiction it must be said that Dr. Allan proved the strongest man on the Tweed line-up. His decisions were very partial towards his own club. On one occasion a Tweed man deliberately held the stick of one of the Petes but the doctor failed to penalize. Another instance was the ruling off of a Pete for an unintentional crack. A Tweed player had the ball and the Pete attempted to check his stick but the Tweed player ducked and received a slight crack on the head. He ducked forward. The cream de menthe of decisions was handed out by the goal umpire in the third period. He was stationed at the easterly corner of the nets when a Tweed man shot from the west. The local goal keeper shook the shot off and it rolled almost to the gate. The umpire knew it was not a goal but when the Tween players shouted that the ball had gone through the net he raised his hand. If the ball had gone through the net it would have struck the umpire as it was knee high. Yesterday's exhibition on the part of the officials should be a lesson to those interested in the betterment and revival of lacrosse to secure officials who are not interested in any way with one team or other.

Regardless of the double defeat at the hands of the Brants yesterday the Petes are just three points out of the cellar according to the corrected standing. The locals have now won 20 and lost 27 while Hamilton has won 19 and lost 26 which gives the locals a percentage of .425 and the Hams .423. The Brants are one game ahead of the Petes. The games of Tuesday and yesterday make the race even closer than before. London and Ottawa are neck in neck with 29 wins and 19 losses or about four games ahead of Erie who moved into third place when St. Thomas lost two out of three in two days and the Saints won one and lost one. Three games separate the Petes from fourth place. They swing over to Erie today for a big series and in order to keep within striking distance of the leaders must break even at the worst.

They are not backward in coming forward in Hamilton. Frankly, coldly and in numerous words, the sporting writers of the Ambitious City are demanding the release of Manager Yates. Evidently there is something wrong somewhere with the Hamilton club as the team looked nice when it was here. Doc Yates has placed Dudley in right field and re-hired Dolan who is on the initial sack again. Dolan must be some player in the estimation of the Hamilton manager if he can perform better than Dudley did while in this city.

Harvard defeated Leander and the Union Boat Club of Boston defeated the London Rowing Club by four lengths in the time of seven minutes, forty-eight seconds.

JIMMY DIRECT IN FRONT AT PORT HOPE

Frank Montgomery's Jimmy Direct showed his heels to the field in the last two heats of the 2.15 class at Port Hope yesterday and captured the race. The event was keenly contested all the way, and Susie Hall, owned by Dr. Johnson of this city captured the first two heats, and Manor King, owned by Hodgins of Orillia, came through in the third. The driver of Jimmy Direct was changed for the two last heats and he won handily. Although Jimmy Direct and Susie Hall each won two heats, the stallion was in better positions in the heats which he failed to win than the mare, and showed by winning the last two heats he was the class of the race. Therefore the judges awarded first money to Mr. Montgomery. Ora Medium, owned by Mr. Montgomery, was unplaced.

LOCALS HAD A SMALL LEAD

Cricket Match Called at End of First Innings Owing to Rain

Only one innings of the all day cricket match between the local club and St. Albans of Toronto was played yesterday, the second innings being called off owing to the rain. Peterboro turned in 59 runs to the visitors 51 and captured the match. The slippery crease caused by the drizzle did not prevent each team from putting up a splendid game and the bowling on each side was deadly. Lawrence carried off the bowling honors of the day. The local man was in excellent trim and took eight wickets for 14 runs. The local victory is largely due to his good work and the fine batting of Boone who was big bat for the day with 27 runs. Hancock of the visitors was next high with 15 runs.

PROHIBITION NOW IN FORCE IN NINE STATES

Nearly Fifty Per Cent of the People of United States Under Prohibition

Charleston, W. Va., July 2.—Statewide prohibition of the liquor business in West Virginia became effective yesterday. It brings the total number of states in the prohibition column up to nine.

With West Virginia added, the list will be: Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, West Virginia. These nine states of total prohibition territory, plus the local no-license area, make up 2,132,726 square miles in which 46,029,750 persons, or nearly 50 per cent. of the country's population, live, according to the latest figures of the prohibition leaders.

The 92,000 majority by which the people of West Virginia accepted the dry proposition was relatively the largest ever given by any state. It was approximately two to one for state-wide suppression of the liquor business. It was a surprise even to the prohibition forces, who were indebted largely to the determined stand which many of the large employers took in favor of their cause. The state has a population of 1,121,119, by the census of 1910.

The mandate of the legislature, embodied in the Yost bill, for the enforcement of the new law, beginning on July 1st, departs in many respects from the methods hitherto tried along this line. The chief features centres about the creation of a commissioner of prohibition, whose particular business it will be to see that by next Tuesday midnight some twelve hundred liquor selling places in the state have disposed of their stocks and that thereafter all persons shall be punished by law if they keep liquor for sale.

The new office of commissioner of prohibition automatically falls to Tax Commissioner F. O. Blue of this city, who has been spending several months in preparation for strict enforcement of the new law.

To save the state the time and expense of taking violations before the state courts, be has been urging municipal ordinances governing the violations, thus permitting the cases to be tried in the local courts.

The Drug Store.

In an effort to instruct the people as to the provisions of the new law, Commissioner Blue has also been lecturing throughout the state.

"In other states," says Mr. Blue, "where prohibition has been adopted, one of the forces that has had to be contended with has been the drug store. The Yost law will regulate this feature. Druggists may sell alcohol only to persons not addicted to its use, upon prescription of a reputable physician, who has examined the person and in detail set forth in the prescription the reasons for the use of alcohol. The governing bodies of druggists have approved this plan. For scientific or mechanical purposes alcohol will be sold only after affidavit as to its intended and uniform records of all such sales will be kept, to be inspected periodically by those in charge of the enforcement of the law. No druggist however, can sell in any form whiskey, brandy, ale, or any beverage of an intoxicating nature.

"The enactment of the Webb-Kenyon law by congress will be of considerable assistance in enforcing the prohibition law in this state," he said.

"One of the benefits of the federal act is that records of interstate shipments of liquor may be required, and therefore every railroad, express company, and any kind of transportation company, including steamboats and vessels carrying freight or express, either from another state into ours, or from one part of our state to another part, must obey the laws of this state respecting liquors. Every one of the transportation companies will be required to keep special records at the point of delivery showing the receipt of liquors, the kind and quantity, to whom consigned, when delivered, and the consignee must sign in person for the shipment. The Webb-Kenyon act vests the right to enforce these provisions of the law and regulations thereunder against interstate carriers. None of these carriers will be permitted to receive consignments of liquor to any point where there is not a regularly employed agent to keep such records, and have them open for inspection at all times.

Must Keep Records.

"The man who is engaged in the steamboat business upon our waters, interstate or intrastate, must keep these records, and will not be permitted to deliver any liquor or make sale of any liquors upon board his vessel while in our waters.

"This brings us to the question of how far one may get liquor for another. In the first place, if one acts as the agent of the seller, he is guilty of selling. In other words, if one has occasion to go to some point out of the state, and a friend hands him a dollar and requests that he purchase for him a quart of whiskey, and he does it and delivers it to him, he is guilty of making a sale, and by the act is guilty of making it, not where he purchased it, but where he delivered it in the state. Again, the representatives of those who sell liquor cannot come into the state to solicit verbally, by letter, circular, or otherwise. There is only one or two ways that a citizen of this state may bring liquors into it; he may upon his own initiative order it, and have it sent to himself by common carrier, for his personal use, and not for any illegal purposes, or he may go and get it. But in either event he can not bring it here for unlawful purposes. If he orders it shipped by common carrier, a record is made, open to inspection; if he goes after it and brings it with him, intending to use it for unlawful purposes, he may be arrested and the liquor seized, as soon as he comes into the state."

TWO BODIES ARE BROUGHT TO SURFACE

Rimouski, Que., June 30. — The bodies of a little girl some six or seven years of age, and a steward as indicated by his uniform, were recovered from the Empress of Ireland by the divers at work on her yesterday. Both were discovered on the promenade deck. That of the steward was not caught in any manner, but was floating by the cabin wall, while the other was entangled in a rope. Neither has been identified, and the action of the water has almost obliterated the features.

The first men who descended, Macdonald, of the cruiser Essex, and Chinchem, the New York diver, found nothing. They reached the promenade deck, but their search was unavailing, though they wandered along for some distance. Whitehead, one of the best of the naval men, then went down. He was on two decks before he caught sight of a body. From one to the other he clambered up the slippery side of the ship, a tedious and most difficult undertaking. Finally he reached the promenade deck, and there, about midships, he saw the child's body.

Chinchem then made another descent. He again landed on the side of the ship near the promenade deck and was soon over the rail. Not far from where he stood, close beside a cabin door, he saw a body.

It was the last day on the work for the Essex men. Orders came yesterday that they were to proceed to Quebec to join their ship, which is leaving for Newfoundland. And so, early in the evening, they went aboard the Lord Strathcona and she sailed up the river. The New York and Quebec divers will continue the operations. Other divers from Kingston, Ont., and New York are coming to replace the navy men.

The coroner's jury which heard the evidence into the death of Edwin Cossaboom brought in a verdict of accidental death last evening. Cossaboom, one of the divers, was killed on June 21 by falling from the forecastle, where he was attempting to fix a mooring chain. He dropped to the bed of the river, and in his confusion turned off his air. Then, in his efforts to turn the valve again it is believed he broke the handle.

CHINAMAN KILLS A WHITE MAN

Drunken Man Was Behaving Badly in Restaurant

ESTEVAN, Sask., July 2.—George Bidler, farmer, was shot and killed Tuesday evening at Bromhead by Lee Han, Chinese restaurant proprietor. The Chinaman was arrested and appeared on preliminary trial before Magistrate Speers, who committed him for trial. Bidler had been drinking and threatened to clean out the place. Lee Han told him to stand off and backed toward the rear door to get out of the way of Bidler, who continued to advance, and as the Chinaman could not get out of his way, after warning Bidler he would shoot, he fired the shot. Threats were made to lynch the Chinaman and the police, to avoid trouble, hurried the other Chinamen out of town to Estevan.

JACK KONG GETS LIFE

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 2.—Declaring that he thought Jack Kong, the Chinese servant who killed Mrs. Chas. Millard and dismembered and burned her body, was guilty of murder instead of the lesser crime of manslaughter which the jury had decided, was the crime, Justice Gregory on Tuesday emphasized his feeling by sentencing the 17-year-old criminal to spend the rest of his life in the penitentiary. Usually a life sentence means twenty-one years, but Kong under the sentence must spend all his years within prison walls. His lordship declared he was unable to see any one redeeming feature, for he regarded the crime as one of peculiar cunning and ferocity.

ANOTHER MEDIATION

Villa and Carranza Require Services of a "Dove"

EL PASO, Texas, July 2.—Miguel Diaz Lombardo, Constitutionalist representative at Paris, cabled yesterday that he would leave at once for El Paso. This was taken here as indicating that he would act as an unofficial peace commissioner between Gen. Carranza and Gen. Villa in their yet unsettled estrangement.

Lombardo was Minister of Public Instruction in the Cabinet of the late President Madero. He has been friendly with Gen. Villa since the Madero revolution, also is on good terms with Gen. Carranza, and is a close friend of Gen. Felipe Angeles, Carranza's deposed Secretary of War, whose present relation with Villa has been credited as occasioning much of the ill-feeling between the two factions of the Constitutionalists.

It was learned yesterday that the proposed conference between Villa and representatives of Carranza is far from complete. Alfonso Madero, brother of the late President, Santos Cuerano, the Peruvian poet, who has been active recently in Mexican affairs and Alberto Panl, one of Carranza's younger advisers, some days ago offered their services as mediators in the internal embroilment, it was said.

Advices received by mail from Guadalajara said that the second largest city in Mexico, was about to be attacked by Gen. Obregon's troops.

The revolutionists, it was stated, had cut off the water supply of the city which aside from making water scarce had shut off the electric light and power. The city for days has been in darkness, except for the use of candles.

120,000 CHEQUES ISSUED MONTHLY

On the fifteenth of each month the C.P.R. will pay in wages over the whole system $6,000,000. This is the monthly record in round numbers, 120,000 cheques being drawn every month. It seems only the day before yesterday when 60,000 cheques were deemed to represent a tremendous monthly wage list. The number of employees grows all the time, in spite of careful appointment, and economic working. These monthly cheques find their way into the most distant, the oddest places. They are hurried, in enclosures, to the distant parts of British Columbia. They find their way to the construction camps, removed from civilization. They reach the employees at the wayside station, showing a single tuft of grass amid the general aridity. And, however lonely or small or discouraging the locality or district, there will be someone there to cash the cheque for the employee. There may be a bank in a tent, which is very frequently the fact. If there is no bank there is a company's agent of some kind to whom the cheques will be addressed and who will distribute them to the men in the district. To make out the pay lists and check them, and control them, and issue the cheques to correspond to the bookkeeping and get the work so advanced as to have all things ready at the right date, on the stroke of the clock, requires a large staff at headquarters. And whether the times be good or bad, the figures rising or falling, the $6,000,000 have to be provided on the fifteenth of each month to the minute. The exceptionally strong position of the Canadian Pacific has enabled it to pass through a time of stringency, always making more than its dividend, with ample funds at its instant disposal. There has been, as far as possible, retrenchment during the past few months. That does not mean that the company has parted with any of its employees; but it has not undertaken new work necessitating the employment of new hands, or the disbursement of sums other than those already arranged for under older programmes. No man in the service of the company, high or low, has any doubt about that monthly cheque, which will be honored in all parts of the Dominion.

UNEXPECTED DEATH OF HON. JOS. CHAMBERLAIN

Great Parliamentarian of British Commons Passes With Wife and Son at His Bedside.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 3.—Right Hon. Jos. Chamberlain died last night. Mr. Chamberlain's death occurred at ten-thirty last night, at his London residence. His wife and son Austen Chamberlain were at his bedside.

His last public appearance was at a garden party on the grounds of his Birmingham home, May 6th, when he received several hundred constituents. He then appeared very feeble and emaciated but his health was not supposed to be any worse than for several years past and death came as a surprise. He was seventy-eight years of age and was active in parliamentary life from 1876 till 1906, when he suffered a paralytic stroke which disabled him. Birmingham constituents nevertheless continued to return him at each general election although he only once again appeared in the House of Commons.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was born at Cambelwell Grove, July 8, 1836. He was the son of Joseph Chamberlain, master of the Cordwainer Company. He was educated at Canonbury and University College and after graduation conducted a successful business, and has been a prominent figure in public life for the last quarter of a century. During his career he was the object of bitter attacks from both parties. He won a reputation in municipal life in Birmingham and was thrice mayor of the city before he entered the larger sphere of imperial politics in 1876. In 1880 Gladstone made him President of the Board of Trade in the Liberal Cabinet. He was actively concerned in the negotiations which led to the historical Kilmainhan Treaty in May, 1882, an alleged compact between Gladstone and Parnell, according to which, the latter was to use his influence in the repression of agrarian outrages, more particularly the aggressive policy of the Land League, in return for Mr. Gladstone's promise to introduce in parliament a law modifying the Land Act of 1881. Mr. Gladstone framed his first Home Rule administration in 1886. The assurances asked by Mr. Chamberlain as to the premier's Irish policy were given, and he joined the Government as President of the Board of Trade. On March 26, owing to Gladstone's Home Rule Bill, Mr. Chamberlain retired from the Cabinet and joined the Unionists. On June 7, 1886, the bill was defeated by a majority of thirty and the ministry resigned. At Chamberlain's suggestion a Round Table conference was held in January, 1887, with a view of settlement between the Liberal Unionists and Gladstone. The meeting was futile and from that time until 1882 Chamberlain co-operated with the Conservative Government under Lord Salisbury.

In 1887 he went to Washington as one of the British plenipotentiaries to discuss the Canadian Fisheries rights. In 1895, when Lord Salisbury was returned for the third time, Chamberlain chose the colonial office as his cabinet work. He realized more clearly than his colleagues the significance of that branch of the Government and in place of the old alternation of interference with neglect, the colonies commenced to receive an intelligent and sympathetic hearing of their inspirations. 'He breathed a new spirit" into the administration of that department, said Mr. Balfour, and invested it with an interst and importance only second to that of the foreign office. As minister of the office, Mr. Chamberlain's first duty was to disavow the Jameson Raid of 1897. He was clearly exonerated from any knowledge of Dr. Jameson's intentions. The negotiations with Paul Kruger in an effort to secure reforms in the internal government of the Transvaal were conducted until the Boers declared war and invaded the Natal district in 1899. Chamberlain's conduct during the negotiations with his strong advocacy of the Anglo-American alliance of 1898, gave rise to the phrase; "The new American diplomat," and he was made the subject of parliamentary debate. The awakening of a strong imperial spirit among the colonies, which resulted in thousands of volunteers going to Africa from Canada, Australia and New Zealand, is attributed to Chamberlain's policy.

Some of His Achievements.

Among his notable parliamentary achievements were the passing of his Bankruptcy Act in 1882 and the Workmen's Compensation Act in 1887. He practically founded the Birmingham University and was its first chancellor.

In 1893 it was practically due to his efforts that the senate killed Gladstone's Home Rule Measure. He also introduced the Old Age Pension Act and was a strong advocate of tariff reform and preferential policies and reciprocity between the motherland and the colonies. During his tariff reform fight he did not have the support of Mr. Balfour, and although he could have had the leadership of the Unionists, he stood by his promise never to break with Mr. Balfour except on the tariff reform question. Although he did not take any active part in the elections of 1910, he was the master mind behind the Conservative party, and it was due to his tariff idea and the persistency of his endeavor that the party cut down the Liberal majority and Chamberlain himself was re-elected in West Birmingham.

His first wife was Miss Harriett Kenrick of Birmingham, whom he married in 1861. She died in 1863 and in 1868 Chamberlain married his late wife's cousin, Miss Florence Kenrick. She died in 1875, and in 1888 Chamberlain married Miss Endicott, a daughter of the minister of war in President Cleveland's Cabinet.

His son, Joseph Austen Chamberlain, is one of the Conservatives stalwarts to-day.

WAS HAPPIEST MAN IN TOWN

Edward Murphy Landed 23 Pound Lunge.

The happiest man in town last evening was Edward Murphy, Aylmer Street. Edward's mirth was due to a haul at the Little Lake, when he hooked a lunge that was found to weigh 23 pounds. The lunge was exhibited at C. R. Bank's Store, and as a drawing card, was all that could be desired. As a reward for his capture, Murphy received Bank's annual prize of fishing tackle, valued at $3.50.

C.P.R. STEAMER ON THE ROCKS NEAR COVE ISLAND

Lake Vessel in no Danger and Sister Ships Are Standing By.

PASSENGERS SAFE

OWEN SOUND, July 3. — The steamer Assiniboia, flagship of the Upper Lakes C. P. R. fleet, is still on the rocks at Bad Neighbor Island, near Cove Island. She ran aground shortly before midnight Wednesday in a dense fog. There is no danger and sister ships are standing by. It is expected that she will be pulled off to-day.

Messages received from the Midland wireless station, which is in touch with the Assiniboia, say the steamer was crawling down through the gap, one of the most dangerous spots on the upper lakes, amid a dense fog. Apparently, she got slightly out of her course, and ran aground hard and fast. Fortunately the weather was not rough, and the water calm, so that there was no panic among the passengers, many of whom were asleep and did not know for some time that the vessel was ashore. When it was found that reversed engines would not relieve the Assiniboia the wireless was set in operation and the steamer Manitoba, which had just left Owen Sound, a port of call, for the head of the lakes, replied, as did the Midland land station, which apprised the C. P. R. headquarters.

The Manitoba reached the Assiniboia in the morning and stood by waiting for the arrival of the steamer Alberta, which had been hurriedly despatched from Port McNicoll to take off the passengers from the Assiniboia and bring them to Port McNicoll. In the meantime tugs and lighters have gone to the cove to relieve the big vessel, and as she is resting easily with her prow about five feet out of the water, it is hoped to have her afloat by to-night at the latest. It will be necessary to send the flagship to drydock for repairs.

ONE KILLED THREE HURT IN AUTO MISHAP

Accident Followed When Tire Blew Out.

Canadian Press Despatch.

North Bay, July 3.—Miss Morrissette of Mattawa was killed, Mrs. John Billington, David Morland and J. A. Kinella of North Bay were badly injured and Miss Eva Wright of Mattawa was slightly bruised when an auto owned and driven by Morland, a local real estate agent was ditched while returning from Bonfield last night.

Misses Morrissette and Wright had been visiting Mrs. Billington and Morland invited the party for a drive. A tire blew out causing the machine to slew. Morland threw the wheel too far over and at the same time a loose board in the floor of the car dropped, causing the brake to jam and the car piled up in a ditch. Miss Morrissette died in two hours, Mrs. Billington suffered several broken ribs, Morland is internally injured and Kinzella has been taken to Toronto for treatment by specialists.

CONSERVATIVE PEERS READY TO ACCEPT ULSTER EXCLUSION

Many Speeches Are Made by Lords in Second Day of Debate on Home Rule Amending Measure—Division is Likely on Monday and Final Vote Will Come a Week Later.

LONDON, July 3.—The debate in the House of Lords yesterday on the bill to amend the Irish Home Rule Bill was characterised by general recognition on the part of the Unionist peers that some means of settlement must be found, and the amending bill offered the only chance of accomplishing this. The Marquis of Lansdowne, the Unionist leader, had already announced that it was necessary to find a way out of the calamity which threatened, and that, therefore, the Unionists would give the amending bill a second reading and introduce amendments during the committee stage.

So many peers desire to speak on the amending bill that it has been decided to take a division on Monday. The committee stage will be begun Wednesday and the bill will probably be sent to the Commons not later than Monday or Tuesday of next week.

The second day's debate attracted almost as large an audience as the first, but less interest naturally attached to the discussion than the previous evening, when Lord Lansdowne disclosed the attitude of the Unionist leaders. Perhaps the chief feature of the resumed debate was the general agreement expressed on one point, namely, that the first necessity was to avert the danger of civil war. Another feature was the warm recommendation given Archbishop York's suggestion of a conference of Irishmen on the subject of permanent settlement.

The Duke of Abercorn, speaking yesterday as an Ulster Volunteer, said that he looked upon the bill as the only loophole he [illegible] for the avoidance of a most [illegible].

The Marquis of [illegible], chairman of the Ulster [illegible] Council, said that the bill was a horrible one, but that he would support it in order to avoid civil war.

The Marquis of Salisbury announced that he would support the amending bill for the same reason, much as he disliked it. He expressed the hope that Lord Willoughby de Broke could be induced, in the interests of a settlement to drop his amendment for the rejection of the bill.

The Earl of Halsbury, once the most irreconcilable of the "die hards" hoped so too, for nothing could be more urgent, he said, than the necessity of making some sacrifices in order to avert civil war.

Lord Dunraven advocated a conference, and among those who supported it in some form or other were Lord Islington, Lord Sydenham, Lord Lovat and Lord Shaftesbury.

The only Ministerial speaker was Lord Wimborne. He stated the bill was put forward, not as a settlement but as an arrangement by which the fears of Ulster Unionists might be allayed. Apparently he contemplated a change in the six years' limit, for he said that whether the period were six years or longer, or an indefinite period, he looked forward to an eventual compromise.

Arms For Nationalists.

DUBLIN, July 3.—In the absence of the police the Irish nationalist volunteers succeeded last night in landing here 400 cases of ammunition and 800 cases of rifles. The arms and ammunition were taken from on board a boat which had been hovering about the coast off Dublin for two days.

DIVISION COURT.

Judge Huycke presided over the regular sitting of the first division court this morning when several cases of minor interest were disposed of.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, JULY 3, 1914

THE AUSTRIAN TRAGEDY

THE ASSASSINATION of the heir-apparent to the Austrian throne, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, and his morganatic wife, the Princess of Hohenberg, while adding another tragedy to the Hapsburg family, has changed the political atmosphere of Europe. The history of the great House of Hapsburg is heavily fraught with tragic and scandalous episodes, but, though these have been its lot for centuries, the life of the present Emperor, Francis Joseph, has been well checkered by horrors, afflictions and disappointments. His only son, the heir to his throne, the clever and accomplished Prince Rudolph,, committed suicide with his mistress. Having married the beautiful Princess Elizabeth for love, the kaiser estranged her by giving first place in his affections to an actress, and the royal couple were separated for years. A reconciliation was effected, but the empress was murdered in Geneva by an anarchist. His brother, the unfortunate Maximilian, who had accepted the imperial crown of Mexico, was executed by the Mexican revolutionists. His only surviving brother brought dishonor on the family by a series of scandalous acts, and was stripped of his honors and confined in prison. His nephew the Grand Duke John, ran away with an actress, assumed the name of John Ord, and was probably lost at sea. Two nieces brought sorrow to the old emperor by matrimonial escapades—one of them, the crown princess of Saxony, having deserted her husband and children and run away with a music teacher. And now the heir-apparent to the throne and his wife have been murdered in Sarayevo, the capital of Bosnia, by a Servian student.

Ever since Austria violated the Berlin treaty six years ago, by annexing the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the population of which is mostly Servian, the Servians have nursed an animosity against the Austrians which doubtless prompted the assassination. It may have been the result of a false sense of patriotism, but Austria gratified her ambition to extend her boundaries and now pays a retribution in the death of the heir at a most critical time.

The murdered duke was the hope of his house. Unlike many of his ancestors, he was a man of sterling worth, of military ability and of military ambitions. He was faithful to the one woman he loved. She was but a lady-in-wating in the royal household, but he married her, although her children could not inherit the Crown. The old Emperor urged his nephew to put her away and marry a royal princess in order that the succession might be assured, and although the Pope's influence was also exerted to the same end, and although Ferdinand was a dutiful subject and a devout Catholic, yet he refused to be separated from his wife. But what was of more concern to Europe were his military ambitions. He was an energetic man, who was anxious to try his skill on the actual field of battle and his accession to the throne has for a long time been regarded uneasily by every court in Europe. Now that he is dead that alarm has passed away, for the new heir is much younger, and of a more peaceable character. A man who might have become a great disturber of European peace has died, with his wife, in a way that completes the romance of his life.

AN ATONEMENT FOR THE PAST.

THE PROPOSED TREATY between the United States and Colombia, by which the former country proposes to reimburse the latter for the loss of Panama, by the payment of $25,000,000, has been the subject of a violent attack by Colonel Roosevelt. The method by which the United States received the "right to build the Panama Canal" was one of the most disreputable political scandals that ever sullied the national honour of a people. In the first place, Americans were under a treaty obligation to maintain the integrity of Colombia and this obligation was brazenly disregarded. Emissaries from the United States fomented a revolution in Panama, which was subject to Colombia, and two days after the revolution broke out, the independence of Panama was officially recognized by the United States. The Republic of Panama having been set up, a treaty was negotiated satisfactory to the United States, and the Panama Canal began, under the direction and at the expense of the United States. Possibly an honourable arrangement could have been made in time with Colombia, but the United States couldn't wait, and soiled its hands by taking the bull by the horns. Now President Wilson proposes to remove in some measure the stain on national honour, and since such a treaty recognizes the stain, and because it touches the political career of Col. Roosevelt, the leader of the Bull Moose party denounces it in language ill-befitting a former master of the White House. President Wilson has put principle first in this measure, and should have the approval of every American who has a proper sense of national honour and decency. Aside from the principle involved in the treaty, the Rooseveltian attack furnishes an interesting view of the political ideals of President Wilson and his blustering, rough rider opponent. Naturally, the contrast only increases respect for the present Chief Magistrate of the United States.

THE LANGUAGE TEST which keeps out Asiatics might be serviceable if applied to some politicians.

THE ORIGIN OF BANKING.

THE BUSINESS of banking is of great antiquity, and in its simpler forms no doubt was understood and practised by the Assyrians, Babylonians and Athenians. As the taking of interest for money lies at the root of all banking and furnishes the chief motive for it, wherever a people were sufficiently advanced to loan money for hire, there would naturally spring up many of the practices and methods of modern banking. The transfer of credits was undoubtedly known among the ancients. They used checks and bills of exchange, but for all that they were very far from having the confidence in credit business that has been fostered by modern banking methods. They used gold and silver coin or other commodities then in use as standard of value and media of exchange, but no paper money. It is more fanciful than correct to ascribe to the Romans the invention of modern banking. The business carried on by their dealers was similar to that of the Jews of the Middle Ages and the Lombards.

PRIZE-FIGHTING.

THE MONTREAL MAIL expounds learnedly on prize-fights and comes to the conclusion that it is under a cloud. We do not see much difference between getting a bat in the cheek from a glove and getting a crack from a lacrosse stick. The execution in either case is usually stunning and perhaps that is why they are both attractive, but indulged in less as sports. Prize-fighting seems to most people more like the real thing and less a trial of fitness in sport, yet when the casualties of Lacrosse, Rugby, Aviation, Horse-Racing, Motor-cycling, Auto-racing, and Boating are considered, not to mention milder sports like Baseball, Association Football, Cricket or Hockey, it is doubtful whether prize-fighting is as brutal as some other sports, or even as it seems. We might add, we do not recall any fatalities in golf or croquet.

DR. MOTT IN THE EAST.

WHEN DR. MOTT arrived in Shanghai a banquet was given to welcome him. It was a sight to see the leaders of this young republic, arrayed in evening dress, gathering in the Palace Hotel, two hundred strong. In the chair was Mr. K. S. Wong, business manager of China's great iron and steel works, and perhaps the future Carnegie of China. In these works, employing over four thousand workmen, skilled laborers turn out steel rails used to build the new railways of China. On the left of the chair sat the celebrated Dr. Wu Ting-Fang, former minister in Washington, who represented the revolutionary forces in negotiations with the Manchus in forming the new Republic of China. Next to him sat the manager of the Nanking railway, a graduate of Yale. Though not a Christian, he said: "Confucianism has supplied China with precepts in the past that China imperatively needs Christianity today to furnish her with moral power. Many leading men are now turning toward Christianity as the hope of China. It is the sign of the times."

Lying is Dangerous.

Los Angeles Times.

A young man forgot what name he had signed on a hotel register and was identified with forgeries through this mistake. Nobody without an infallible memory should ever attempt to tell or to act a lie. Keeping up with fiction of one's own making is about the hardest work in the world.

Unanswerable.

San Francisco Argonaut.

Two Pullman porters representing different railroads met off duty and progressed from friendly gossip to heated argument. Their quarrel centred about which one worked for the better road. Their claims, figures and arguments came fast and furious. At last the tall, thin porter settled the dispute with these classic words: "Go on, niggah; we kills mo' people den you fellahs tote."

Improving.

Tit-Bits

"My daughter Susie is getting quite an excellent Latin scholar," said the proud father to a visitor. "Here is one of her exercise books, and you can look for yourself."

Susie blushed scarlet, and made a wild grab at the book. She was too late, and the delighted visitor read aloud to the company:

"Boyibus kissibus
Sweet girliorium;
Girlibus likibus,
Wanti somorum."

Very Much Better.

Hamilton Herald.

A Presbyterian pastor in Belleville preached in support of Mr. Rowell's prohibition policy. A member of his congregation rose and asked the privilege of a reply, The request was granted, and the other side of the question was presented from the same pulpit. Now that minister had some sense of fair play. But would it not have been more seemly if he had expressed his opinions from a secular platform?

Hapsburg's Unlucky Star.

Montreal Evening News.

The House of Hapsburg is pre-eminently ill-starred. The tragedy of Crown Prince Rudolf, who committed suicide under such mysterious circumstance; the assassination of the Empress Elizabeth, and now the violent death of the hair apparent, Franz Ferdinand, make up a list almost unprecedented in the lifetime of a ruler. Emperor Francis Joseph, who is again stricken in his very old age, is now faced by a crisis involving the heirship of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Franz Ferdinand has been for almost a decade the dominant force in the affairs of the dual kingdom. His power was real, because he was of a dominant spirit. His death complicates the tangled web of European politics in a manner that will be felt in every chancelory, especially St. Petersburg and Berlin.

FALSE ALARMS

By Walt Mason

I see the farmers toiling, out in their fields of wheat, and they are glad, though broiling in fifty kinds of heat. "The fields are simply reeking with finest kinds of grain," I hear the farmer shrieking; "prosperity will reign! The crop is simply thumping! There is no end to wheat, and all of us are humping along to Easy Street!" I sit upon the fences and watch the toilers strain, and see no evidences of carking care or pain. Where are the dismal grangers who raised their doleful cries about the frightful dangers they feared from Hessian flies? Where are the weeping farmers who lately had the crust to pose as false alarmers and talk of smut and rust? Where is the howling hayseed who said, "The drouth is near, and surely I won't raise seed to plant a crop next year"? The prophets of disaster have canned the boding frown, and faster yet and faster they're hauling wheat to town; they draw the shining kroner, they draw the golden buck; no longer do they groan or complain about their luck. Most all our fears of evil are baseless, I repeat; we talk of rust and weevil, when we should talk of wheat.

Suffragettes Violent In Court.

CARNARVON, Wales, July 3.—A scene of great violence was created yesterday by two militant suffragettes, Georgina Lloyd and Phyllis North, when they were brought up for trial at the Carnarvon sessions on charges connected with a window smashing campaign on June 3 at Criccieth, in the constituency of Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George.

The prisoners fought like wildcats, and it took five wardens to keep them in the prisoners' enclosure.

MAJOR LEONARD HAS RESIGNED

Chairman of N. T. R. Board Short of Time.

OTTAWA, July 3.—Major R. W. Leonard, chairman for the past three years of the National Transcontinental Commission, has tendered his resignation, which was accepted by the Government yesterday, and will retire for the purpose of attending to his private business. An order-in-council was passed by the Cabinet Council accepting the resignation and formally turning over to Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways, in accordance with an act passed last session, the control of the completion of the unfinished details of the road." It is expected that the lease of the completed section of the road to the Grand Trunk will be made at an early date following the change in jurisdiction.

Major Leonard will leave for the west on private business at an early date.

WILL MEET CARRANZA.

Huerta's Envoys Willing To Discuss Settlement of Troubles.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 3.—Final notes exchanged yesterday between the principals in the Mexican peace delegations marked the actual ending of the A. B. C. mediation conference, which was begun here on May 20. The most interesting and significant communication was addressed to the mediators by the Huerta delegates, with a request that it be transmitted to the Constitutionalists' agency in Washington. In it the plenipotentiaries of Gen. Huerta express their willingness and readiness to confer informally with representatives of Gen. Carranza with a view to choosing a Provisional President of Mexico and adjusting the domestic problems that have torn the country asunder in the last four years.

The mediators yesterday made public the text of Gen. Carranza's response to their suggestion that he send representatives to confer with the Huerta plenipotentiaries. This response was sent in Gen. Carranza's name by the Constitutionalist agency in Washington. It expresses sympathy with the purpose of the mediators, and explains that it is necessary before making final answer to consult the generals of the Constitutionalists' army to obtain a modification of the revolutionary plan of Guadeloupe, which provides that Gen. Carranza shall become Provisional President of Mexico when the Constitutionalists take possession of the national capital. The Carranza note is regarded as generally favorable to the proposal that the Federals and the Constitutionalists should come together with the purpose of settling their country's domestic problems by amicable agreement, and it has encouraged some of those connected with the Mexico movement to believe that a conference of the Huerta and Carranza representatives will be held.

Small Band Left Mexico City.

MEXICO CITY, July 3.—In spite of the insistent advice of Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister, only 26 British subjects, mostly women and children, left for Vera Cruz at seven o'clock yesterday morning on their way to Jamaica. Several who had declared to leave were deterred from doing so at the last moment by the high rate of foreign exchange, the Mexico peso to-day being worth only 27 cents of American money.

Not Working For Profit.

LONDON, July 3.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Giving evidence before the Dominion's Commission yesterday Earl Grey said that nobody connected with the scheme of erecting an imperial building on the Aldwich site was working for a profit. The building was intended merely to display the produce of the dominions, not as a market commission. The commision meets here again in November, after visiting Canada.

Coal Schooner Wrecked.

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine, July 3.—The two-masted coal-laden schooner Mary Augusta was wrecked on the rocks of Walter's Point yesterday. Captain Tainter and the two men of his crew landed safely in their power boat before the vessel struck.

The Mary Augusta was built at Ellsworth forty-seven years ago and registered 175 tons net.

CABINET MEETS

Provincial Ministry's First Session After Election.

TORONTO, July 3. — With every member on hand the Ontario Cabinet held yesterday its first meeting since the election. The session was of a congratulatory order and little work was done.

On Tuesday next, however, a full Cabinet meeting will be held, when various unfinished business of importace that has had to wait for the election will be taken up.

The most pressing item before the Government at present is the appointment of commissioners to administer the Workmen's Compensation Act. It is expected that the appointment of commissioners will be made in the near future.

The future course of Hon. Dr. Reaume was not indicated yesterday, but a statement will probably be issued at the beginning of the week. The Minister spent the day attending to departmental business. He would not discuss his plans. It is stated, however, that Hon. Dr. Reaume will give up his portfolio and devote himself to his private interests.

The question of a successor, should the Minister drop out, is being canvassed. At the present time there is only one French-Canadian member on the Government side, Morel, of Nipissing, a man who has never taken much part in the proceedings of the House, and who cannot be considered as Cabinet material. The eastern part of the province is understood to be urging the promotion of one of three men from eastern ridings. Hon. Dr. Preston, T. W. McGarry of Renfrew and G. Howard Ferguson would be the most likely candidates.

BODY ON HIS LINE

Fisherman Brings Tragedy to Light.

HAILEYBURY, Ont., July 3.—What appears to be a case of foul play came to light yesterday when Joe Sherill fished up a dead body at the end of his line as he was angling at the end of the Haileybury wharf. The body of the man was identified as that of Frank O'Leary, a camp cook. There is a wound on the back of his head which doctors think may have caused death before he was thrown into the water.

A post-mortem is being held to ascertain as far as possible if the wound could have caused death. An inquest will be held to-day.

Save all the lemon hulls, drop them into the vessel in which you boil your tea towels, and it will whiten them wonderfully and there will be a clean freshness about them that is very desirable.

AUSTRIAN CAPITAL SCENE OF IMPRESSIVE CEREMONIAL

Court Train From Trieste Bearing Remains of Murdered Royal Couple is Received by Court Dignitaries, Church Notables and Military Escorts.

VIENNA, July 3. — The special court train from Trieste, conveying the bodies of the murdered Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, the Duchess of Hohenberg, arrived at the Southern Railway station here at 10 o'clock last night. Prince Montenuovo, the court chamberlain, and other high officials were in waiting.

Escorted by Halberdiers and Life Guardsmen, the coffins were carried to the imperial waiting room, which had been converted into a temporary chapel. Here they were blessed by court chaplains and then carried out and placed in two great black court hearses.

The funeral procession, which meantime had formed outside, started for the Hofburg. Two outriders, carrying lighted lanterns, led the cortege. They were followed by an advance guard of cavalry. Then came an official on horseback, known as the "Hofeinspanler," dressed in the picturesque costume of a Spanish cavalier.

The court carriages were next in line. Two outriders proceeded the hearses, each of which was drawn by six black horses. On either side walked non-commissioned officers and court lackeys. A special guard of twelve halberdiers and twelve mounted Life Guardsmen, with drawn swords followed the hearses, and two carriages with the suits of the archduke and the duchess completed the cortege. No troops were stationed along the route, but the procession made its way between the lines of a moving military guard. At the Hofburg the master of ceremonies and the palace clergy awaited the cortege at the foot of the ambassador's staircase, and walked slowly forward to meet it, preceded by the boy choir of the court chapel, chanting "Miserere."

The procession then advanced to the chapel with the Austrian and Hungarian Life Guards and halberdiers walking beside the coffins, which were attended by four noble pages, dressed in sombre costumes and carrying huge lighted wax tapers. The court chamberlain and other officials brought up the rear. The coffins were placed on an elevated catafalque, entirely covered with gold brocade with swinging canopy.

After a short benediction, the chamberlain of the late archduke handed the keys of the coffin to Prince Montenuovo, the chapel was locked and all departed.

The Hofburg Chapel is very small, accommodating not more than 200 persons and will prove utterly inadequate for such a ceremony as that of to-day.

All the seats have been removed and the walls and floor are covered with black cloth. On one of the walls hangs an escutcheon consisting of the archduke's arms. It is surrounded by silver sconces with lighted candles. The arms of the duchess similarly adorn the opposite wall.

Silver candlesticks holding wax tapers surround the catafalque, at the foot of which are cushions bearing the archduke's crown and the Austrian archducal two-pointed hat, his general's plumed hat and sword and all his orders and decorations.

At the foot of the coffin of the duchess repose her orders, a pair of long white kid gloves and her fan, in accordance with the Austrian custom.

The only other member of the imperial family who attended the ceremony last night was Archduke Charles Francis Joseph, now heir to the throne, who at the last moment decided to go to the station to meet the bodies. Immense crowds gathered around the station and along the whole route to the Hofburg, standing bareheaded and in profound silence as the cortege passed.

UNEMPLOYED MUST GO

Dominion Government Will Deport Public Charges.

Affects Immigrants Here Less Than Three Years.

OTTAWA, July 3. — Unemployed immigrants in Canadian cities who have been in Canada less than three years and have become public charges will be deported by the Immigration Department under the act after notification by the secretary of the municipality concerned.

This was the announcement made by Mr. W. D. Scott, superintendent of Immigration, last evening, and it furnishes a possible solution for some of the labor troubles which Canadian cities are experiencing just now. By far the largest proportion of those out of work in Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg and other centres are foreigners, and of these many have come to Canada within the last three years. If the secretary of the city certifies that certain of these people have become public charges—that is, have accepted charity or relief from charitable institutions—the department will carry out that clause of the Immigration Act which provides for their deportation at the expense of the transportation company which brought them here.

This announcement was made by Mr. Scott yesterday to a delegation of Bulgarians and Ruthenians which waited on him in regard to the problem of finding employment. The workings of the Immigration Act were explained to them, and they were told that it would be strictly enforced. They were, however, all offered employment on farms if they were willing to take it up, and this proposal will be considered by them.

HID FORTUNE IN GAME LEG

Diamonds Smuggled Into U. S. Under Bondage.

MONTREAL, July 3.—The firm of Aaronson & Rutlenberg is stated to have had nothing to do with the diamond men in trouble in New York except to sell them diamonds. It is said that one man was in the habit of coming to Montreal often to buy diamonds. The Montreal firm were not suspicious that an organized smuggling game was going on. They sold him the diamonds, for which he paid, and they were not concerned about whether he paid duty or not.

The man who has done the smuggling employed original methods to conceal the diamonds. It was his custom to travel backwards and forwards across the border with the diamonds wrapped in a small parcel, which, by means of bandages, he concealed about his leg. He appeared to have met with a long standing accident and had his leg bandaged. He limped and did not excite any suspicion. Beneath the bandages were diamonds to the extent of from $10,000 to $75,000.

FOUR BODIES ARE RECOVERED

Two Men and Two Women Released From Liner.

QUEBEC, July 3. — Diver Schinseng, of Mr. Wotherspoon's diving crew, recovered four more bodies from the Empress wreck yesterday, these being those of two men and two women. One of the women had jewels on her fingers, otherwise, owing to the condition of the bodies, there would be but little chance of identification.

Mr. Butler Aspinall, who represented the C. P. R. in the enquiry, left yesterday for England on the Alsatian, but the American lawyers for the Storstad and the other interested parties are likely to be here in person to hear the judgment of the tribunal, which will probably be rendered late next week. The commissioners are working hard every day, and have frequent meetings to study points of importance. Lord Mersey is regularly at his office in the courthouse.

WHARF COLLAPSES

Fifty Persons Precipitated Into Water.

SARNIA, July 3.—About fifty men, women and children were precipitated into the river at Stag Island on Wednesday night when the board walk leading over the water to the main dock gave way. The wildest confusion prevailed, and the shrieks of those in the water mingled with the exclamations of horror from the people on shore. Fortunately, the water was not deep, and the terror-stricken people were all hauled out to safety. One or two women fainted and several were slightly bruised. Had the accident occurred out where the current is swift a terrible tragedy might have resulted. As it was no one received more than a good ducking. The crowd started across the walk to the dock when the supports gave away and the people shot into the river as from a greased slide head first, feet first and every conceivable way.

HELD UP BY BANDITS

Erin Man is Relieved of His Watch and Money.

GUELPH, July 3.—Alven Carmichael of Erin was held up by two men on the Erin road Wednesday night about eight o'clock, and deprived of his watch and all the money he had on his person. Mr. Carmichael had been into Guelph on business and was on his way home when he was confronted by two men, one of whom seized the horse by the head, the other, who was armed, ordering him to hand over his watch and money. Mr. Carmichael, seeing the odds were against him, did as he was ordered. A short time before the hold-up took place, a farmer passing along the road noticed an automobile without lights on the side of the road near the point where Mr. Carmichael was held up, and it is thought that the highwaymen concerned in the affair, came in the machine. The automobile was traced as far as Erin Village. The only description that Mr Carmichael could give of the men is that one was tall and the other short, and that both wore peaked caps.

JURY FINDS DRIVER OF AUTOMOBILE WAS CARELESS

Toronto, July 3.—"We find that Mabel Marsh came to her death on the 20th of June, in the County of York, as the result of injuries received by being struck by an automobile driven by John B. Whaley.

"We believe the said John B. Whaley did not exercise due care in driving his car at the time of the accident or subsequently."

After a brief address by Coroner Dr. M. M. Crawford, this verdict was brought in yesterday afternoon, at the Town Hall in Thornhill. The one outstanding feature of the whole investigation was the fact that Whaley, after the accident, had been asked to stop his car and go back, but he would not do it. He was told repeatedly by two of the men in the auto that a girl had been struck; one of them even tried to stop the machine, but, notwithstanding, Whaley drove madly away from the scene of the accident. The evidence also showed that Whaley knew that there had been a fatal accident at the power house, on Yonge Street, before he went to serve as foreman on the jury. On account of the manslaughter charge against him, Whaley was not asked to give evidence.

Miss Marsh was killed a week ago last Saturday night, near the Metropolitan power house, on Yonge Street. The auto sped away after the accident. The driver, Whaley, served as foreman on the jury, and was arrested next day. The first inquest was declared void and a new one opened.

Sir Charles Tupper Is Active at Ninety-three

London, July 3.—Yesterday was Sir Charles Tupper's ninety-third birthday. Since returning to England he has lived quietly at Mount Bexley Heath, where he has always been pleased to receive calls from visitors from the Dominion.

Sir Charles' faculties are as vigorous as ever, and he is able to correct many a man sixty years his junior regarding dates, events and other matters of fact. Replying to the Canadian Press enquiry, Sir Charles expressed his thanks for the congratulations extended him, adding that he was glad to hear prospects for a crop in Canada are so good.

LISTEN TO THE PEOPLE

WHAT WILL ALLIANCE DO?

Editor Review:

Dear Sir,—Now that everything is calm in the aftermath of the election, I would like to know what are the intentions of The Lord's Day Alliance with regard to the desecration of the Sabbath by certain persons of one of the political parties in our city, who are well known and sinned in that respect. Are the seats of the mighty to be exempt from punishment while they are enforcing the law against the poor man whenever they can get a conviction? One conspicuous case was where a very respectable farmer who resided near Chatham, after a laborious week in harvest, was unable to save his last load of hay before Sunday, and when an impending thunder storm threatened its destruction or impairment, he merely hauled it into the barn for protection. For this work of necessity he was imprisoned in jail for one month by this so-called Lord's Day Alliance.

If this evil is not checked we may be sure that the other party will follow suit, when the observance of the Sabbath will be a thing of the past.

Yours truly,
SPECTATOR.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—Now that the battle is over, enquiries are being made as to who struck Billy Paterson. The little side currents and eddies which are created by the great stream of public opinion do not count any more than a little side current and eddy created by a great stream flowing to the sea. Where the main stream becomes like a great cause a source of trouble, the effect is tremendous. The change in West Peterborough is very trifling, because while Mr. Gillespie is the nominal member, Mr. Soden will have the patronage and will be consulted in all matters relating to West Peterborough and therefore he will be the real member. The unfortunate thing is that temperance was made a political issue and has been beaten as such. The consequence is that no political party will ever take it up again, but it will be taken up just as it suits the Government in power. The great impulse given to temperance work in the past by temperance people and the clergy will not exist, because what they urge will not be listened to. This is a very unfortunate condition of things because no one would deny that the clergy and the temperance people had the good of the people at heart. It shows how necessary it is to hasten slowly.

Yours truly,
WEST WARD.

A HAPPY TIME AT SANDY POINT

Y.M.C.A. Boys Are Enjoying Life to the Full.

Correspondence from Boys' Camp at Sandy Point:

The Y.M.C.A. Boys' Camp at Sandy Point is in full swing and the boys are having the time of their lives. Every boy in camp is in the best of health and how could he help it with the good big meals three times a day, and plenty of recreation and fun? The first night in camp was a hummer. The boys went to sleep at 3 o'clock and were up at 4 o'clock ready for a big time.

The boys are making all kinds of friends, every time the boys pass a cottage the people have a smile and a good word for them. Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald of Lakefield, are exceptionally kind to the boys and those in charge. When they arrived, Mrs. Fitzgerald kindly lent us everything that was necessary for to get started with.

The boys had a great time Wednesday night. Mr. Ivor Brock took the boys for a motor boat trip around the lake. It was a great sight to see the big war canoe towing behind the fast motor boat. When we arrived at Juniper Island, the boys noticed that Mr. Brock and Dr. Middleton were making their way up to the store, that was a sign that there was something doing, and sure there was. When Mr. Brock and Dr. Middleton came back, they had two big watermelons under each arm, for the boys. The four watermelons did not last long when the boys got going at them. The boys gave three cheers and a tiger for Mr. Brock and Dr. Middleton, and you ought to have heard them cheer. Mr. Brock has promised to take the boys on another trip.

Saturday night, Mr. Stubbs gives the boys their annual trip in his motor boat.

The following boys and leaders are at camp this year:

G. L. Galley, C. N. Meserve, Will Morris, Arthur Lewis, Roy White, Ruben Head, Maurice Pringle, Dewart Lewis, Jack Turner, Vernon Wall, Jack Hardill, Kneel Tewsley, Charlie Armstrong, Weldon Fanning, Jack Fanning, Kenneth Lang, Harold Lang, Robert Breckenridge, Arthur Johnstone, Edwin Johnstone, Herman Whitcroft, Herbert Mason, Don Hunter, Harold Gallop, Jack McCullough, John Martinson, Clifford Soden, Geo. Dunsford, Henry Sabine, Harold Devins, Stewart Thorndyke, Roderick Cameron, Ralph Meserve, Jack Tewsley.

We are off to Burleigh this afternoon for a hike to see the falls.

Friday is our Field Day, when a good program of sports will be run off.

The boys are expecting a large number of their parents up to their camp, Friday, Parents' Day.

The Boys' Bible Study every morning is proving a great success, not one boy has missed a morning at study so far.

FINED FOR ALLOWING CHICKENS AT LARGE

George Sexsmith, a south end resident, was fined $2 this morning by Magistrate Dumble for allowing his fowl to run at large.

The informant, Robinson, claimed that Sexsmith had swore at him and used vile language when he asked him to remove his chickens. "I said to him, to —— with his garden, and that I would give him a bag of cabbage in the fall," said Sexsmith.

"You wouldn't want any chickens to worry about in hell," remarked the Magistrate.

TO CENTRAL PRISON FOR SIX MONTHS

Conviction at Police Court on Theft Charge.

Found guilty of the charge of theft of $60 James Wallace having several convictions against him was sentenced to six months in Central Prison by Magistrate Dumble at this morning's session of Police Court. C. N. Widdifield of Gordon and Widdifield defended the prisoner who pleaded not guilty. At his previous hearing Wallace pleaded guilty.

Robert Elliott the complainant, swore he saw Wallace coming from his room at their boarding house on Bethune Stdeet. Shortly after he missed his money.

Detective Newhall and Detective Meagher, gave evidence as to an alleged confession of the prisoner.

HOT ASHES—FIRE.

The firemen answered a call at 9.30 last evening at 510 College St. A tenant had left the house yesterday morning but neglected to remove some hot ashes which were in the woodshed. They smouldered away all day and toward evening some neighbors noticed flames gushing forth and sent in an alarm via telephone. The brigade responded and soon had the flames extinguished. The damage was about $200.

AN HONOR FOR J. H. BURNHAM, M. P.

Membership in Authors' Club of London, England.

The honor has been extended to Mr. J. H. Burnham, Conservative member of Parliament for West Peterborough, of membership in the Authors' Club of London, England. The Authors' Club is situated at Whitehall Court in the immediate vicinity of the Houses of Parliament and possesses very handsome and commodious quarters. It was founded in 1891 and reconstructed in 1908 since which time it has enjoyed a large measure of success, not a little of which was due to the late Sir Walter Besant. Among its officers are such distinguished men as the Poet Laureate, Hall Caine, Andrew Carnegie, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Sir H. Rider Haggard, Sir Oliver Lodge, etc., etc.

Mr. Burnham's books which secured him the honor are "Canadians in the Imperial Service Abroad," the first account of a remarkable record of achievement, "Marcelle," a historical novel of the French regime in Canada highly commended by the French Historical Society, "Jack Halston," a tale of North-East Canada of which the Nelson Co. of Edinburgh, owners of the copyright, have issued several editions and a number of essays and minor publications. The honor was wholly unsolicited and is, Mr. Burnham says, much greater than he really deserves.

SAYS HE WAS ROBBED OF $60

James Kelly from the Backwoods has Hard Luck Story

James Kelly, a back country man, fairly well loaded with fire water, according to his own story, is poorer by some $90. A scribe found the delinquent James wandering in the vicinity of Simcoe Street at 2 o'clock this afternoon. His melancholy attitude softened the scribe's heart and he stopped the passing James. Conversation having been struck up, James wanted to know the nearest way to a hardware shop. He wanted a gun. He was out for blood. Evidently, from the man's story, he wandered into several of the hotels, each time imbibing a few drinks. During the rounds somebody had relieved him of the roll, which was resting in his right hand hip pocket. "This is the fourth time, each year, I have come to a city after working for two or three months, and have lost my roll," cried the indignant man.

The scribe informed the man his best course was to confer with the police. This course was not satisfactory to James.

Fined $10 and Costs For Assault

Magistrate Edmison rendered judgment to-day in the case of Archibald Miles of Dummer vs. Alcana Hull, also of Dummer, heard last Friday, and in which Hull was charged with assault. His Worship found the defendant guilty and fined him $10 and costs, amounting in all to $39.41.

The case of Stewart vs. Smith, in which the latter is charged with selling liquor in a local option district, has been left over, as the defendant has taken French leave. A warrant is out for his arrest.

MARGARET ANGLIN PROVIDES ALL FOR HER HUBBY

New York, July 3.—Testimony given before a referee in bankruptcy by Howard Hull, whose wife is Miss Margaret Anglin, actress, revealed that Mr. Hull has been supported by his wife since the time of their marriage three years ago. Mr. Hull admitted frankly and without hesitation that Miss Anglin furnished their house, paid his car fare, bought his clothing and provided him with all his spending money. He also admitted that he did not work, and had at the present time no means of livelihod except that provided by his wife.

The examination of Mr. Hull was before William H. Willis, the referee, of No. 88 Beaver street. It was to determine the ability of Mr. Hull to pay a judgment for $2,628.50 obtained against him several months ago by Katherine Cooper, a negress, who suffered permanent injuries when she was knocked down at Fifth and Thirty-third street on September 4, 1912, by an automobile owned by Mr. Hull. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hull were passengers in the automobile at the time. Since the judgment was obtained Mr. Hull has had to recourse to the bankruptcy courts.

Replying to questions of Thomas P. de Graffenrid, of No. 154 Nassau St., of counsel for the plaintiff, Mr. Hull said that his address was No. 61 East Ninety-third street.

"Do you keep house at that address?" asked Mr. De Graffenrid.

"My wife keeps house," replied Mr. Hull.

Mr. Hull testified that all the house furnishings belonged to his wife and that she paid all necessary expenses.

Mr. Hull said that he was by profession an actor, but that he had had no engagements to act for more than four years.

"I have read plays for my wife," he said, "and I have helped her as one would naturally expect a husband to help his wife. I might say that I was her personal representative. For instance, if you wanted to see my wife you would have to see me first unless you already knew her or one of her managers. But I received no salary for this work."

Miss Anglin was to have been examined the same day, but was taking a vacation with friends in a camp at North Creek, N.Y.

Margaret Anglin is well known to local theatre-goers having visited this city in several plays during the past few years.

STRANGE ACTION ON PART OF UNITED STATES

Appropriation for Peace Centenary Refused.

Ottawa, July 3.—Officers of the Canadian Peace Centenary Association, whose headquarters are in Ottawa, declined to comment upon the action of the United States House of Representatives in voting to refuse an appropriation for the celebration of the hundred years of peace.

The siutation is regarded as a peculiar one. The original proposition for the celebration came from the United States. It was that country which made the overtures, which were responded to by Canada, the Government here expressing its approval of the move, while subsequently Parliament voted $25,000. Such of this amount as has been expended, however, has been for preliminary expenses.

The action of the House of Representatives, under the circumstances is considered as strange, to say the least. It is pointed out, however, that the bill has not been finally defeated, the vote on Monday in a slim House being in the nature of a preliminary skirmish. If it should be insisted on, the whole project, officially, will be off, for the Dominion Government's participation was contingent upon similar action by other Governments.

Searching in Canada For Missing Heiress

A search for a lady who is heiress to a huge fortune is being made in Canada and in the old country.

The story, which is a romantic one, and is more or less veiled in mystery, is believed, nevertheless, to be genuine, as advertisements, together, with the portrait of the wanted lady are being used.

The lady's name is Mrs. Rose Kenham, who before she was married was Rose White, and whose girlhood is stated to have been spent in Doncaster, Yorkshire, England. There are several families in Doncaster of the name of "White," and among these searching inquiries are being made, so far without success.

The missing lady is stated to be the heiress to a title, a fortune of one million pounds, the family plate, and a great estate, the claim for which must be put in before the 10th of August of this year.

Traced to Western Canada.

A letter, a postcard portrait, and a Post Office order were received at the offices of one of the Doncaster weekly newspapers. The writer stated he was anxious to get into touch with a niece of his who formerly lived in Doncaster, and had since, he believed, been right round the world. After giving her name and maiden name, the uncle stated that what year his niece left Doncaster he was unable to say.

But whenever it was, he continued, there is evidence that she found her way to Australia, and remained there till April 20, 1911, just over three years ago. From Australia she was traced to Canada, having been last heard of in Regina, Saskatchewan.

A month's search has been made in the Dominion, so the uncle wrote, but nothing more satisfactory than the photograph of Mrs. Kenham, nursing a baby, was found. This, it appears, was given to her by a friend, who thinks she sailed for England some time ago.

"She is now a Countess, has been left a million pounds, also a great estate, and all the family plate," runs the uncle's letter.

The Athabasca Trail

By Sir Arthur Conan Doyle.

My life is gliding downwards; It speeds swifter to the day,
When it shoots the last dark canon
to the Plains of Far-away,
But while its stream is running through the years that are to be,
The mighty voice of Canada will ever
call to me.
I shall hear the roar of rivers where the rapids foam and tear,
I shall smell the virgin upland with its balsam-laden air,
And shall dream that I am riding
down the winding woody vale,
With the packer and the packhorse
on the Athabasca Trail.

I have passed the warden cities at the Eastern water-gate,
Where the hero and the martyr laid
the corner stone of State,
The habitant, coureur-des-bois and hardy voyageur,
Where lives a breed more strong at need to venture or endure?
I have seen the gorge of Erie where the roaring waters run,
I have crossed the Inland Ocean, lying golden in the sun,
But the last and best and sweetest is the ride by hill and dale,
With the packer and the packhorse
on the Athabasca Trail.

I'll dream again of fields of grain that stretch from sky to sky,
And the little prairie hamlets, where the cars go roaring by,
Wooden hamlets as I saw them—noble cities still to be
To girdle stately Canada with gems from sea to sea;
Mother of a mighty manhood, Land
of glamour and of hope,
From the eastward sea-swept Islands
to the sunny western slope,
Ever more my heart is with you,
ever more till life shall fail,
I'll be out with pack and packhorse
on the Athabasca Trail.

—Arthur Conan Doyle.

MANY CADETS NOW IN CAMP

Niagara-on-the-Lake, July 3. —There are about 2,500 fine specimens of the Canadian boy, of all sizes, under canvas for the week. Some came in red coats, others in full khaki uniform, just like regular soldiers, and they present a splendid appearance when drawn up on the historic commons. Most of them are from Toronto, but nearly every city and town in No. 2 military division has its quota.

"They are a remarkably fine lot of boys, and unusually healthy," was the report of Lt.-Col. G. L. Foster, who conducted a thorough medical inspection and found less than a dozen boys unfit, and these had only such trivial ailments as sore hands and feet. Dominion Day was marked by a brisk morning's drill, with the firing of a feu de joie at noon, and in the afternoon the youngsters did as they liked between showers.

There are two brigades. One, of seven battalions, is composed of the Public School Cadets, under Lt.-Col. J. T. Thompson, of Toronto, while the High School Cadets, in four battalions, are under Lt.-Col. J. V. T. Preston. Each will have its distinctive syllabus of training as befitting junior and senior boys. The seniors include the cadet companies of the Q.O.R., Grenadiers and De la Salle Institute of Toronto, and the Eighteenth mounted Cadets of the Mississauga Horse, all of Toronto. Hon. Lt.-Col. E. W. Hagarty commands the Toronto high school battalion to which the Collingwood, Newmarket, Port Perry, Whitby and Uxbridge companies are attached. He has donated two cups, for rifle shooting and athletics. Other prizes, too, are up for competition for rifle shooting by individuals and by teams.

The camp life begins at six a.m. daily. The morning is spent in drill and lectures, and for the rest of the day the boys can romp. Morning prayer is conducted by Rev. Canon Garrett (Anglican), and Rev. Brother Rogatior (R.C.)

The camp menu is of the best. Breakfast consists fresh milk, porridge, eggs or meat, alternately, bread and butter, tea, coffee and fruit. For dinner they are given roast or stew, two vegetables, pudding or pie, tea, coffee or milk. For tea the menu is eggs or cold meat, hot biscuits, fruit stewed or fresh, tea, coffee or milk.

Sir Rodolphe Forget Ill.

QUEBEC, July 3.—Sir Rodolphe Forget has been stricken with an attack of appendicitis at his summer residence of St. Irene les Bains. He will be operated upon as soon as his condition improves sufficiently. Sir Rodolphe is under the care of Dr. Lanouet.

Sir Rodolphe was threatened with appendicitis some weeks ago, but recovered.

BIG STEEL BRIDGE ON G. T. P. COMPLETED

Advice has been received at headquarters in Montreal that the Grand Trunk Pacific is now carrying passengers from Fort William to Prince George, B.C., over an all rail route, a distance of 1729 miles. As the steel bridge across the Fraser River at Prince George has now been completed, trains will run directly to and from Prince George station and no ferry transfer is necessary.

From Prince Rupert, Eastward, passenger service is in operation to Priestley, 337 miles, and while steel is laid over the gap between Priestley and Prince George work is going forward to bring the roadbed up to the highest standard before inaugurating through passenger service between Winnipeg and the Pacific Coast terminal of the line.

Linking Up Vancouver With Main Line of the Grand Trunk Pacific

Splendid progress is being made on the construction of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway, which will link up the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific at Prince George with the City of Vancouver.

The Pacific Great Eastern is at the present time operating a suburban train service between North Vancouver Ferry Landing at Lonsdale Ave., and Dundarave, West Vancouver, a distance of five miles. Early next month they expect to extend this service to Horseshoe Bay, about thirteen miles from the ferry landing. They are also at the present time carrying traffic between Squamish, at the head of Howe Sound, and Cheakamus, a distance of about eleven miles.

The track on this latter section is now being extended northerly. Grading between the end of track and Lillooet, where the line crosses the Fraser River, one hundred miles north of Vancouver, is practically finished, but on account of unfinished bridging, it is not expected that track will be into Lillooet before late in the fall of this year.

The entire balance of the line between Lillooet and Prince George is under contract, and it is expected that a force of 6,000 men will be employed to insure the earliest possible completion of the work. It is impossible to say yet when the line will be finished, although the engineers hope to have the line to Prince George graded by the end of this year.

Enterprising.

"You want my consent to marry my daughter?" said Mr. Cumrox.

"I do," replied the young man.

"But my daughter says she wouldn't think of marrying you."

"Still your consent would be a good recommendation for me with some other family."—Washington Star.

HORSEMEN ARE SORE AT PORT HOPE OFFICIALS

Claim Conditions Did Not Warrant Calling Off of Yesterday's Program and Will Boycott the Track.

The calling off of yesterday's program of races by the Port Hope Turf Association has created a bitterness against the officers of that organization which promises to deprive Port Hope of any kind of an entry list at the next meet the association will hold under the sanction of the Central Ontario Turf Association. The Port Hope Turf Association was given membership in the central body on the understanding that two days of racing would be provided and the purses be of the required amount.

On July 1, thousands of people jammed the race course and the Port Hope men cleaned up something in the neighborhood of $2,300. The day was far worse than yesterday but for some reason or other the men behind the Port Hope Club took advantage of a clause in the Central Association's constitution which allows a club tocancel any or all races providing the weather is adverse. Men who have followed the saddle and sulky all their lives claim that the Port Hope track was in better shape yesterday than it was on the holiday and that there was a sufficient crowd on hand and enough eager to attend to go ahead and that the weather conditions were far more favorable than the day previous. It is claimed that the Port Hope officials broke all traditions of the horseman showing the white feather and calling the program off in order that the profit of $2,300 of Dominion Day would not be disturbed. About $500 covered all the purses in yesterday's scheduled events but the Port Hope men although they made more than $2,000 on July 1 acopted the John Bull attitude of "What we have we hold."

They held it all right but not until all the horse owners on the track had spoken to the officials in a scathing manner. The calling off of the program meant a lot of money to several local men and owners in the vicinity and unless some restitution is made to reimburse the owners for the loss they faced, Port Hope will be given a wide berth from now on.

Local men who were at Port Hope state that the scenes around the secretary's office were the stormiest in the history of horse racing in Central Ontario.

ERIE BUNCHED THEIR HITS

Petes Dropped First Game to Yanks.

DOLAN ON THE JOB

Dolan, the Petes' new first sacker had a successful day on his first base at Erie yesterday when he cracked out two singles. It was the big Irishman's first appearance with the local club. Although the Petes outhit the Yanks they failed to bunch them and the Sailors came from behind and pounded out a win in the seventh and eighth.

Erie, July 2.—Erie won a see-saw game from Peterboro today by the score of 7 to 4. The locals hit Sterling hard in the latter innings, but Peterboro served Morse nearly as well. After the sixth inning Morse tightened up, while his support got to Sterling for five hits, a single, three doubles and a triple.

COMMENT

As You Like It

It looks like war between the Port Hope Turf Association officials and the horse owners. Yesterday's program was called off, the Port Hope officials claiming that the track was in bad shape. On the other hand the horsemen claim the track was in better shape than it has been all summer, claiming that the rains helped it. On July 1 the Port Hope officials made more than $2,000 and it is claimed that fear of a small gate was the chief reason for calling the races off yesterday. When the Peterboro Club conducted its meet here under the auspices of the Central Ontario Turf Association the opening day crowd could have been covered with a blanket. It was the same the second day and the only race which was cancelled was the free for all. Members of the local club paid the deficit from their own pockets for the sake of the sport.

The Erie Yanks seem to have something on the Petes. Yesterday the Sailors came through in the seventh and eighth and scored four runs which proved enough to win. Despite the loss the Petes are still out of the cellar but the trap door which holds the Athletics in the basement is liable to take a drop if the Petes happen to lose and the Athletics win today as only three points separate them.

Doc Yates is to be deposed as manager of the Hamilton club and the directors are angling for the services of Dave Rowan and "Buck" Freeman. Some favor Freeman while those who want a player manager, like Rowan. Probably "Buck" could go in as a pinch hitter and make good even if he is not a spring chicken any more. At any rate it is the curtain for Doc Yates whose chief fault seemed to be that he was too good natured with his players and did not possess sufficient of the initiative.

It was Mark Twain that once said: I tell you boys that every proposition that sounds good is not a good sound proposition. The advice is still sound.

BOBBIE DIBBLE LOST IN FINALS

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

McINTOSH—PRATT.

A quiet wedding was celebrated on Wednesday afternoon, July 1st, the Rev. S. Harper Gray officiating, when Miss Pauline Isabella (Pearl) Pratt, B.A., youngest daughter of Mrs. Helen A. Pratt of Toronto, formerly of Peterboro, became the wife of Mr. William Gourlay McIntosh, B.A. Sc., youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. James McIntosh of Seaforth, Ont., only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties being present. The bride, wearing ivory satin with veil and orange blossoms, entered the drawing room on the arm of her brother, Mr. R. A. Pratt, to the strains of the wedding march played by little Miss Helen Roberts of Windsor, niece of the bride. After August 1st Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh will be at home at 280 Dupont St., Toronto.

MENZIES—WEIR.

Kingston Whig.

A pretty June wedding was solemnised at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Weir, Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, when their only daughter Anna May, was united in marriage to Earl Roy, only son of Donald Menzies, Peterboro. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. MacGillivray of Chalmers Presbyterian Church, in the drawing room, under a bell canopy and a bower of ferns and Marguarites. As the bride entered the drawing room, resting on the arm of her father, who gave her away, Mrs. Harry Ralston, of Toronto, cousin of the bride, played the Lohengrin wedding march.

The bride wore a gown of ivory, charmeuse satin and a train, the bodice being trimmed with old point lace and pearls. The cap and veil were caught with orange blossoms and the bridal bouquet was a shower of white roses and lilies of the valley. Little Miss Dorothy Lappage, of Toronto, flower girl, was becomingly gowned in pink silk and shadow lace. She carried a basket of pink sweet peas and wore the groom's gift of a torquoise ring.

A buffet luncheon was served on the bride's table, which looked beautiful, the wedding cake forming a centrepiece which was surrounded by tulle and white, bridal roses.

LIBRARY NOTES

A Few Words on Reference Work.

It is very hard, in any library, to get the full benefit therefrom unless one is conversant with the way in which its contents are catalogued. As a help to those who patronize it regularly as well as to those who make casual use of it a few notes on how to delve into its treasures are herewith given.

It must be distinctly understood, in the first place, that the catalogue proper by no means exhausts the entire resources of the Library. There are no less than four different branches of the catalogue but the public never seems to get beyond the one that deals in a general way with fiction and the other classes of literature in the stack-room. Besides this catalogue there are the Juvenile Catalogue, the Reference Room Catalogue and the one that deals with the vast amount of information stowed away in the Pamphlet cases in the basement. There are no less than 58 of these cases filled with all sorts of brochures, articles, and clippings on diversified subjects. Besides these there is a special catalogue devoted to maps and as the Library is being continually supplied with maps from Ottawa its ability to meet the needs of the public is well evidenced. Many people do not know how to use the card catalogue in spite of the fact that printed rules are placed on the case for their benefit. The main thing necessary is to be sure of what one is looking for. In a card catalogue such as ours the problem is rendered exceptionally easy owing to the fact that almost every phase of a subject is represented by a card. In fiction every book is represented by two cards, one giving the author's name and the other the title of the book. But in every other class of literature there are at least three cards, giving respectively the author, title and subject of a book. Thus, for a work on Chemistry, a card is given headed Chemistry, another one gives the author's name and a third the title of the work. In many cases where a book deals with three or four important subjects a card is placed in the catalogue for each of these subjects and therefore the best and most rational way to consult a card catalogue is first to look for the author's name, and if by any chance the work of which you are in search has been omitted from the list of books under that name, then turn to the title of the book and failing even that source seek for the information you need under the title of the subject dealt with in the book.

Besides the cards already enumerated there are others bearing the cryptic letters S.B. These simply imply that the information sought for is to be found in Scrap-Book No. 1, 2 or 3 or whatever is denominated on the card.

There are very many most valuable aids to the general reader in the Reference Room and books are being constantly added which enhance its value to scholars and casual readers alike. The latest addition and one of the most important yet made is the Dictionary of National Biography which was lately purchased by the Library Board. It is in 25 volumes and contains within its covers practically all that is needed concerning the lives of those who have been distinguished in the public life of the British empire. It is a monumental work authoritative and absolutely reliable.

Home-Brew, the Slogan For Merchants' Picnic

Everybody is working toward the success of the Retail Merchants' Picnic, which will be held at T.A.S. Park, Thursday, July 16.

A strong feature of the arrangements is that home talent will be patronized. Every department of the picnic will be home-brew.

Arrangements have been practically decided to have three steamers for the accommodation of the big crowds. A half-hour service will be given.

BALLOONIST DROWNED.

Halifax, July 3.—The career of Joseph Stanley Purcell, the Halifax aviator and balloonist, was tragically ended at 7.15 last evening, when he was drowned in the Avon River at Windsor while making a landing from a balloon. The wind carried him over the river, and when it was seen he was likely to hit the river, boats were sent out. The aviator was a strong swimmer, and immediately struck out to reach the shore, but within 20 yards from the Avondale shore he suddenly sank, supposedly because of cramps. The body has not been recovered.

24 BANK FAILURES SINCE CONFEDERATION

In Fifteen Out of the Twenty-four, Depositors Received Payment in Full

Since Confederation there have been twenty-four bank failures in Canada. Today we have but twenty-four chartered banks in Canada, but in the earlier history of the country there were almost double that number. Between mergers and failures, the number of banks has decreased until there are now only about half the number of banks possessed a quarter of a century ago. Even as late as a dozen years ago, Canada bad thirty-nine banks.

In fifteen out of the twenty-four failures, the depositors were paid in full, which makes a very satisfactory record. The total loss to the public as a result of the two dozen failures which have taken place in the country amounted to $6,674,065, the heaviest losses resulting from the Peoples' Bank, which failed in 1895 with a total loss to the public of $1,618,500. The Bank of Ville Marie, which failed in 1899 with a loss of $1,241,174, and the Farmers' Bank, which failed in 1910 with a loss to the public of $1,567,571. The other losses were under $1,000,000, the Maritime Bank, which failed in 1887, with a loss of $750,000, principal being the Exchange Bank in 1893 with a loss of $690,000, and the Prince Edward Island Bank in 1881 with a loss of $450,000. The rest of the failures involved comparatively small losses so far as the public was concerned. The following is a list of the banks which have failed since Confederation, with their paid-up capital and the losses to the public:

Name of Bank.	Year failed.	Capital paid up.
Commercial of N. B.	1868	$600,000
Bk. of Acadia, N.S.	1873	100,000

Commercial Bank .	1892	600,000
Peoples' Bank	1895	600,000
Ville Marie Bank .	1899	479,620
Bank of Yarmouth.	1905	300,000
Ontario Bank	1906	1,600,000
Sovereign Bank ...	1908	3,000,000
Banque St. Jean ..	1908	316,386
Bk. of St. Hyacinthe	1908	331,225
Bk. of St. Stephens	1910	200,000
Farmers' Bank ..	1910	567,579

Losses to the public:

Bank of Acadia	$ 106,914
Mechanics	232,576
Bank of Liverpool	3,670
Prince Edward Island ..	450,000
Exchange Bank	690,000
Maritime Bank	750,000
Central Bank	614,262
People's Bank	1,618,500
Ville Marie Bank	1,241,174
Farmers Bank	1,567,571

In addition to the failures which have taken place, there have been a large number of mergers and absorptions, the smaller banks finding it increasingly difficult to carry on business owing to competition and the cost of establishing branches. The probability is that there will be additional mergers take place until the banking business of the country is concentrated in the hands of a comparatively few powerful banks. In 1870, the following absorptions and amalgamations have taken place in Canada: The Bank of Montreal absorbed the Bank of Yarmouth in 1903, the Peoples' Bank of Halifax in 1905 and the Peoples' Bank of New Brunswick in 1907.

Canadian Bank of Commerce absorbed the Gore Bank in 1870, the Bank of British Columbia in 1901, the Halifax Banking Company in June, 1903, the Merchants Bank of Prince Edward Island in 1906, and the Eastern Townships Bank in 1912. Royal Bank of Canada absorbed the Union Bank of Halifax, which previously had absorbed the Traders Bank. The Union Bank of Canada absorbed the United Empire Bank in 1900. The Standard Bank absorbed the Western in 1909 and the St. Lawrence Bank in 1875. The Bank of Nova Scotia absorbed the Union of Prince Edward Island in 1882, the Pictou Bank in 1885, and the Bank of New Brunswick in 1912. Although there have been twenty-four failures among chartered banks in Canada since Confederation, the history of banking in the Dominion compares favorably with that of any other country in the world. Under our banking laws such rigid restrictions have been placed around our banks that there is little or no likelihood of any of the disastrous failures of the past being repeated. Canada has reason to be proud of her banking institutions.

RELIC OF GREAT CHIEF PONTIAC

Medal Won by Indian Warrior Unearthed in Pawn Shop.

New York, July 3.—Rescued at a trifling price from neglect in an obscure corner of a New York pawnshop window, one of the rarest of the Indian medals of America has passed into the possession of Thomas L. Elder, numismatist, of 32 East Twenty-third Street. The medal is of silver and is 61 millimeters in diameter. Its intrinsic value is about $2, but its rarity and association, Mr. Elder says, make it worth at least $20.

It was the medal worn possibly by the great Indian warrior Pontiac, or at any rate by one of the chiefs under him. Pontiac was the principal chief of the three tribes, Ottawas, Objibways and Pottawattamies. In 1746 he defended the French at Detroit against an attack by some of the northern tribes, and in 1755 he is believed to have led the Ottawas at Gen. Braddock's defeat. In 1762 he formed a great conspiracy among the Indian tribes. Many forts were taken by surprise, and their garrisons were massacred.

Pontiac himself besieged Detroit, but failed to capture it. Finally on July 23, 1766, Pontiac and his Indian chiefs concluded a treaty at Oswego with Sir William Johnson. Pontiac was murdered in 1769 by a Kaskaskia Indian, who had been bribed by a barrel of liquor and a promise of additional reward.

Only Six Now Exist.

After the treaty was signed Sir William Johnson presented gifts to Pontiac and the other Indian warriors. Among those gifts were the silver medals. Only five or six of them are now known to exist. On the obverse is the legend, "Georgius in Dei Gratia," and below it an armored bust of the King to the right, wearing the ribbon of the Garter. On the reverse to the right is a lion reclining, and at the left is a wolf snarling at him. In the background are a church and several houses. Behind the wolf are trees and shrubbery.

Many years ago one of these medals was found on Presque Isle at the mouth of the Shawnee River in the grave of Otussa, a son of Pontiac, and it was said that it was the identical medal worn by Pontiac at the time of his murder. What became of this medal is not known. The lion on the reverse is supposed to represent Great Britain and the wolf to represent France. The medals were struck at the mint in Philadelphia. One of them is owned by the Numismatic Society of this city. Mr. Elder will probably offer his specimen to the Michigan Historical Society.

At the top of the medal is a small hole through which a ribbon or cord was passed so that the medal might be worn suspended from the recipient's neck.

Humor and Philosophy

POSSIBLE RELIEF.

SHOULD Theodore charter
The boats in a fleet
And forward his killings
The prices of meat
From places exalted
A tumble would take,
And how we would revel
In elephant steak!

Beef barons would tremble
As over the wave
The fat of the jungle
Was hurried to save
A trust ridden people
And bid them to break
Their fast with a feasting
On elephant steak.

Each crack of his rifle
A township would feed,
And plenty would flourish,
And no one would need.
The price boosting dealers
In terror would quake
As on came the windfall
Of elephant steak.

Then let us take courage,
Relief may be near.
For soon via wireless
Good news we may hear.
The waiter who passes
Our order to take
May say, "Rare or frizzled,
Your elephant steak?"

Not He.

"I suppose he has a good time all the time."

"Well, he doesn't."

"What?"

"Not a bit of it."

"Why, I thought he was a millionaire."

"He is. That is the reason he can afford to kick all the time and find fault with everything, and nobody has the nerve to poke his blamed head and teach him a little sense.

Save It at All Hazards.

"What is the good of ventriloquism anyway?"

"It would be fine for our high priced opera singers."

"In what way?"

"In case of a fire they could throw their voices out of the window the same as they do their trunks."

Any Race.

"Pa?"

"Yes, my son."

"What is the race problem?"

"The race problem?"

"Yep."

"How we shall beat the other fellows to it and take their grub away from them."

Hard Enough at That.

Search for the fourth dimension
At once should be cut short,
For in these times we find that three
Is all we can support.

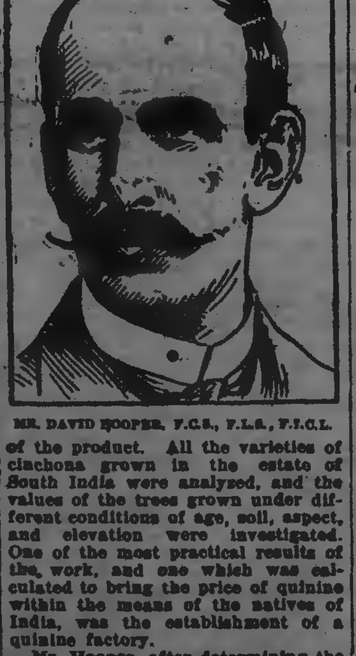
CELEBRATED EXPERT IN QUINOLOGY IS VISITING BROTHER IN CANADA

David Hooper, Who Has Achieved the Highest Honors to Be Secured In His Profession, Went to India In 1884 to Study and Develop Quinine Production—Honorary LL.D. From McMaster.

Mr. David Hooper, one of the most distinguished chemists in the world, who has been visiting his brother, Mr. J. Hooper, of Toronto, recently, has had a career of great interest. In 1907 he was awarded the Hamburg Medal, the world's highest honor in pharmacy. For thirty years he conducted scientific work in India, but is now retired.

Mr. Hooper was born in Redhill, Surrey, Eng., on May 1, 1858. In 1873 he was apprenticed in a pharmacy in London. On leaving London he went to Cambridge and Clifton, and took up the study of botany by attending lectures, and with the use of Babington's "Manual" he made a collection of seven hundred British plants, which was awarded the bronze Herbarium medal of the Pharmaceutical Society in 1878. Next year he entered the School of Pharmacy, and carried off the silver medals in botany, materia medica, and practical chemistry, and in 1880 the Pereira medal, the blue ribbon of pharmacy, was awarded to him.

His first paper read before the Students' Association, "The Medicinal Flora of Afghanistan," indicated the direction of his future life-work, and a subsequent paper on the "Coffee-leaf Diseases of Ceylon" showed a predilection for a life in the East. He became chemist in Birmingham, and in 1884 he applied for the post of quinologist to the Madras Government, advertised through the India Office, and the committee, consisting of Sir Joseph Fayrer, Sir George Birdwood, and Dr. Macnamara, had little hesitation in selecting Mr. Hooper for the appointment out of about thirty candidates.



MR. DAVID HOOPER, F.C.S., F.L.S., F.I.C.L.

Mr. Hooper arrived in Ootacamund in the Nilgiri Hills that fall, and plunged into the various problems of the chemistry of cinchona cultivation, made thousands of analyses of the bark, and suggested methods for increasing and improving the value of the product. All the varieties of cinchona grown in the estate of South India were analyzed, and the values of the trees grown under different conditions of age, soil, aspect, and elevation were investigated. One of the most practical results of the work, and one which was calculated to bring the price of quinine within the means of the natives of India, was the establishment of a quinine factory.

Mr. Hooper, after determining the composition of cinchona bark grown under different conditions, turned his attention to the numerous vegetable products used by the inhabitants or sold in the bazaars, and proceeded to examine them chemically. During his residence in South India he became consulting agricultural chemist in all the planting districts where cinchona tea and coffee were cultivated, and for two years was examiner in chemistry to the University of Madras.

In 1896 Mr. Hooper was appointed to officiate for Dr. George Watt, in Calcutta, as reporter on economic products to the Government of India, and in 1897, when the post of Government Quinologist was abolished in Madras, he became curator of the industrial section of the Indian Museum. The large number of samples constantly being received in the museum from all parts of India offered a vast field for research, and with the permission of the trustees a chemical laboratory was established, and Mr. Hooper, single-handed, commenced the elucidation of their active constituents. It was a change from the salubrious heights of the Nilgris to the steamy plains of Lower Bengal, and many another man might have grown disgusted and retired or have been invalided home, but he was too devoted to his subject to be affected by climatic conditions.

Mr. Hooper's wife and family lived for years in Switzerland, not being able to stand the climate of India. When he retired, Mr. Hooper was Economic Botanist of the Botanical Survey of India.

McMaster University conferred the degree of LL.D. on Mr. Hooper a few days ago.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON IN GOLFING COSTUME

The Church and the Press recently played a game of golf at London, the rival sides being captained by the Bishop of London and Mr. Robert Donald, editor of The Daily Chronicle. The Press defeated the clerics although Bishop Ingram triumphed over Mr. Donald. The Bishop of London is no stranger in Canada, where he has a brother, a farmer, near Aylmer, Ontario.

WHERE IS BRUCE ISMAY?

Said to be Hidden in Desolate Part of Ireland.

Costello, Galway Bay, Ireland, July 3.—Where is Bruce Ismay? During two years the director arraigned for the tragedy of the Titanic has been missing from the world he knew.

The loneliest road in Ireland runs from Minna to Costello along the shore of Galway bay. Sheer moor, quite treeless, bleak beyond words, hardly a stone cabin in sight and no path but the straight mail road. More sterile than Donegal, more pitiful than Clare, the strange network of grey land and greyer water constitutes the country of Iar Connacht.

In the heart of this Irish wilderness a solitary lodge shows white against its surrounding path of greens. A locked gate forbids entrance. Here lives Bruce Ismay. Money he has and all that money will buy. But he cannot shake off the memories on his mind. Day after day he must hear them—the shrieks of drowning men crying down the wind. This is his curse. What he did will be remembered until the Titanic is forgotten.

A Meaning Remark.

"Isn't it disgusting the way she brags about her beauty?"

"Why, I did not hear her say a word about it."

"Didn't she say she entered a crowded car last evening and every man in it jumped up and offered her his seat?"

SEES DANGER IN CRIME MOVIES

Making Heroes of Criminals Not Right, Says Pinkerton.

Grand Rapids, Mich., July 3.—William A. Pinkerton, head of the Pinkerton National Detective Agency, in speaking before the annual convention of the International Association of Police Chiefs here, assailed the moving pictures detailing with crime as a menace to the youth of this country.

"The motion picture is now, and will become more so, one of the greatest educational factors in modern life," said Pinekrton, "and its responsibility to the welfare of the world is of the widest and keenest public concern.

"Train hold-ups, bank burglaries, acts of pocket picking, counterfeiting, black band methods, gunmen tactics, highway robbery and other kinds and degrees of outlawry, or any picture story that embellishes disregard for law, should never be tolerated by promoters or officials. No professional class of rogues or roguery should be honored by a moving picture display. It is an easy way to make heroes and martyrs of criminals. The community interest of every self-respecting people cannot be too active with ways and means to crush this evil tendency."

To illustrate his point, Mr. Pinkerton referred to the picture film on the Rosenthal murder case in New York and various other widely advertised crimes being shown broadcast with ill effects on the youth of the country.

"How can we expect the young, shiftless and vicious to have any respect for law and its representatives if pictures are freely exhibited showing policemen to be both fools and crooks?" demanded Mr. Pinkerton. "There are no men in the public service who render a better account for the faith reposed in them than these officers."

In no uncertain terms the detective chief scored the mercenary motives back of the staging of sensational pictures dealing in a thinly veiled and insinuating manner with scenes of the underworld and similar subjects.

HINTS FOR SMOKERS.

How To Get the Best Results From Your Favorite Pipe.

A good meerschaum pipe demands plenty of attention. If you carry it loose in your pocket pieces of grit will scratch it. Keep it in a case except when actually smoking it.

If you wish to color a meerschaum, bear these few points in mind. Use a strong tobacco at first, shag for preference. Put a plug at the bottom of the bowl. Ordinarily the bottom of the bowl colors before the upper part, but this plug reverses the process. When the top of the pipe has become an even brown remove the plug.

Don't smoke the meerschaum in a high wind or when out in the rain. The wind may color it unevenly, the rain will spot it. Don't let it get too hot, and be careful not to scratch it with your finger-nails.

The best pipe to smoke is a briar. Clean it out once a week by running a piece of string through the stem, and it will give you just as good a smoke and less trouble than a meerschaum, clay, or calabash. String makes a better pipe-cleaner than a feather, as it goes right through the stem and out at the bowl, whilst the feather comes back the same way as it enters. Whenever possible, scrape out ashes in preference to knocking the bowl against any hard substance, as constant knocking causes the bowl to crack. But don't scrape away all the carbon from inside the bowl—just leave a thin coating.

Some smokers always light their cigarettes with wax vestas and their pipes with wooden matches. The liquid wax drips on to the tobacco and taints it. The unpleasant taste of a brand-new pipe can be banished by burning some grass in it.

HAVELOCK HAPPENINGS

Havelock, July 3.—A number of our young people enjoyed the dance at Trent River on Wednesday.

Mr. Meyers of Toronto is the guest of Mr. J. Barlow.

Mr. Stan Copp of North Bay is home for his holidays.

Mrs. G. R. McGregor is visiting relatives in Niagara Falls.

Miss Mary Hough of Toronto is the guest of Mrs. H. T. Andrews.

Mr. John Wright of Port McNichol spent Sunday at his home here.

Miss Hutchinson of the Toronto public school staff is home for the summer holidays.

Mr. Philip Livingstone, of Pontiac, Mich., is the guest of his nephew Mr. Wm. Livingstone.

Miss Flossie Chiles of Peterboro is the guest of her sister Mrs. J. V. A. Carr, at the latter's cottage at Round Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Armstrong were in Toronto last week attending the funeral of a cousin of Mrs. Armstrong.

Mrs. C. Donnelly and Miss Thelma are in Watertown, visiting their daughter and sister Mrs. Jno. Farmer.

Mrs. W. Holcombe was one of the local delegates to the Woman's Missionary Society Convention held in Trenton last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Seabrooke and family spent a few days last week with the latter's brother, Mr. J. Beatty, Pleasant View Farm, Frankford.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Graham and daughter, Lila Shirley, of Winnipeg, Man., spent Sunday with the former's sister, Mrs. S. McGill.

Messrs. H. T. Andrews, G. R. McGregor, Wm. Livingstone, and Dr. Thompson were in St. Catharines as delegates of Demosthenes Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at the golden jubilee international celebration, and field day of the Grand Lodge of the Ontario Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Jas. Thompson of town was re-elected to represent the east riding of Peterboro in the Legislature, on Monday, with a majority of 500 over his opponent, Mr. W. Anderson of Otonabee. The result shows us that the temperance propaganda did not have much influence in this riding, and that the electors were apparently well satisfied with the policy of the Whitney Government, and the stewardship of his follower, Mr. Thompson.

LOUIS BRAILLE WAS BENEFACTOR TO ALL BLIND UNFORTUNATES

SOMALILAND HERO REWARDED FOR SAVING CORPS

Known to his comrades and friends as "Archer of Somaliland," Mr. Geoffrey Francis Archer, C.M.G., has been appointed his Majesty's Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief in the Somaliland Protectorate. Mr. Archer is the young civilian who last year, when Acting Commissioner in the Berbera district of Somaliland, marched out with 30 men, in the face of 2,000 Dervishes under the Mad Mullah, to the rescue of the remnant of the defeated and crippled Camel Corps. It seemed a forlorn hope, but the plucky young Englishman succeeded in reaching the survivors of the corps and in conducting a retreat without loss over 80 miles of the country, although burdened with the wounded men. Thirty-one years of age, he has been 10 years in East Africa as district commissioner. Before going to Somaliland he was at work in Uganda and the East African Protectorate. His English home is at Aldeburgh, Suffolk. In 1908 he was commended for his services in the East African Protectorate, and for his bravery in Somaliland he was gazetted C.M.G.

Send Polar Bear Home?

There is a fine polar bear in the London Zoological Gardens. The evident melancholy of this animal has excited the sympathy of the honorable secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Mental Cruelty to Animals. This gentleman is the Rev. S. Claude Tickell, and what he has said about the bear, together with the answer, has tickled many a sober British household. Sir E. Shackleton is about to take another trip to the Antarctic. This gives the tender-hearted Mr. Tickell an idea.

"Let Sir E. Shackleton," he said, "take the polar bear back with him to the South Pole and let the animal once more enjoy the freedom of those vast realms of ice and snow and the 'great white silence,' which are the bears, by right of birth."

The explorer answers:

"The conditions of the South Pole are against polar bears. They are only to be found in the northern ice regions. One reason, of course, is that they are connected with the mainland. The Arctic polar bear may at one time have been a black or brown bear from Russia, Greenland, or the American mainland, and become white because of the Darwinian theory of the survival of the fittest.

"The Antarctic regions, on the other hand, are an island, and there are no polar bears there. And I doubt whether they would survive if they did get there. The only animals of importance down there are the seals and the penguins, and master bear would have a bad time with them."

Village Barber Artist.

Among the artists who had pictures accepted for the Royal Academy in London is Frank Cowley, a village barber. His picture is hung on the line, the ambition of every artist, and not "skied" or "cornered" as happens to the great majority of pictures.

Mr. Cowley took to painting before he began to shave the inhabitants of Hadlow, Kent, for a living, and his academy picture was painted in six hours. "I worked on it," he said, "about eight years ago, and in two sittings, between five and eight in the morning, had completed it."

The picture is a green and gray scheme, showing a smiling countryside, with a girl and two white goats standing near a tree. Five times previously Mr. Cowley has sent pictures to the Academy. Thrice he has been rejected, while on the other two occasions he was among those whose work was "crowded out."

He is entirely self-taught, and only recently took first lessons in technique.

Frenchman, Who Invented Means Whereby Blind May Read, Was Born a Century Ago Near Paris and Became a Professor at 17—Publishing Braille Books Is a Costly and Laborious Work.

It was a magnificent tribute which King George paid to the memory of the man who "made the blind to see," on the occasion of the recent opening of the new building added to the National Institute for the Blind in Great Portland street, London. "A great service," said His Majesty, "was rendered to humanity when Louis Braille devised the system of reading and writing which partially restores to the blind the lost means of intercourse with their fellows."

The tribute was well deserved, for of all the reading and writing systems which have been invented for the help of the blind, it is generally recognized that that of Louis Braille is by far the best. Much of the £130,000 which is being appealed for to support the National Institute is required to supply the increasing demand for books of the Braille type. That the money will be subscribed by the generous-hearted public there is little doubt, for, as King George truly remarked:

"It is a commonplace that men do not realise the value of that which they have never lost, but I am confident that your appeal for funds to extend and develop your undertaking will stir the imagination of many who unreflectingly enjoy the blessing of sight."

Braille, who was born in 1809 about twenty-three miles from Paris, became blind through an accident at the age of three. When he was ten years of age he entered as a pupil the Institution Nationale des Jeunes Aveugles, which was founded by Valentin Hauy in 1784, and such was his intelligence that when he was seventeen years of age he was elected a professor of the institution.

Both as a pupil and professor, however, he labored to invent a system which the blind could not only read but write in relief, and after years of patient labor devised the wonderful system which bears his name.

Briefly the signs of the Braille system consist of varying combinations of six points or dots placed in an oblong, of which the vertical side contains three and the horizontal two points. There are sixty-two possible combinations of these six points, so that after providing characters for the twenty-six letters of the English alphabet, there remain a sufficient number of signs for punctuation, contractions, etc.

The first ten letters, from "A" to "J," are formed by combinations of dots in the upper and middle rows: the next ten letters, from "K" to "T," are formed by adding the left-hand dot on the lower row, and the remainder by adding two dots in the lower row to the combinations representing the first ten letters.

By other various combinations it is easy to represent punctuation, numbers, and musical notes. Indeed, by means of this dotted system a blind man is able to keep memoranda or accounts, write his own music, emboss his own books from dictation, and carry on correspondence.

For writing, a frame is used consisting of a grooved metal bed, containing ten grooves to the inch. Over this is fitted a brass perforated guide, fixed into a light wooden frame like the frame of a slate, and which is attached to the grooved metal bed by hinges. The paper is introduced between the frame and the grooved bed, the instrument for writing being a blunt awl which carries a little cap of paper before it into the grooves of the bed, thereby producing a series of little pits on the side next the writer. When taken out and turned over, little prominences are felt, corresponding to the pits on the other side.

The reading is performed from left to wright, consequently the writing is from right to left. But this reversal presents no practical difficulty as soon as the pupil has caught the idea that in reading and writing alike he has to go forwards.

That the making of Braille books is a costly and laborious process may be gathered from the fact that John Andrew Ford, whom the King and Queen saw at work when they visited the National Institute, and who has the distinction of having hammered out the first Bible in Braille, took three and a half years to accomplish the task.

The task involved no fewer than 20,000,000 blows, the punch having to be struck three times with the hammer for each dot. This Braille edition of the Bible runs into thirty-nine bulky foolscap volumes.

THE MISTAKE OF HER LIFE

It Was Rectified by a Third Party

By MAY C. ETHERIDGE

I am fond of motoring and am considered about as good a driver as any woman in the town in which I live. In summer I make long tours, sometimes extending over several weeks.

One night while touring I stopped at a neat farmhouse, the owner and sole occupant of which was a young woman about twenty-seven and comely, but there was a dissatisfied expression on her face as though she had met with some serious disappointment.

She told me her name was Elizabeth Wyman; her father and mother were dead and had left her the property on which she lived—a dairy farm. She had nothing to complain of except loneliness. I suggested that an attractive young woman with a nice farm should have no trouble in getting a good husband, the best panacea for loneliness. This brought about a confidence which resulted in her giving me the cause of her disappointed look.

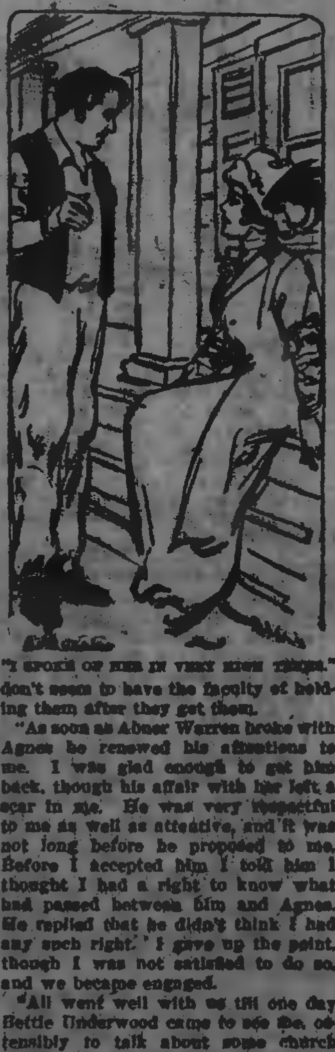
"The trouble about men," she said, "is that they don't understand us women."

"And perhaps," I interrupted, "we women don't understand men."

"When I was a girl living here with my parents a man named Warren bought a farm down where the road crosses the creek. He had a son named Abner. I first met Abner Warren at a cornhusking, and he picked me out among all the girls present, dancing with me oftener than with any of the rest of them. He seemed then to be a fine, manly fellow who could look any one straight in the eye. He didn't treat me right afterward, but however he acted he had that same honest pride in his look.

"Two or three of the girls made a dead set for him, and Agnes Walker got him. I thought at the time she must have managed it very adroitly, and I couldn't understand his engaging himself to her when he had—at least on our first acquaintance—favored me. Agnes was not well liked by us girls, and that was another reason why I was surprised at Abner's engaging himself to her.

"The engagement between these two didn't last long. I never understood why it was broken, and no one else seemed to know. Abner never said a word about it. As for Agnes, all she would say was that she didn't care. It was whispered about that she didn't confine her lovemaking to Abner, and he objected to having to divide it with some one else. It was the general impression that Agnes was one of that kind of girls who make, or seem to make, easy conquests of men, but who don't seem to have the faculty of holding them after they get them.



"I SPOKE OF HER IN VERY HIGH TERMS."

"As soon as Abner Warren broke with Agnes he renewed his attentions to me. I was glad enough to get him back, though his affair with her left a scar in me. He was very respectful to me as well as attentive, and it was not long before he proposed to me. Before I accepted him I told him I thought I had a right to know what had passed between him and Agnes. He replied that he didn't think I had any such right. I gave up the point, though I was not satisfied to do so, and we became engaged.

"All went well with us till one day Bettie Underwood came to see me, ostensibly to talk about some church matter, but I've always believed since that she had another object in view. While we were talking she asked me if I'd heard that Agnes Walker and Cyrus Buckley were engaged. I said I had not, remarking at the same time that if it were so Agnes had not been a long while getting over her affair with Abner. Bet replied that Agnes wouldn't marry Abner on any account. Naturally I asked why.

"'You don't know anything about that matter,' she said. 'You've, doubtless, heard Abner's side of the story, but you've never heard Agnes'.'

"'I've never heard either side,' I replied.

"She went on talking about something else, but what she had said left a very unpleasant impression on me. I tried not to think of it, but the more I tried to banish it the more it persisted in coming back to me. At last I could stand it no longer and spoke to Abner about it, telling him what Bettie Underwood had said.

"He seemed ill at ease and tried to turn the matter aside. This made me the more suspicious, and I told him that if he had treated Agnes badly I should know it, for if a man will deal wrongfully with one woman he will do so with another. To this he replied that a girl about to be married had best leave alone her lover's previous affairs with women. Her only concern was his treatment of her.

"I insisted that he should make a clean breast of it, and he refused. Then I took off the engagement ring he had given me and handed it to him. He looked at me for a few moments with a sorrowful expression, then told me that I was making the mistake of my life, and would prove the truth of what he said. He wouldn't treat any woman badly unless she treated him or some one whom he loved badly, and then not for revenge, but for infliction of a just punishment. He left me and has never been to see me since."

My hostess paused in her story, and I saw that what her lover had said to her was true. She, not he, had made the mistake of a life. Doubtless there was something between him and the girl he had broken with that he could not speak of without casting blame upon her. If both were at fault there was all the more reason that whatever it was it should be kept secret. There are many affairs of little or much importance that cannot be unraveled without a regular trial, and even then it is often impossible to extract the truth.

But I said nothing of this to the story teller—at least, not then. I was curious to know what her lover meant by saying that he would prove that she was making a mistake in endeavoring to force him to make a clean breast of his relations with his first fiancee. So I asked her if there was no more to tell.

"Yes," she continued, "there is one very important matter to tell. Soon after Abner's parting with me I heard that he had become attentive to Bettie Underwood. I inquired if Bettie accepted his attentions and was informed that she was very much pleased with them. Can it be, I thought, that she will engage herself to the man against whom she had covertly warned me? I had not long to wait for an answer to my question. It was soon generally understood that Abner and Bettie were engaged. One day I met Bet in the street and asked her if the report was true. She said it was and flounced away from me, evidently desiring to avoid a discussion of what she knew I had on my mind."

Again the narrator paused, and I asked her if she had finished her story.

"There is little more to tell," she said. "The engagement between Abner and Bettie lasted just one month when it was broken off. Since Abner never came to see me after I returned my engagement ring I could not ask him what it all meant. I suppose he engaged himself to Bettie to show me how silly I had been to permit her to make a breach between him and me, and that she did it because she wanted him herself. I doubt if she was a girl of much feeling, for she married some one else within a year after she broke with Abner."

I asked Miss Wyman if Abner Warren had married, and she said he had not. He had since inherited the farm on which he lived and kept house alone. Before leaving I asked to be informed of its location, thinking that I would like to meet him. It happened that my route passed his house, and I made up my mind I would find an excuse to have a word with him.

I bid my hostess a sympathetic goodby, promising to make her a visit on another occasion, then started again on my travels. When I reached the house of Abner Warren I left my car at the gate, and, seeing a man at work, asked him some questions as to the roads I was to traverse. In the course of the conversation I gave him an opportunity to tell me his name and learned that he was the man I sought. Then I asked him for a glass of buttermilk and sat on the porch of his house while he got it for me.

While drinking the buttermilk I told him that I had been entertained by a Miss Elizabeth Wyman, who lived a few miles down the road, and I spoke of her in very high terms. I told him that I wondered that so lovely and attractive a woman had not been appropriated and hinted that I surmised she had experienced a disappointment.

I could not help being amused at the interest he took in the subject, and when I added that Miss Wyman was one of those true women who when they gave their hearts away would never withdraw them I hoped he would give me his confidence, but he did not, proving himself to be the kind of man I supposed him to be from the story I had heard. However, I thought it quite probable from the effect my words produced on him that something would come of my effort. I left him without having given him any reason to suspect that I knew his secret.

What I said to him bore quick fruit, for, returning that way, I stopped at Miss Wyman's and found a great change in her.

"What do you think has happened since you were here?" she asked, her face lighted by a radiant smile.

"What?" I asked.

"Abner Warren has been to see me."

"You don't mean it? And all is made up?"

"Yes, and we are engaged again."

"The Lord be praised!"

Going It Blind.

Enver Bey got an idea of the looks of his future bride by means of a photograph. This illustrates a difficulty from which the young Englishman is free, but which is sometimes very amusing to the young Turk. He ought not to see his bride's face until he has actually married her, or at the very least until he is betrothed. The young lady, as the English writer, Duckett Ferriman, points out, can take a drive and get a glimpse of her suitor's face out of doors. But her face should remain veiled from him, and, although he generally contrives to get an idea of her appearance, it cannot always be done. Mr. Ferriman mentions a high official's son who was mortified at his wedding to find his bride a brunette, when he wanted a blonde.

Little Martha Washing Clothes For Dolly.

Washing is hard work. But Martha doesn't mind. She knows just how to do it. And she wouldn't for anything let dolly go off on a trip with the tiniest soiled spot on any of her clothes. Martha lives at Madison, Wis.

Dolly is quite a traveler. She visited several Wisconsin towns in the past few months as a demonstration model, showing interested mothers the completeness, daintiness and appropriateness of her pretty wardrobe.

Miss Anabel Turner, instructor in home economics of the extension division, University of Wisconsin, when called upon to answer questions from mothers of the state as to the perplexing matters of wee wardrobes, decided that the best answer would be in demonstration, hence the doll and its carefully planned outfit.

Odd Ideas In Sundials.

Parisians have always been devoted to sundials, and it is probable that the French capital possesses a greater number of these time indicating devices than any other city in the world. Even in the eighteenth century the sundial was most popular in Paris, and fashion singled out for its choice the sundial of the Palais Royal. Every day at noon this was the center of interest of an eager crowd. A writer of that period tells of a "great crowd in the corner of the Palais Royal garden, standing motionless with their noses in the air." Each was waiting for noon, having his watch in hand ready to set at 12 o'clock. When the Duke of Orleans was altering the palace in 1782 the Parisians were much disturbed, thinking that they were to be deprived of their favorite sundial. But the duke not only preserved the sundial, but added to it a little powder magazine, which was so arranged that it exploded when the sunlight fell upon it, thus notifying every one who heard the explosion that the hour of noon had arrived. Later a cannon which was discharged by the sun at noon took the place of the little powder magazine. Buffon arranged an ingenious dial in the botanical garden. A globe which represented the earth was suspended by a hair. This hair was burned through by the sun at noon, and the globe fell upon a Chinese gong.

The Resurrection Plant.

This plant, whose botanical name is the anastatica, is sometimes called the rose of Jericho.

It has been called the resurrection plant, from the fact that when apparently dead and dry it often assumes again the color of life as soon as its root is put into water. Its buds swell with new life, the leaves open, the petals unfold, and the full blown flowers appear as if by magic.

It is not, strictly speaking, a rose at all. The stem divides at the base and bears spikes of pretty white flowers, which change into round fruits. When ripe the leaves fall, the branches grow hard and dry and fold inward, so as to form a ball. In autumn the plant is uprooted by the storms and carried toward the sea. There it is gathered and exported to Europe, where it is highly prized.

The resurrection plant grows in the sandy regions of Egypt, Syria and Arabia and has long been connected in popular superstition with the Holy Land and the life of our Saviour. In certain countries it is still believed that the remarkable flower blooms every year on the day and at the hour of the birth of Jesus, and pious pilgrims still report finding it at every spot where Mary and Joseph and the heavenly babe rested on their flight into Egypt.

"Music Hath Charms."

Many stories are told of the power of music over animals. A story is told of a circus tent once catching fire and a frightened lion escaping from his cage. He was a tame lion, but every one was afraid of him and cried out to shoot him.

A little boy who belonged to the circus began to play on his flute. He went, playing, toward the lion, and as he played the lion grew quiet and listened. Then the boy, still playing, walked over to the lion's cage and the animal followed him slowly and went in the open door of the cage, which was quickly fastened.

Correct.

"Two and two and two and two,
You know," I said, "make eight.
Now how," I asked, "are you to write
This problem on your slate?"

"Oh, just easy!" laughed Louise,
Her pencil quick in hand.
"Four the multiplier will be
And two the multiplicand."

"What next?" I gently prompted
As she the figures drew.
"Eight," answered she. "The product is My sample's four times two."

Lesson I.—Third Quarter, For July 5, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xx, 1-16. Memory Verses, 6, 7—Golden Text, Matt. v, 45—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This lesson is found only in the gospel by Matthew and follows immediately his saying concerning the Son of Man in the throne of His glory and the apostles upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel, closing with the words about the first being last and and the last first. Our lesson today closed with the same words, with the addition of "for many may be called, but few chosen" (Matt. xix, 27-30; xx, 16). The same words about few and many are found in Matt. xxii, 14.

It is sadly true that, while many hear the glad tidings, but few comparatively really receive the good news, and it is also true that of those who become Christians but few are willing to be disciples because of selfishness and worldliness and because they do not know the power of His resurrection and kingdom and glory.

The present age of the mystery of the kingdom is the time in which the redeemed of the Lord are called to be "fellow workers unto the kingdom of God," "laborers together with God," "workers together with Him" (Col. iv, 11; I Cor. iii, 9; II Cor. vi, 1). The reference to the vineyard in this lesson and in chap. xxi takes us back to Isa. v, 1-7; Ps. lxxx, and other Old Testament passages, but for us the most helpful reference is that of the vine and the branches and the fruit to the glory of God in John xv.

In a recent lesson our Lord spoke of recompense at the resurrection of the just, and we know from Rev. xxii, 12, and I Pet. v, 4, and elsewhere that the time of reward for service will be at the second coming of Christ, when every one shall receive his own reward according to his own labor, but there is a recompense in all service even here, a foretaste of better things to come. Perhaps the "penny a day" suggests present reward in this life. There should be no idlers among believers, for the record says "to every man his work" (Mark xiii, 34).

In reference to the material for the building of the tabernacle Mr. Moody used to say that the poorest child could bring a few goat's hairs (Ex. xxv, 1-8). When the wall of Jerusalem was rebuilt by Nehemiah, among the builders were priests, Levites, rulers, merchants, apothecaries, goldsmiths and even women (Neh. iii, 8, 12, 17, 22, 32). They seemed poorly qualified for such service, but they had a mind to work, and, though they were despised and mocked, they prayed and kept at it and finished it, and their enemies had to acknowledge that the work was wrought of God (Neh. iv, 4, 6, 9).

In all service for Christ it must be God working in us, both to will and to do, the vine bearing fruit through the branches, for He said, "Without me ye can do nothing" (Phil. ii, 13; John xv, 5). The laborers of today's lesson, at least the first batch, seem to be time servers who agreed to work for so much. To the others He said, "Whatsoever is right I will give you (verses 2, 4, 7). When His love constrains we will not think of reward for service either here or hereafter. Ruth was not thinking of recompense when she clung to Naomi and said, "Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee" (Ruth i, 16-18).

It was devotion to David that led Ittai to cling to him with similar words (II Sam. xv, 21). The same thing is seen in Elisha's repeated refusals to leave Elijah II Kings ii, 2, 4, 6). Such an attitude is the only one for true service. Simon Peter thought that he had it when he said, "Lord, I will lay down my life for Thy sake" (John xiii, 37), but he did not know himself. Paul really had it when he said, "I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts xxi, 13. See also Acts xx, 24; Rom. i, 14-16; I Cor. ix, 22; x, 33).

With so many millions on earth who have never yet heard the gospel, who know nothing whatever of the love of God, the gift of His Son, eternal redemption provided in Him, a kingdom to be shared by the whosoevers who will accept Him, how can any one be said to truly rejoice in the Lord or be any kind of a disciple who is not consumed with a desire to serve such a Saviour and make known His salvation without ever a thought of recompense here or hereafter? I have heard of heathen in China haggling about how much they would get for saving a man who was drowning before their eyes before they would attempt to save him, but what shall be said of Christians who want to know what their reward shall be for telling others of the redemption which they themselves have freely received, or what shall be said of those who think more of their own church or denomination than of gathering the church, His body, from all the world that He may come again, set up His kingdom and see of the travail of His soul in a world subjected unto Him and filled with righteousness and peace? For "He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet," but He will not begin His reign till He shall receive His bride at the resurrection of the just (I Cor. xv, 23-25). Serving the living and true God means doing that which He appointed us, not working up or working out some scheme of our own.

LITTLE ANNOYANCES.

BEFORE a great disaster
We stand in silent awe
And patiently accept it,
The will of nature's law,
But if a small annoyance
Just hits us in the neck
We rise in awful fury
And try the house to wreck.

If something big and burly
And forty times our weight
Falls on us from the ceiling
We say that it is fate,
But if some lawless urchin
A snowball at us shies
We straightway raise a racket
That reaches to the skies.

The bank that holds our money
May break and leave us flat.
We say it's our misfortune
And let it go at that.
But if a newsboy ventures
To stick us for a dime
We call for ten detectives
To ferret out the crime.

An elephant he faces
With cold and fearless eye,
He goes into the jungle
And makes the lions fly,
But if a little woman
A quarter of his size
Just looks at him in anger
Man turns away and flies.

Sad Case.

"You look tired."

"I am."

"What is the trouble? Working too hard?"

"No; insomnia."

"Why, I thought you said just now that you were sleepy enough to sleep a week."

"I am."

"Why do you say you have insomnia?"

"I didn't. It is the baby at my house that has it."

A MAY FROCK FOR A GIRL.

Combining exquisite daintiness with the latest note of fashion is this girlish frock of the sheerest batiste embroidery which uses the flouncing in a most original fashion, inverted in the skirt and hanging loose over the girdle of pink ribbon. A puff of the plain batiste in between the skirt and blouse simulates the panier on mother's dress and is put over a lining of thin lawn.

A DROP IN MUTTON.

In Which Real Gallantry Relieves an Awkward Situation.

THE Parisian is proverbially polite, although he may and often does impart a flavor of ironical mischief to his courtesy. The following incident is typically Parisian.

It is the custom in the French capital for the cook to do all the marketing. This adds considerably to the cook's income, for every dealer allows her about one cent on every twenty cents that she spends. So French cooks insist on their marketing prerogative and the mistress who denies it to them is held to be a very mean person.

Well, a person of this sort, an elderly woman, was in the habit of doing her own marketing in a long duster. The duster hid her purchases. While she was usurping her cook's rights, it kept her from being detected in the act.

As this woman one hot morning was walking homeward in her duster from the St. Honore market she stumbled and a leg of mutton fell and rolled across the sidewalk.

A passing stranger, sizing up the situation, picked up the leg of mutton and, with a bow and a smile, returned it with this salutation:

"Permit me, madame—your fan."—New York Times.

She Brought Him to Time.

After he had got right up to the point of asking the lady to name the happy day he still had some fears and doubts. He didn't know how old she was, and he hated to ask her right out. He didn't know whether he wanted to get married right away, but he hated to say so. He didn't want his friends to learn of the engagement, but he was too much of a gentleman or something to confess. So he said:

"What a beautiful hand you have. And how lovely an—er—appropriate ring will look on that finger! What month were you born in?"

"That doesn't make a bit of difference," answered the girl. "Never mind about my birthstone. The appropriate jewel for occasions like these is always the diamond."

He quit temporizing then.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Glimmer of Reason.

The grounds around the asylum for the insane were beginning to be beautiful. Two women patients strolled across the broad stretch of lawn and seated themselves on a rustic bench near a large lilac bush. For a long time neither spoke. Both seemed to be absorbed in thought. At last one of them yawned and said:

"Oh, pshaw! I'm going back inside."

"Why?" the other asked. "It's very pleasant out here."

"What does a pleasant place amount to if there's no man around?"

"You'll not be staying in this institution much longer, will you?"

"Why?"

"You're talking sense."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Unable to Speak With Authority.

"Waiter," said the fussy man, "are you sure that these eggs are fresh?"

"I think they are, sir," replied the waiter.

"Don't think anything!" stormed the fussy man. "Are you certain that they are fresh?"

"Well, I'm not positive, sir," replied the waiter. "I've only been working here since the first of the year."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Maneuvering.

"A great many of the neighbors have called to see us since we moved out here," said Mr. Crumbsby.

"They didn't call to see us," replied his wife. "The report has gone out that we have a good cook and they are trying to get acquainted with her."—Washington Star.

HYPNOTISM THAT FAILED.

Showing That You Can't Pull the Wool Over the Eyes of Some Women.

MR. WAGSTAFF had handed a cigar to Mr. Barker.

"Ever study hypnotism?" he asked.

"No," Mr. Barker replied.

"Few people understand or appreciate the importance of hypnotism," said Mr. Wagstaff. "Many people are hypnotists without knowing it. We all exercise hypnotism more or less. The men who fail are failures because they lack hypnotic power."

"There may be something in your theory," Mr. Barker admitted.

"Of course there is. You and I have both influenced other people in our time. It is"—

"Henry," said Mrs. Wagstaff, "why not give Mr. Barker a demonstration of your hypnotic power?"

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"You told me when you got home last night that you and Mr. Barker had helped to take a one legged man in a lodging house and had been compelled to watch beside him for several hours because he was raving."

Both gentlemen fidgeted nervously.

"I was talking with Mrs. Barker this afternoon," Mrs. Wagstaff continued. "It appears that she got the impression that you were taking care of a poor man who had no arms."

Mr. Barker breathed hard and said he thought he would have to be going.

"Don't hurry," said Mrs. Wagstaff. "Henry may be able to give you a demonstration of his power as a hypnotist."

"My dear," said Mr. Wagstaff as he got Mr. Barker's hat and put on his own, "I have a headache. I'm going to get something for it."

When the two gentlemen reached the street Mr. Barker looked sadly at his friend.

"You got us both into a fine fix."

Mr. Wagstaff indignantly replied, "It was you who suggested the man with the wooden leg, and then you make him armless."

"Well, what are we going to do about it? Do you think you can hypnotize them into believing it?"

"Billy, go home and tell the truth. That's what I'm going to do. Hypnotism may work all right with men, but women are different. You know darned well I tried my best to persuade you to start for home at 9 o'clock. That's what a man gets for trying to help his friends out of trouble. Good night."

"Oh, chase yourself."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Different Tactics.

"When a person is really angry he says what he thinks, doesn't he?"

"Yes, but there's a difference between an angry man and an angry woman that way."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, when a man is really angry he tells you just what he thinks of you."

"Yes."

"But when a woman is really angry she tells you what everybody else thinks of you."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A QUESTION OF PATRIOTISM

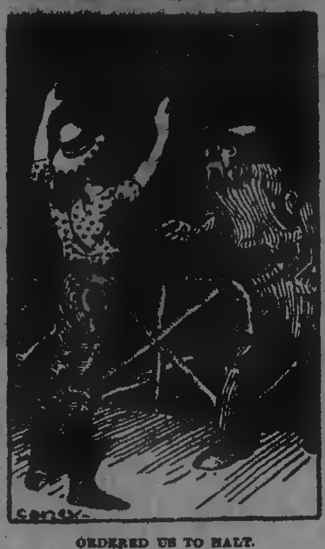
The Editor is Obliged to Bare His War Record

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

THE aged and infirm critter whom we are obliged by courtesy to refer to as our esteemed contemporary is still neutral on the Mexican war question. Among his 350 subscribers is a half breed Mexican, and he is afraid of hurting the man's feelings by coming out strong for the American eagle. In this last issue he says we are a patriot for the money there is in it and that if we ever smelled powder it was when we had our head in a barrel. We are not a man to exploit our own adventures. We should not now refer to our war record except to defend our honor. We have the papers to show that we were among the first dozen men to enlist in the war for the Union.

We began with Bull Run and ended with Appomattox. We wore out three muskets shooting at the enemy, and the number of killed and wounded can be figured from that. We went in as a private and came out as a captain, and we didn't pay out cash for promotion. We were wounded by a shell at Groveton, hit by a bullet at Manassas and sliced by a saber at Gettysburg. We got run over by a horse at Fredericksburg, had a tree fall upon us at Chancellorsville, and a solid shot at Falling Waters chased us around for ten minutes, and finally wounded and with a soft corn on every toe, but ready to go back and leave one of our legs on the battlefield, we were marching while our esteemed contemporary was running a cheese factory.



ORDERED US TO HALT.

It has been our policy to say as little of ourselves personally as possible, but under the present circumstances a few words seem to be in order. We are mayor of Givendam Gulch. We are postmaster of the same. We are a member of the territorial assembly. We are a deputy United States marshal. We are editor and proprietor of the greatest weekly in the community.

There are those who would rest satisfied after gathering the laurels we have, but we still have the fires of ambition burning in our breast.

In returning from Pine Hill Sunday evening a man stepped out from behind a tree and ordered us to halt and throw up our hands. We obeyed him with the greatest celerity and shall always feel grateful to him for giving us the opportunity. He asked our name and occupation, and we gave them with the hope that the press was exempt from his operation. We were wrong, however. He was a man with a grievance against well conducted newspapers, and it tickled him to know that he had caught an editor. He robbed us of even the key of the office clock and our goose quill toothpick, and if he had had any use for a horse he would certainly have left us to foot it into town. We lost $70 in cash and $50 worth of watch, but we are not repining. The critter was a scholar and a gentleman, and possibly we may meet him in a game of poker.

Two or three weeks ago, wanting an item to fill up with, we turned our attention to the ranch kept by Jim Hopkins over on Goose creek. It is a hard place, and we said so. Jim is a tough man, who ought to have been lynched when he was a kid. We didn't know how Jim would feel about it, but as usual prepared for business. Saturday last he came into town to get square, and it so happened that we met on Apache avenue. He was in too great a hurry to take aim, and his bullets were wasted. When he had fired six bullets at us we closed in, put him on his back and made him holler in about sixty seconds.

The boys put him in a barrel and rolled him around, and yesterday he was chased out of his dive and departed for the mountains.

Both Disappointed.

Wife—If I'd known that you were after my money I would never have listened to you. Husband—And if I'd known you'd be so mighty close with your money I would never have proposed.—Philadelphia Ledger.

RINGS OF AIR.

How to Blow Out a Lighted Candle Twelve Feet Away.

The distance from which an average man can blow out a candle rarely exceeds three feet. If he is an adept at blowing smoke rings, however, a candle may be extinguished at twelve feet. Of course the smoke isn't necessary. An ordinary air ring will do and has the added advantage of being invisible. Simply pucker the mouth as you would to blow a smoke ring and expel air in a quick, sharp manner. It takes a good deal of practice to do it.

An easier way to show the effect if one is doubtful is to place a sheet of cloth or canvas over the open side of a box otherwise closed, making a small, round hole in another side. Then tap in a sharp manner on the canvas and invisible air rings will be produced. If the hole is pointed at a person's face and the rings are made he will feel them as they strike his face. Only a few trials are necessary to extinguish a candle at twelve feet. To render the rings visible a smudge may be burned in the box, or a small dish of ammonia may be placed side by side with a small dish of hydrochloric acid, the combined fumes of these liquids making a dense smoke.

The explanation why one can put out the candle at twelve feet is that the energy of expulsion is conserved and practically all retained in the smoke ring, while a simple blowing has to set in motion a whole stream of air and is therefore wasteful.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Good News For Papa.

"Paw!"

"Well?"

"When I promise to marry him do you want him to come and ask your consent?"

"No, not my consent, but I would like to have him trot in and tell me the good news. I sort of feel like I needed cheering up."—Houston Post.

Reason For Grumbling.

"You say you haven't anything to be thankful for?" said the clergyman to one of his parishioners.

"Why, look at your neighbor, Hayes. He has just lost his wife by influenza."

"Well," said the parishioner, "that don't do me any good; I ain't Hayes."—Dallas News.

Exception.

"After all these statesmen have gone on the stand and told how they run their parties every citizen will know the ins and outs of politics."

"Yes," said the practical person, "but in politics you don't get anything by knowing the outs."—New York Press.

Woman's World

Mrs. H. B. Fullerton, Gardening and Agricultural Expert.

MRS. H. B. FULLERTON.

The growing popularity of an organization like the Women's National Agricultural and Horticultural association is evidence of the interest women are taking in scientific farming and gardening. The organization includes amateur as well as professional flower growers and farmers.

The association was organized in May, 1913, and recently held its first annual conference at Ambler, Pa., where there is a school of horticulture for women.

Mrs. H. B. Fullerton, chairman of the conference committee, who arranged many of the important details for the meeting and whose enthusiasm was an inspiration to those who attended, is the wife of H. B. Fullerton, head of the Long Island agricultural experiment station. She is greatly interested in her husband's work and has helped him with his exhibitions at the various land shows. She is an authority on scientific gardening. The Fullertons live at Medford, N. Y., where Mrs. Fullerton has a beautiful garden of her own.

One object of the National Agricultural and Horticultural association is to introduce women to a wide field in which they may make good incomes under ideally healthful conditions. They hope to help women farmers with their problems and aid them to find an outlet for their products. The president of the organization is Mrs. Francis King of Alma, Mich., who is also president of the Garden club of Michigan and vice president of the Garden Club of America.

ORGANDIE COLLARS.

The Right Way to Launder the Fragile New Neckwear.

There is only one objection to the new muslin collars. They are fragile, and moisture reduces them to shapelessness. Wrinkles are as obvious on them as they are on linen shirt waists.

Fortunately laundering restores them to their original state of loveliness if the laundering is of the right sort.

These collars depend for their shape on their stiffness. Sometimes they are stiff enough if they are ironed wet, but usually they need a little starch.

Here is a recipe for the sort of starch to use for the collars of linen and organdie:

Add a piece of paraffin the size of an egg and a piece of white or castile soap the size of a hazlenut to a quart of boiling water. Mix the starch with cold water in a bowl, using whatever proportion of starch to a quart of water that the particular brand of starch calls for to make a thin paste. Add the cold mixture to the boiling mixture and let it boil up two or three times; then add a little bluing in liquid form.

Dancing Slippers.

Bronze slippers are having a vogue with indoor frocks, and flesh pink silk stockings are worn with the bronze footwear, though bronze silk stockings are much prettier, one must confess. With dancing frocks worn through the street, however, more conventional footwear is favored. Buttoned boots of patent leather with tops of light cloth and graceful high heels or Colonial pumps with the new brocade tops are worn with stockings of sheer black thread silk, clocked at the side.

Leather Belts.

Leather belts are used to a certain extent in all seasons, whether they are widely used or not. They are always effective. There is something smart about them that woven fabrics lack. Probably with this idea in mind the Paris dressmakers are using leather trimmings on many of their new models. Leather waistcoats, leather collars and cuffs and bands of leather which are used like braid or ribbon for trimming are all shown. A suede finish is the most popular.

Cleaning Gas Fittings.

When cleaning brass gas or electric light fittings never use metal polish, as this spoils the lacquer. If they are very dirty wash with weak vinegar and water. Rub dry with a soft duster and polish with a dry leather.

If brass fittings are rubbed occasionally with a soft duster slightly moistened with salad oil and then with a dry duster no further cleaning will be necessary, and they will always keep bright.

Hair brushes can be cleaned by putting ammonia in cold water and dipping the brush in being careful not to allow the wood to go in the water; then rinse in clear cold water.

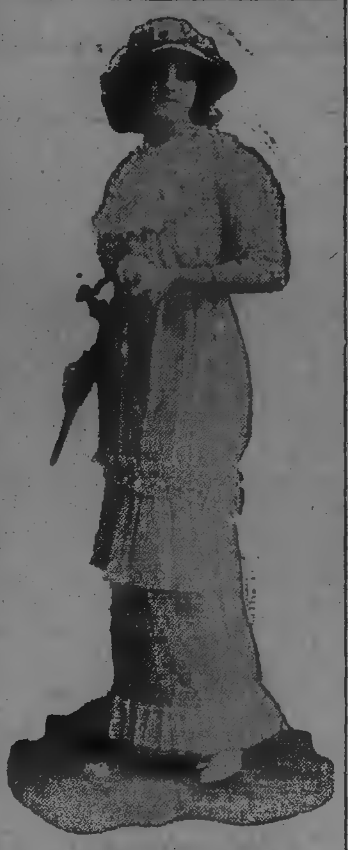
FOR EVENING WEAR.

Many Attractive Novelties Fashioned of Plain or Embroidered Net.



NET EVENING GOWN.

Net is shown in a great variety of styles that command the unqualified admiration of the discriminating woman. They are plain and figured, sheer and comparatively heavy.

The fashionable girl is very fond of net just now, and here she appears in a most attractive development of this ultra fashionable stuff. The tunic which is not to be neglected in any smart costume is effected by means of the applied flounce held with white ribbon and white chiffon roses. Relieving the plainness of the net and adding a dressy touch, shadow lace is used in the skirt and the blouse. The frock is secured in the back with snap fasteners, the most convenient method of fastening these sheer tearable stuffs.

There are some attractive net and lace blouses that make use of accordion plaits. The sleeves, set into low arm holes, are made of accordion plaited net. In other blouses there is a deep yoke of accordion plaited net that extends from back to front.

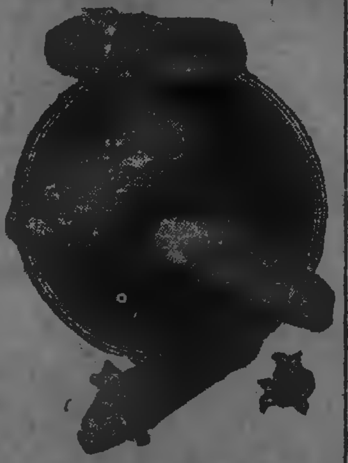
FOR MILADY'S FEET.

Shoes and Slippers That Are Modish and Attractive.

A small fortune is expended these days on footwear alone, for if milady is to expose her feet and ankles it is quite safe to predict that they will be clothed with as much care as she pays to the rest of her attire.

Slippers are composed of every known material, and many and curious are the methods of placing and arranging the straps, some for comfort, others for line, but all are exquisitely made.

Spats continue to be smart, and distant feet advancing toward one down the avenue have a twinkling effect under women's skirts as the spatted foot—if one may coin the expression—advances and retires from view. Fawn color seems the favored shade for these smart buttoned overgaiters, and one marvels at the fit of them. A glove is a wrinkled affair by comparison. Because of this perfection of fit and the daintiness of the little high heeled pump or slipper underneath the new spat does not make the foot and ankle at all clumsy and is at present an indispensable adjunct of the correct street costume.



BOUDOIR SLIPPERS.

Dainty boudoir slippers may be fashioned at home. The slippers illustrated here are suitable for gifts and may be made at little cost. One pair is of pink satin with felt soles. They are lined with silk and trimmed with satin ribbon and ribbon flowers. The satin of the outer part is covered with shadow lace. The other pair is of ribbon run felt satin lined.

Crocheted Belts.

Crocheted belts are coming into fashion again. The shops are displaying fascinating samples having long ends and an unusual trimming of a few colored beads. Women who do crocheting will find pleasure in making these pretty trifles for gifts.

Seal Your Letters.

A sealing outfit is a necessity for every well appointed writing table, for the old fashion of sealing private letters has revived. The latest sealing appliance is a tiny ladle, in which the wax is melted over a taper or little alcohol lamp and poured on to the paper, thus avoiding the painful finger burning which so often resulted from the old method, while the wax is not discolored and a neater seal is made.

Sealing wax should be of a darker tint than the stationery—it is to be had in all the fashionable colors—and of finest quality to produce a firm and glossy seal. It is used thinly, for a thick seal not only looks clumsy, but is easily tampered with.

Every one who possesses such a treasure as an old family seal uses it, of course, and there is a big demand for new seals, designed with a monogram and some special device—not a crest, of course, unless one is entitled to use this, but one's favorite flower, the sign of the zodiac appropriate to the birth month or any of the "lucky" symbols may be employed. A good many women are taking up the artistic craft of designing and making seals.

Wedding Favors.

There are almost innumerable place cards that are suitable for luncheons and dinners given to the bride and her friends. One design that is new and attractive shows a roguish cupid aiming an arrow from a white, high heeled slipper. There is a set for the wedding party—the bride and bridegroom the maids and ushers, flower girls and pages and the minister.

Then there is a set that shows trunks and bandboxes, suit cases and hand bags, all tagged with white ribbon bows and "newly married" signs. Another set of bridal party figures shows tiny artificial flowers in the hands of all the paper maids and the bride.

Floral favors of some sort are prettiest for spring wedding gayeties. Little china baskets that can be filled with tiny roses are attractive. So are small baskets of wicker. Then there are paper covered cases of a dozen varieties to hold candles. White roses, chrysanthemums and tulips and festoons of smaller flowers all make effective decorations for these cases.

Lawn Party Game.

New games for the children's fete or lawn party are now in demand. The following is a lively pastime for any number of children, as ten or forty can play, either outdoors or indoors. A large yard with two small spaces (called dens or traps) at opposite corners are necessary:

One child is called the hunter and stands in the middle of the yard. The other children are given the names of different animals or birds, several having the same name, and stand in one of the dens.

The hunter calls for a certain animal or for two kinds, when all of that name must try to reach the other den before the hunter tags them. If one is tagged he takes the place of the hunter, and the hunter takes the place of an animal. There may be two hunters when a large party is playing, but only one must call the animal's name.

Good Shot.

Wigg—So young Goldie has become a benedict. What was his wife's maiden name?

Wagg—Her maiden aim seems to have been to marry Goldie, and she proved an unusually good shot for a woman.

COWED THE CHINESE.

The "Foreign Devil" Used a College Yell as a Battle Cry.

On board a launch on which I was sailing up the Yangtze river were about thirty Chinese soldiers of such a ragamuffin appearance as to excite my suspicious, but fortunately without their rifles. As evening of the first day came on they crowded around the small deck house and demanded of the native agent to know what the "foreign devil" was doing here. Now, I had been cleaning and oiling the various parts of my sample machine gun during the day.

Before nightfall I drew the blinds of the deckhouse and, quickly assembling the gun, slipped in a loaded belt. I now told the agent, who was white with fear, to tell these fellows that this "foreign devil" "belong crazy" and also "hun lehi" (very fierce) and as a sort of warning to "keep off the grass" I opened the door and let off a string of about fifty shots into the air, at the same time giving the Yale college yell, which was the handiest warcry I could think of at the moment.

Whether it was the information imparted by the agent, Chen, the shots or the Yale cheer I cannot say, but all hands crowded to the other end of the launch and remained at a respectful distance until Nanchang was reached, to the great amusement of the Chinese captain and engineer, who, however, had deemed it good policy to allow the passengers to settle their own disputes without interference. This incident is pleasant to remember, but at the time I was badly scared.—From "Drumming Revolutionary China," by Bartlett G. Yung, in World's Work.

Water Power.

Few would expect to find any connection between a modern hydroelectric plant and a prayer. The connection is indeed remote, but not undiscoverable. The first application of water power to mechanical purposes was made by Buddhist priests when they employed the energy of running streams to the work of turning prayer wheels. That, then, may be said to constitute the origin of the application of water power to perform man's labors, the foreshadowing of the great industrial development now in progress for the harnessing of the world's waterfalls, rivers and streams.

Kindness of the Boss.

Little Tommy, who was about knee high to a half pint, was employed by a busy broker. One afternoon the broker was sitting at his desk trying to collect his thoughts as well as some coin when he suddenly looked up and signaled Tommy to draw near.

"Tommy," said the boss, digging down into his jeans, "here's a fifty cent chunk of silver. Take it and hustle off to some vaudeville show."

"Thank you very much, sir," gratefully responded Tommy, freezing fast to the coin. "That's what I call being some good to a poor kid."

"Don't think that I'm being good to you," was the quick rejoinder of the boss. "I want you to learn a new tune. I can't stand the one you've been whistling for two months any longer."—Exchange.

Willow and Laurel.

Children, gather close about me.
Listen while I tell to you
Of a war which set the slaves free,
Winning laurels for the blue.

Brother fought against his brother,
Each one thinking he was right.
Wringing heart of many a mother
As news came of each fresh fight.

So each struggled hard for victory,
Loyal blue and gallant gray,
One for homes and one for country,
Till the war clouds passed away.

Boys in gray proved foes with bravery,
Noble conquerors were the blue,
But the war which ended slavery,
Ended many young lives too.

So, dear children, let us scatter
Flowers over every grave—
Blue or gray, it is no matter.
Each one shelters soldier brave.

To the victors we'll bring laurel,
Willows give to vanquished foe.
Memory still will mourn the quarrel
Which laid many good men low.

Amber.

Many children wear a string of amber beads about their necks, and often they wonder where the pretty transparent yellow beads come from.

Amber is a fossilized vegetable resin and is found in great abundance on the shores of the Baltic sea. It is derived probably from a variety of extinct tree. The word electricity comes from the Greek word elektron, which means amber, because amber becomes negatively electric when rubbed.

According to an old fable, amber is the tears of the sisters of Phaethon, the youth who would drive the car of the sun. After his death they were turned into poplar trees. By some people amber is said to be a concretion of birds' tears.

PROTECTIVE DEVICE IS NOW RECOMMENDED FOR CROSSING

Jury Find James Cowie's Death Was Accidental---Engineer Says He Blew the Whistle and That Bell Was Ringing---What Happened at the Crossing.

Although Coroner Greer's jury found that the death of James Cowie was accidental it also found that the crossing on which he was killed and Elmore Liddell injured on Dominion Day is dangerous, as the verdict contained an urgent appeal to the G.T.R. to set up some sort of a protective device in the form of a warning signal. The jurors' verdict follows:

"We the jury empanelled to inquire into the death of James Cowie find from the evidence submitted that he was killed on July 1, by the G.T.R. noon train on the Monaghan crossing and that his death was accidental and that no blame can be attached to anyone. But, we would suggest that the G.T.R. be requested to have an electric bell or some other device installed and we believe that a number of accidents may be averted by such, on account of the crossing's danger, the view of the train being obstructed."

Joseph Rogers one of the witnesses told of seeing the deceased and Liddell at the C.P.R. crossing. Both got out of the rig as though they were going to stop and then got back into the rig. He could not swear as to the condition of the men.

Mrs. McGregor who resides at a house near the scene of the accident stated she heard the whistle blow while she was in the front partion of the house. She then walked to the kitchen and heard Mrs. Millard say, "They're going to be struck." She rushed to the window and could not remember further. She could not say what the difference in time would be between the train's whistle and the accident.

"Were you talking to G. T. R. officials?" asked Acting Crown Attorney Wearing.

The witness admitted she had.

Mrs. McGill who was in the house with Mrs. McGregor also heard the whistle. She noticed the rig approaching the tracks and could not say whether the driver had halted the horse or not.

Dr. McCullough stated that when he attended Liddell he noticed clearly that the man had been drinking.

Engineer Lamb.

James Lamb the engineer in charge of the "death" train stated that the train was thirty minutes late pulling out of Peterborough, leaving 12.11. It was travelling at 15 miles per hour when the accident occurred. He blew his whistle one third of a mile from the Monaghan crossing. The bell was ringing all the time. When he was one hundred feet from the crossing he noticed the rig and he lifted his hand to again pull the whistle. He noticed then that the driver of the rig who was still about twenty feet from the track had pulled his horse up. Shortly afterwards, quicker than the engineer could describe, the driver raised his whip and struck the horse.

It lunged forward and when the witnessed the danger he brought the emergency brakes into operation but it was too late. The witness stated that the bell which was operated automatically by air had been ringing continuously since leaving the city. It was easy to see the crossing more than one hundred and fifty feet ahead and he could not say how far he was from the rig when he first noticed it, but he thought it was over one hundred and fifty feet. Examined by Coroner Greer he stated that any sensible man would readily admit that the crossing was a dangerous one. He was also cross examined regarding bell signals and explained that bell signals were operated according to the danger of the crossings. He stated that he had never been informed that the Monaghan crossing was a dangerous one and his conductor J. McCarthy corroborated his evidence.

BUILDING PERMITS

Figures obtained at the City Clerk's Department to-day give an increase of $45,224.50 in building for the first six months of the year 1914. Already this year 315 permits issued total $351,690 to 257 permits issued during the first six months of the year previous, amounting to $305,365.50, giving the above increase in actual figures.

For the entire year of 1913 some 371 permits amounted to $488,540.50.

The figures, showing the number and amount per month, are:

Building Permits.

1914	January 4		$28,500
	February ...3		300
	March 19		5,665
	April 70		98,015
	May 75		105,260
	June 44		113,950
1913	January 6		$ 5,400
	February 5		7,500
	March 10		2,320
	April 56		115,586.50
	May 50		78,603
	June 36		94,506

From the above tabulated figures a slight idea can be obtained as to the steady growth of Peterborough, which during the past few years has been nothing short of remarkable, when one considers the money stringency. Evidently this is a thing of the past for a brief review of the permits give evidence of a better class of dwellings and factory construction rapid.

Contractors state that this year upon the completion of building this city will be richer by over $500,000 worth of the best buildings possible, mostly dwellings.

MORE BIRTHS FEWER DEATHS AND WEDDINGS

Already this year the population has been increased by some 251 births compared with 245 for the first six months of last year. The death rate this year is considerably lower giving indication of a healthy condition, prevailing.

TWO MISSING AFTER JOY RIDE

Jos. Long Has Hazy Memory of Big Night.

As the result of a drunken spree, one man, Robert Dixon and an unknown woman are missing. Jos. Long appeared in Police Court this morning, on the charge of being drunk while in charge of a team of horses. He was remanded until Monday owing to being unable to give an account of the mysterious disappearance of the woman and Dixon. Constables Reid and Servante this morning about 2 o'clock found the remains of the waggon near the Auburn Woolen Mills. Long was found some distance out, trying to lead the team back to the city. He was very drunk. He expressed the idea to the constables that he was in East City, on his way home.

A thorough search was made by the constables, but nothing of the missing pair was found. Both constables express the opinion that the man might have wandered to the river where he fell in, owing to his intoxicated condition, and the fact that the river is only a few feet from the road where the smashed wagon was found. This morning Dixon had not been seen at his home, giving further indications that something serious had happened. The police are making a strenuous search for the pair.

Long this morning in Police Court stated that the team had run away. He denied having had a woman in the wagon.

He did not know what become of Dixon except that he thought he fell out of the wagon during the runaway.

Dixon and Long were about the city last evening. Long is well over six feet four inches, and Dixon under five feet, making an ideal Mutt and Jeff combination.

WOMAN SCREAMED FOR HELP

Was Held in Buggy by Two Men.

"Oh, my God, save me. Can't some one help me?" was the terrified cry that chilled the hearts of several residents of Water street last evening shortly before 11 o'clock, when a single rig containing two men and a woman screaming, and evidently trying to get away from the men who were holding her. Passersby yelled for the party to stop, but met with no responce. Constables Reid and Servante, after a hot chase, were unable to apprehend the men or get sufficient clue to their whereabouts.

Members of the force continued the search for the party and came across another party, but not the one who caused the excitement.

Today the police are of the opinion they have a clue, and an arrest may be made shortly.

It is announced that the Sunday school will meet to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

FUNERAL SERVICE HELD AT HOFBURG

VIENNA, July 4.—In the presence of Emperor Francis Joseph, the new heir to the throne — the Archduke Charles Francis Joseph—many archdukes and archduchesses, cabinet ministers, diplomats and high military and civil officials, funeral services for the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, the Duchess of Hohenberg, who were assassinated last week, were held in the chapel of the Hofburg yesterday afternoon.

Emperor Francis Joseph and the members of the imperial family had assembled in the Gobelin Salon of the Hofburg and proceeded thence to the chapel. The aged emperor and the new heir apparent to the throne occupied seats on the oraterium above the right side of the high altar, while the ambassadors had places on the left. Twenty members of the corps of Gentlemen at Arms in gorgeous uniforms stood at attention at the sides of the catafalque.

The ecclesiastical procession, wher the emperor and the imperial family had taken their seats, came slowly down the aisle, headed by the court master of ceremonies and twenty acolytes carrying lighted candles and took places at the sides of the coffins. The Cardinal Prince Pifil, Archbishop of Vienna, assisted by two bishops, officiated at the service, which was very brief. The only music was an anthem, which was beautufily sung by the court choir, composed entirely of boys.

Later in the evening the children of the archduke and duchess, accompanied by the Countess Chotek, proceeded to the chapel and prayed by the side of the coffins of their parents. Their grief was heartrending.

FUNERAL TO BE SIMPLE

Late Jos. Chamberlain Will be Buried Monday

LONDON, July 4. — Hon. Joseph Chamberlain's funeral, which, according to his own wish, will be a most simple one, will be held in Messiah Unitarian Church, Birmingham, next Monday. Interment will be in Hockley Cemetery. In his youth Mr. Chamberlain was a Sunday School teacher in the Messiah Church.

Mrs. Chamberlain throughout the day received numerous messages of condolence, including telegrams from King George, Queen Mary and the Queen Mother Alexandra and other members of the royal family and from prominent persons at home and abroad.

The Morning Post, reviewing Hon. Joseph Chamberlain's work at the Colonial Office, says that the people of Canada or Australia felt at last that they had to deal with a statesman who understood their needs and feelings and sympathized to the full with their aspirations.

Even if no positive achievement had marked his tenure of office, the new atmosphere has created a new spirit, which, if introduced into the relations between the Mother Country and her daughter states, would alone have done much to bring to reality the once shadowy dream of imperial union.

Last night's Star (Radical) says Chamberlain will be remembered as a statesman who shattered two great political parties and deluged South Africa in blood. Whatever judgment posterity may pass upon these three capital cataclysms, at least it must see in him one of those dynamic personalities which alter the course of history and mould the destinies of nations.

"Peace to his ashes," says The Star. "He has gone at a moment when peace trembles in the balance and when wisest men are prone to plunge into the falsehood of extremes. It may be that his passing may sober partisanship and dispose factions to listen to reason."

BRITISHER IN MEXICO IN DANGER OF EXECUTION

Vice-Consul Has Been Arrested, Held for Court Martial and Is in Peril of Being Shot.

EL PASO, Texas, July 4.—Albert St. Clair Douglas, British vice-consul at Zacatecas, has been arrested by the Constitutionalists, held for court-martial, and may be shot. This information, which was imemdiately telegraphed to Washington, was received here yesterday by Vice-Consul H. C. Myles from James Coldwell, British vice-consular agent at Zacatecas. The telegram from Coldwell stated that Douglas had been arrested and imprisoned on the charge that he assisted the Federals prior to and during the siege of Zacatecas.

Douglas denied that he had acted in any other than his official capacity, and insisted that his actions were absolutely neutral throughout the Zacatecas campaign. The rebels, however, refused to release him, and are now preparing a summary court-martial. Myles, immediately upon receiving the telegram, after notifying the British embassy, got into communication with prominent rebel officials here. Just what demands he made upon them is not known, but a promise was exacted that the trial of the British consul would not be started until American Consul Theodore Hamm arrived at Zacatecas from Durango to see that the proceedings were legitimate.

No word was given out regarding the character of the communication sent to the British embassy at Washington.

Washington Is Worried.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The Department of State and the British embassy are seriously worried over what threatens to be a repetition of the Benton case in the arrest by Constitutionalists of Albert St. Clair Douglas, British vice-consul at Zacatecas. Mr. Douglas appealed to the British embassy, after directing the British consular agent at Torreon to take the matter up direct with Gen. Villa, solicited the good offices of the State Department.

The specific charge against Mr. Douglas is that he instructed the Federal troops in military tactics prior to the capture of Zacatecas by the rebels. But, according to information here, though Mr. Douglas was pointedly requested by the Federals to instruct them, he consistently declined to aid them in any way. This information has been laid before the State Department and Gen. Villa.

TURNBULL COMPANY OPENS AT MODERN NEW HOME

Departmental Store That Occupies the Front Rank---Record Crowds Visited and Inspected New Store and Goods This Morning.

An informal opening of Turnbull's excellent, newly erected building at the corner of George and Simcoe Streets took place this morning and completed an epoch in the success which has attended the firm's business since organization. The new new building is a triumph in a business sense and apart from that is a credit to the city of Peterboro because it can be safely said that Turnbulls has given this city one of the finest stores in the country from architectural, picturesque, and shopping standpoints. Aside from the building which compares in beauty and detail with any in the province, Turnbulls also aim to improve the business both from their own standpoint and the appreciation of the buyer and although the building will occupy a front rank among the departmental stores of the province the high standard attained by Turnbulls will also combine to increase in efficiency. All morning the store was stronged and the expressions of satisfaction heard on all sides were well merited. The key note of the throng was "excellent in every respect" including picturesqueness, comfort and facilities for service. The history of Turnbull's dates back many years and this morning's opening of the new building is an evidence of the patronage Turnbulls have demanded because of the efforts to serve the public in a strictly business manner. Quality is one of the strong points in the policy of Turnbulls, quantity of quality is another and the seekers of fashions always have their cravings satisfied at Turnbulls. Genial, ever anxious to please clerks make up the huge staff of employees.

The Exterior.

The exteriorf of the building strikes one at a glance as a structure of beauty. Its white Cleveland Canyon stone forms a pleasing contrast as it towers above the other buildings and the fact that the building is situated on a corner gave the architect wider scope for his genius. The building is of steel structure while above the first floor the exterior is of New Jersey terra cotta. The building is 60x90 and covers four floors and a basement. One feature of the structure are the windows, which offer excellent qualities for display. The windows on George street have a depth of seven feet while those on Simcoe Street have a depth of six feet. The panels in the background are of Honduras Crotch Mahogany. The effect offered by this unique wood, is very striking. One would think that the lines displayed were the result of graining but such is not the case and the design is the natural formation of the wood, brought out by stain. The upper portion of the window backgrounds are of chipped glass. The lighting of the windows is provided by ninety x-ray reflectors which add to the effectiveness of the windows. The entrances on George and Simcoe Street when finally completed will be vestibule ones, while a brass railing will be installed around the store to protect the basement windows. The doorway floors are of the tile with a brass curbing as a protection.

The Interior.

The interior is very elaborate. White metallic ceilings and the white pillars give the store a very bright appearance. All the interior work was done by local men which is one of the strong points in the policy of Turnbulls. The silent salesmen have mahogany bases and were manufactured by the Peterboro Show Case Company while the shelving and counters are of birch mahogany and the work of the Peterboro Furniture Company. All the fixtures are of simple design in order to avoid the collection of dust. The flooring is of mill construction, the planks being laid edgeways which makes it as near fireproof as possible. The cash carrier system was installed by the Lamson Cable Company and is up to the minute in every respect. The lighting system is perfect in design and effectiveness, being of the semi-indirect variety, while special attention has also been paid to ventilation purposes. Another departure from olden days is the installation of a dust chute which carries waste from any floor in the building to the cellar. The elevator is one of the finest installed by the Stevens company of Glasgow and is operated by electricity, a 19 horse power motor being used. The switchboard which controls the lighting of the building is located in the basement and is thoroughly protected while the wiring of the building is contained in conduits which eliminates any possibility of fire from defective wires. The coal bin is situated underneath the sidewalk on Simcoe Street, a cement bin having been erected for storing the fuel. The heating is of steam and twin Safford boilers form the heat centers. Hot and cold water is to be had at all times. The freight elevator is located on Simcoe Street and the incoming goods will be distributed from that point.

The Departments.

On the left of the George Street entrance is the parasol and umbrella department and wash goods. On the west of the Simcoe St. entrance or directly inside the door are the dress goods and silks. On the right of the George Street entrance the neckwear, belts, handkerchiefs, gloves and hosiery departments are located. Just west of the elevator, which is situated in the center of the building on the north, are the linens. In the center of the lower floor the corset and ribbon department is arranged, while just rear of that department are the ladies' and children's underwear and smallwares. Left of the center towards the front of the store are the leather goods and drug sundries while at the rear are the knitted goods, embroidery, dress trimmings and laces. The stairway leading to the second floor is located in the north west corner of the store and is a wide affair. Half way up to the second floor is a balcony on which is arranged a ladies' rest room, cash office and private office.

On the second floor the ready to wear, millinery and white wear departments are situated. There is also a Paris room where garments of extra high class will be displayed.

On the third floor are the carpets, rugs, linoleums, curtain materials, and upholstery, while on the fourth floor there is a sample room, supply room, advertising manager's office, decorating manager's office, dress making department, waiting and fitting room, work room, lady employees, wash and cloak room and customers' wash room.

In the basement, new departments will be opened as soon as business demands and as soon as the store is settled. All matters have not been arranged finally, still there was sufficient detail and beauty about the place this morning to bring forth comments of a most faverable nature. A grand opening will take place in September when the fall goods will be displayed and when every department will be arranged in detail.

The building was erected by the Toronto Savings and Loan Company, for Mr. F. J. Might who has been sole proprietor of Turnbulls since 1901, the contractors being Wm. Langford and Son.

Huge Crowds.

The crowd which packed the store all morning smashed all records so far as this city is concerned. At the noon hour a mass of the city's particular shoppers crowded the aisles of the store but the arrangement of the passageways did away with the usual puff and crowd which is noticeable and although every inch of the first and second floors was taken up there was no confusion when one wished to find a particular department which is striking proof of the detail which has been followed out in the construction of the building. The clerks had a very busy day but each one wore a happy smile.

POLICE COURT.

The case of Jesse Aires, charged with illegal fishing was adjourned at Police Court this morning until Monday.

The case of W. W. Theobald, a local motorist, charged with alleged fast driving of his motor car was adjourned until Monday. Constable Dainard gave evidence that Theobald was driving at a rate of thirty miles an hour on George Street.

SOME MORE TROUBLE.

Another evidence of the carelessness of inserting conduits and mains on the city streets was unearthed yesterday afternoon when the work of installing a surface drain from Charlotte Street north along Aylmer was begun. A conduit laid some time ago by the Machine Telephone Co. was encountered, and it was with a great deal of trouble and extra work that the pipes for the surface drain could be put down satisfactorily. To overcome trouble, a map is now being made by City Engineer Parsons, and on it every main and conduit in the city will be shown.

A SMALL BLAZE.

The firemen were called to the Campbell Flour Mill yesterday afternoon at 3.50 to extinguish a blaze which started from a nail falling into some machinery and throwing a spark upon some dust. The employees had the flames well under control when the brigade arrived. No damage resulted.

SOME CHANGES MADE.

The many who patronize the reference room in the public library will appreciate the alterations made to the room. It has been enlarged considerably by the removal [illegible] tition which separated the room from a smaller room and has also been rearranged to benefit the readers.

SHOWER BATHS IN THE CHURCH.

THE TORONTO STAR contained a picture of the new Methodist church to be built at Yarmouth Road and Christie Street, Toronto, at a cost of $60,000. In the attached Sunday school is to be installed a modern gymnasium, complete with all the appliances for improving the physical life of the scholars. It will be divided into a boys' and girls' department and will be equipped with shower baths.

The Methodist Church has always leaned to reforms and innovations. Usually these have been in the interest of its adherents, but it is not alone in making striking departures from what established customs would consider the field of the church. Club rooms have been established in connection with various churches where young people and others meet for social intercourse. Billiard and pool tables have been placed in some of these club rooms, but we do not recall a case where euchre cards were used. Literary and debating societies are common in most churches. Bishop Potter tried the experiment of starting a saloon that would be run in a godly fashion. A good many churches have established bowling greens and lawn tennis courts, as well as baseball and hockey teams for those desirous of playing these games. Catholic churches have built Lyceums in some places where their young people meet for social evenings. Now we have a church installing a gymnasium and shower baths.

We must admit that the social conveniences of churches show progress. In time, as people indulge sanely in certain amusements that at present are not in favor with the churches, these may acquire a religious sanction. Theatrical performances that were once common, were driven out, but are creeping back under other names, as cantatas, choir concerts, mock parliaments and trials, and other forms. Indeed, the churches have invaded the theatre by holding religious meetings within their walls. We cannot say when poker and bones will lose their evil countenance, but if a strict Puritan could only come into our churches today he would doubtless think one of two things: either that religion had gone to the Devil, or that he was in the place of the damned. Of course we do not believe either of these, nor does the public, but the contrast between churches today, with their various social activities, and those of a century or so ago, is indeed striking.

One naturally asks, in viewing the way the churches have expanded their field to include amusements and social activities, why they have done so, whether it is really a part of church work, and whether the church has progressed in reality thereby. Churches have had one important reason for establishing most of their social institutions, namely, that these did not exist outside the churches in a proper form, or else were beyond the reach of those desiring them, for monetary or other causes. To be sure, the ostensible reason has been to interest young people in the church, and no doubt the church has benefitted to a certain extent in this regard, but, in establishing tennis courts, gymnasiums, club rooms, etc., they were giving their young people something they did not usually have. Whether these things are within the province of the churches is another and debatable question. Humanity has undoubtedly been benefitted by churches doing things that ought to have been done by the state. The public has been educated by churches in more than one thing that is now done by the state, as protection to dumb animals. But, when churches go out of their field and do other things, even when a benefit, it is very probable that the cause of religion suffers. Shower baths are a desirable thing, and when a church installs them, it seems to be more an argument for public baths than an innovation to be imitated. There is always this danger, that the means taken to interest young people in the churches may defeat their purpose by absorbing all their interest. It strikes us that this danger already exists to a degree not realized by a great many people, for the indifference that is so noticeable at the present time shows a lack of interest in the very principles for which churches exist. If the people are losing interest in the churches, all these social affairs are only artificial stimulants to spiritual needs, that, having performed a spasmodic function, leave the churches in a backward condition and unable to perform efficiently their legitimate duty to society.

DANGER OF BIGNESS.

TO RETURN to the Claflin failure, it will be recalled that at a time when the great combinations of industry and capital were forming, skepticism was expressed whether it would be possible to find men with the ability to handle such enormous business. It is one thing to find managers for one great store, but to manage thirty or forty great stores in a group may require men with thirty or forty times the ability of those who manage a single enterprise. It looks as if the Claflin business had grown so unwieldy that it was simply unmanageable.

CITIZENS of Peterborough will be pleased with the signal honor accorded their member in the House of Commons, Mr. J. H. Burnham, on becoming a member of the Authors' Club of London, England.

THE CHAOS IN MEXICO.

ONE CAN GET an idea of the terrible effect of the war in Mexico upon that country's industrial life by noting how these wars have demoralized the railroads of that country. The national railways in Mexico, largely if not wholly, owned by American capitalists, have passed through terrible times, while the fighting has continued as between the Constitutionalists and the Federals. The rails have been torn up, rolling stock burned, telegraphs crippled, the cars while in business have been riddled with bullets. Trains have been dynamited and hurled into the air, with their living freight. In the teeth of the most terrific cannonades the trains have been kept going. The employees have shown great and enduring courage, while the officials have acted like heroes. The losses are almost incalculable, and it will be many years before there can be reconstruction and profitable running again, and these troublous conditions must prevail until peace is assured. There are heroes who do not bear firearms.

RULES FOR YOUR HEALTH.

SOME PEOPLE are continually harping on health rules. Others seem to think such rules are all bosh and that a good healthy disease is desirable. Still others are rather reckless, and make an effort to enjoy life and run the risk of several healthy diseases. One observer advises people to take their choice of several courses. Thus runs the menu: Drink water and get typhoid fever. Drink milk and get tuberculosis. Drink whiskey and get the jimjams. Drink soup and get fat. Eat meat and encourage cancer, apoplexy and appendicitis. Eat oysters and absorb typhoid gastric poison germs. Eat vegetables and give the system Asiatic thin-blooded weakness. Eat dessert and die with paresis or something else. Smoke cigarettes and die too soon. Drink coffee and fall into insomnia and nervous prostration. Drink tea and get weak heart. Drink wine and get gout. The majority of people, however, prefer to do most of these things, and let the insurance companies take the risk.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

PRESIDENT WILSON takes a novel way of sounding the opinion of the country. J. P. Morgan conferred with him recently at the White House on various aspects of business and financial problems now before the country. This interview was first of a series the President plans to hold with prominent business men. Henry Ford, of Detroit, will be the next caller.

THE GRAIN GROWERS' Guide thinks Premier Borden would have done better to refuse his title, and instances a few good Liberals, like Asquith and Lloyd George, who have not been knighted. We failed to find it scoring Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Viscount Gladstone, Lord Haldane and many others. This talk about titles is like trying to make the mountain come to Mahomet.

THE FIRST NUMBER of the "Old Countryman" has reached The Review. It is a weekly review of Canadian and Old Country sport, but its style is more that of Britain than Canada. For that reason it is a somewhat distinctive publication, and its first number is indicative of a successful career. May it be so.

Farmer's Advocate.

A Terrible Punishment.
Lethbridge Herald.

A story is going the rounds of the press to the effect that Mr. W. J. Battersall, of Neepawa, Man., the father of a large family, found it necessary to legally register the arrival of another child. One of the questions he had to write a reply to in the blank form was "Occupation of the mother." To this Mr. Battersall wrote the answer "Raising slaves to be skinned." For this offence it is stated that he was sentenced to fifteen days in jail at Portage la Prairie.

Politics Produces Peculiar Cases.
Montreal Gazette.

One of the "abolish the bar" candidates in yesterday's Ontario election is solicitor for a distilling company. There are local records of a brewer and a distiller receiving prohibition support in parliamentary contests. Politics can produce curious combinations to work for good as well as for humbug. When a man interested in the success of a distillery cries out for the restriction of the sale of the distillery's products, however good is the situation, is not easy to find.

Money Put to a Good Use.
Montreal Daily Star.

It is said that Ford, of Detroit, is going to devote some of his millions to cancer research. They could not be better employed. A lot of money appears to be directed in this way just now; but still the physicians continue to make discouraging reports. Knowledge is something which money cannot always buy. Still it can release an increased number of experts for research work; and the more people there are hunting — intelligently — for a thing, the better is the chance of finding it. Certainly few boons could be conferred on the human race which could equal a cure for cancer.

How the Mighty Have Fallen.
The Wall Street Journal.

At the New Street entrance to the Standard Oil building, the other day, a passerby would have noticed about forty old, high-top mahogany desks. They were being parted from the old building forever, to be sold for what the junk man would pay.

What secrets they held in their numberless drawers in the days when the Sherman law was on the books, but no one knew it! Their many drawers, their closed tops were symbolic of the days of secretiveness, and they have been displaced at last by the more open and "efficient" equipment of today.

A Condescending Service.
New York Evening Post.

An American tells of his "tipping" experience at a certain hotel on the Continent. The employees, in time honored fashion, were lined up at the entrance. Accordingly, he distributed the tips according to the schedule he had memorized from the guide book.

He was surprised though when his progress to his cab was barred by a lad in buttons.

"What do you want?" asked the American.

"A few centimes, sir," said the lad, "according to the usual custom, sir."

"Well, what did you do for me?"

"Why, monsieur," said the lad, "I saw you get into the cab."

GEORGE FITCH
By Walt Mason

He's long and lean and scrawny, and has a solemn air, and folks would say, "That Johnnie is loaded down with care; he has a secret sorrow that goads him evermore, and he should try to borrow some sunshine at the store." Which shows how, in their guessing, the folks are off their base, for George has naught distressing about him, but his face. Within him always bubbles the antidote for grief, the mirth that kills our troubles, and gives our woe relief. You read George Fitch, and after you've conned a score of words, you gargle round with laughter and chirrup like the birds. As clean as rippling water his humor flows along, his music is sure the daughter of Joyousness and Song. He cheers the chronic fretter, reforms the dismal bore, and makes this old world better than e'er it was before. He spreads glee by the acre, so what's the odds, my dears, if like an undertaker the humorist appears?

BLOW YOUR OWN HORN

IT'S up to every man, woman and child of us tew do more er less shoutin' on our own account. We've jest as much right to advertise our qualifications as a hukster has to shout his wares, only there's a particular way of doin' it that should be strictly observed. When I say shout I don't mean that ye do it with yer voice. I mean do it with yer manner. Look straight out at the world with level eyes and squared jaw. Keep yer pose and know when to smile and when to uppercut. Sumhow I like a fighter and havin' had considerable experience with animals I'd opine thet the dog who sets tight and looks gravely out at the pack ain't goin' to be undervalued any er molested greatly by the heel-bitin' mongrels. Arter all, shoutin' is only wind, but advertisin' yer wuth in yer personality is tale backbone and grizzle and ye can't beat thet combination as a genuine advertisement.

A DARING RUSE

Practiced by One Working For the Russian Revolution

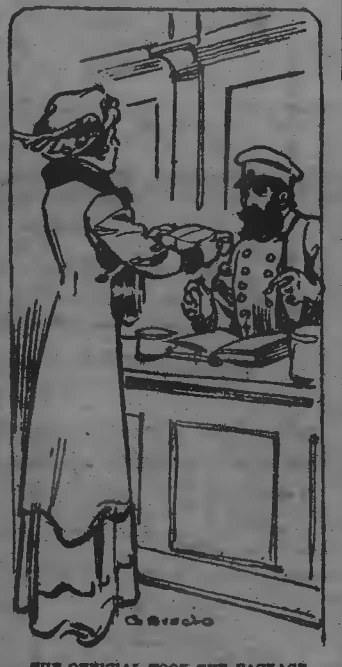
By MARIA FOEDEROVNA

Women are natural educators, especially of children, and a great many of us Russian women have been drawn into revolution through efforts to break down that ignorance which unfits the large mass of our people for free government. I am the daughter of a Russian country gentleman living on the family estate in the province of Kostroma and began my revolutionary career by teaching the moujiks (peasants) on my father's estate. I taught not only the children, but grown men and women, and when I saw their anxiety to better their condition, which they seemed to know they would do by learning, I felt that I could take any risk in their behalf.

When I was stopped in this work I did not attempt openly to defy the government, because I knew such a course would be futile. I allied myself with one of those secret organizations whose object it was to rid Russia of our autocratic form and replace it with one that would give us liberty to teach the ignorant. This took me to the fountain head, St. Petersburg. My father endeavored to persuade me to desist, but I could not bear to remain with tied hands among a people who were more like cattle than human beings, yet endowed with a desire to better their condition.

When I began to work secretly in the cause of the revolution I entered upon a life of duplicity. The foundation of a revolution must necessarily involve organization, and that could be achieved only by secret methods, for the government was aware of what was going on and met our secret efforts by secret efforts of its own.

My work in St. Petersburg was that of messenger. Documents, sometimes printed, sometimes written, sometimes in plain language, sometimes in cipher, must be constantly conveyed from one point to another. An ordinary messenger, such as is used at telegraph or other offices, is a mere conveyance, and almost any one will suffice for such a purpose, but to carry that which the whole power of an autocratic government is used to intercept and which, if intercepted, will cause the banishment to the icy regions of Siberia of those implicated, besides doing great harm to the cause, requires coolness, courage and resource.



THE OFFICIAL TOOK THE PACKAGE.

One night at a secret meeting of the circle of which I was a member I was given a package which I was told contained printed circulars condemning the government and calling on those who loved freedom to enroll themselves for the cause. There was nothing in the circulars in case they fell into the hands of the government to injure any one but the person having them in his or her possession, though such person might be led to implicate others. On account of this possible implication and for my own safety, I was cautioned as usual that if suspicious of being watched to get rid of the package if possible. It contained a hundred circulars, which was all one person would be intrusted with to carry on account of size. I had a pocket made in the skirt of my dress especially adapted to carry concealed articles.

The morning after receiving my instructions, being ready to start out on the duty assigned me, I looked out of my window down on to the street to see if any suspicious person loitered near. People were passing to and fro. A short distance up the street two men were standing talking together. They seemed to be discussing something which I assumed was of no importance to me, for they never once glanced in my direction.

And yet these men were spies of the government. One of them was instructing the other that the house in which I lived was under suspicion and any one issuing from it was to be followed, and if an arrest seemed warranted the person suspected was to be taken before a police officer. But I, not knowing this, went downstairs and pursued my way unconscious of the danger that threatened me.

However, I had noted the two men and, after walking a short distance, stopped at a shop window ostensibly to look at the goods displayed there, but really to glance back at the two men I have mentioned. They had separated, and one of them was coming toward me. He stopped to look up at the signs above him as though looking for some especial place. Had he come right on I might not have been very fearful. As it was I inferred that, seeing me glance back from before the shop window, he had pretended to be looking for some particular address in order to divert my suspicion from him.

My heart leaped up in my throat. However, I would soon know if this man was following me, and I nerved myself to meet the issue if he were. I walked on, turning down a cross street leading away from the point I had started for, and presently, stopping again at a shop where women's hats were displayed, I glanced back. The man I feared was just passing behind a projection of a building.

I now felt assured that he was watching me, but resolved to make one more trial before acting upon the supposition that he was. I walked on and turned down another street, taking a direction toward the point from which I had started. Then, suddenly turning at a right angle so that I could see my shadower without appearing to do so, I caught him coming toward me and looking straight at me.

Owing to the dangerous work in which I was engaged I spent much of my leisure time in thinking up expedients in case I should be caught red handed. I now resolved to put in practice one of the most daring of which I had conceived. I was sure that this man was a police official and that he was following me. At any moment he was liable to have me arrested, though I fancied that unless he believed he had excited my suspicions he would permit me to go where I intended, leaving me to implicate others. As to dropping my package, I carried a knife with which I could slit my pocket and let it drop out. Could I have got far enough away from my shadower I would have done this, but after I turned so quickly as to see him coming for me he drew nearer and I was in great trepidation as to being arrested.

I therefore resolved to put in practice the plan I have referred to. I knew very well every police station in St. Petersburg and directed my steps to the nearest one. On reaching it I turned into the building, my watcher following me to the very door, and in a few minutes I was standing at a desk, behind which sat an official in uniform.

"I have found a package in the street," I said, "wrapped in such fashion as printed matter is usually wrapped to send through the mails. There is no address on it. I was about to tear off the cover when it occurred to me that it might contain something of an illegal character. It seemed to me that I would better turn it over to a representative of the government. If it is ordinary matter no harm is done; if there is anything criminal in it my action in bringing it to you is proof that I am in no way to blame for having it in my possession."

I nerved myself to say this as ingenuously as possible. The official took the package which I handed him and, breaking it open, ran his eye over it. The expression on his face changed at once from one of carelessness to one of intense interest.

"Where did you find this?" he asked.

"I was looking in at a shop window not far from here in which hats were exhibited, and, casting my eyes down to the flagging, saw it lying at my feet."

"Did you see any one moving away who might have dropped it?"

I pretended to ransack my memory, then said:

"After emerging from my home this morning to do some shopping I noticed a man going in the same direction as I. He had been standing at the milliner's window just before I reached it."

"Can you identify him?"

"I could if I were to see him, but he is doubtless far from me now, one of the crowd."

When I said this I believed my shadower was at the door of the police office. And yet on second thought it seemed that seeing me go into the station he would suppose that he had got on to the wrong track and would abandon his chase. But he would likely report it, and then I would not get off so easily.

The officer at the desk took my address and permitted me to go where I liked; but, believing that he would send some one to make sure that I had given him the right one, I left him resolving to go straight home. I was relieved not to see my shadower waiting for me outside the station. As soon as I reached my home I put on a disguise I kept concealed there—that of a decrepit old man—and left the building. At the door I passed my shadower, talking with a man I had seen at the police office.

I made my way to the home of a prominent member of our circle, to whom I told my story. Through the secret machinery by which important news was communicated he flashed it among the members, and that night, dressed as a young man, I was driven to a railway station and furnished with money, a ticket and a passport of a citizen of the United States. I crossed the border, arriving safely in Germany, and for awhile my efforts on behalf of the revolution ceased.

How my friends secured the passport I never learned, but I fancy it was stolen by some one interested in the cause of the revolution.

Sewing Thin Fabrics.

Great annoyance is often caused when sewing silk ninon or any other flimsy material on the machine by the material puckering up. If a piece of paper is stitched at the back of the material the machine will work quite smoothly over the thinnest of goods and the paper can be torn away quite easily afterward.

Woman's World

Miss Mabel Boardman and the Red Cross Work.

MISS MABEL BOARDMAN.

One of the most interesting women in the United States at this time is Miss Mabel Boardman of Washington, society woman and philanthropist, whose position as chairman of the executive committee of the Red Cross society makes her practically head of that organization.

No sooner did the trouble with Mexico assume alarming proportions than Miss Boardman called a meeting in Washington, which was attended by representatives of the Red Cross society, various patriotic organizations and women's clubs, all anxious to cooperate in the work.

Miss Boardman and her associates told what the society was prepared to do in case of war.

For volunteer nurses there was no need, since Miss Jane Delano, head of the American Society of Red Cross Nurses, had ready for active service 5,000 experienced trained nurses. In fact, all that was needed was funds and supplies to carry on the work should there be need of them. An emergency committee with Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the president, as honorary chairman was appointed.

BAKING DISHES.

They May Be Adorned With Handsome Hand Embroidered Bands.

Baking dish bands offer opportunities for the needlewoman to make a gift that would certainly be acceptable to the busy housewife who loves dainty table accessories.

These bands are made to fit around the baking dishes and are fastened with linen or crocheted buttons and loops. They are perfectly straight and either scalloped or hemstitched along the edges.

The hemstitched ones are usually made of homespun linen decorated with cross stitch in some quaint design with colors which harmonize with the dishes. A little pine tree pattern, seen the other day on one of these bands, was done in two shades of green and was very effective.

The scalloped bands may have as the only decoration a monogram of three letters. The scallops and monograms could be embroidered in colors or all white, whichever was preferred.

These embroidered bands present a more elegant appearance than if a folded napkin were wrapped around the dish.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Can Be Averted by Feeding the Starved Nerves With Rick Red Blood

Nourish your nerves—that is the only way you can overcome life's worst misery, nervous exhaustion. The fits of depression and irritation, the prostrating headaches, the weakness and trembling of legs, the unsteady hand and the imperfect digestion that mark the victim of nerve weakness, must end in nervous breakdown if neglected.

Nourish your nerves by the natural process of filling your veins with rich, red, health-giving blood. Your nerves are crying out for pure blood and the mission of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is to make new, rich blood. This explains why these pills have proved successful in so many cases of nervous disease that did not yield to ordinary treatment. For example, Mr. W. H. Weldon, Annapolis, N.S., says: "In the strenuous life I have to follow the drain on my system was so great that my nerves became shattered, the blood impoverished and my whole system undermined. I tried a number of so-called remedies without deriving any benefit. Finally having read so much about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I decided to try them. The result was beyond my expectation. I regained my energy; the blood and nerves were rebuilt; I lost the sense of constant tiredness I had felt and was filled with new life and energy. I have since used the pills with beneficial results in my family and will always have a word of praise for them.'

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail postpaid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUMMER BLOUSES.

Dressy Models Carried Out In Transparent Materials.

Fashion has never been more seductive in the matter of blouses. In the homes, at luncheons, at tea, at bridge, the modern blouse plays a great part. It is transparent. Made in lace, in tulle, in a thin crepe de chine, the charm of the blouse consists in its being void of lining.

Not only is the neck exposed, but even the shoulders and arms are seen dimly through the thin silks, laces or nets. The blouse then comes directly upon the neck and arms without an intervening fabric of batiste or cambric or the band of ribbon, once so fashionable.

A woman well gowned recently observed at a smart afternoon bridge wore a pale yellow blouse in a kind of spongy crepe de chine, semi-transparent, opening low at the neck, clinging to the firm, white shoulders and loops about the body.

The Dinner Hour.

The favorite hour for a formal dinner is either half past 7 or 8 o'clock. Less formal dinners are usually served at 7 o'clock. The question of the hour should depend upon the customs of the town in which one lives, upon the convenience of the guests or possibly upon the hours of the trains, if one lives out of town.

When to Call.

No young man should call on a lady unless she has asked him to do so or unless he brings a letter of introduction or he is taken by a friend who is sufficiently intimate to invite him to call.

SWOONS WHEN DEATH SENTENCE IS PRONOUNCED

Sydney, N.S., July 4.—For the second time within four months the dread sentence of death was passed in the court house in Sydney yesterday, when Gustav Brauer was found guilty and sentenced to die Sept. 16th for the murder of Elizabeth Kostol, a German girl aged 5 years and ten months at Birch Grove in May last.

The case for the prosecution had been conducted in the morning and D. A. Cameron, K.C., had opened for the defence. The proceedings in the afternoon were marked by distressing scenes, when, on giving evidence and afterwards while she sat with her son, the accused man's mother wept continuously and so affected the prisoner that he was weeping nearly the whole course of the proceedings. When the sentence of death was pronounced the prisoner swooned and fell heavily to the floor of the prisoner's box. He had to be assisted from the court.

His mother screamed out hysterically and the other Germans present seemed much perturbed and made their exit from the court-room.

In his summing, the Chief Justice said it was a most revolting case. A cruel and heinous murder had been committed, but happily the jury would not have to inquire into whether the prisoner at the bar was guilty or not. By his confession, backed by some other evidence, it was clear to them that he had been guilty of an aggravated murder.

After an absence of forty minutes the jury returned a verdict of guilty. After the usual questions the prisoner was sentenced to be hanged, Sept. 16th, in Sydney.

BISHOP MOBBED AT CONSECRATION

London, July 4.—Extraordinary scenes marked the consecration by the Bishop of Exeter of a church near Plymouth. For some time past local feeling has run high in consequence of the enforced departure of the popular curate, the Rev. T. Marchant, to whom a presentation was made recently by members of all denominations in the parish.

At the conclusion of the consecration ceremony a rush was made at the clergy as they left the church and cheers were raised for the absent curate.

Missiles were thrown at the vicar, and after a running fight for about a quarter of a mile, during which blows were freely exchanged, the bishop took refuge in a friendly automobile.

STUDIES IN CANADIAN IMPERIALISM

Imperial Self-Government

Written specially for the Daily Review by J. P. Laycock, M.A.

Imperial Self-Government.

Both Canadian political parties stand for self-government. The definition must however be left to them. To Liberalism more and more autonomy is being interpreted as direct Canadian control of Canadian interests; to Conservatism it signifies local governance of local affairs. The goal of the one is management of everything, of the other, the essential.

The Real Issue.

Such a provincial portrait of the issue misses the mark, is unfair to the ideas and ideals of the present party in power. In his speech of April 7th, 1914, Sir Wilfrid Laurier defined the constitutional issue more accurately than his followers, and at the same time proclaims himself a decentralizationist, if not more. "If we pass this bill," he declared with reference to the navy bill," we open a new page in the long and fateful struggle which has characterized Colonial government from its inception to this date, the struggle between concentration on the one side and expansion on the other, a struggle which we thought had been settled in favor of colonial expansion." The substitution on the one hand by the Liberal leader of "expansion" for colonial self-government, and on the other hand, by his followers of "self-government" or "Canadian self-government" reveals a change of attitude. The prefixing of the adjective "colonial" to self-government naturally restricted the operation of this principle to local affairs; the dropping of the modifier, the substitution of the term "expansion," analogous to "development" or the addition of the word "Canadian," enables the application if convenient, of the machinery of self-governance to imperial affairs with a secondary Canadian significance. It is the Liberal, therefore, and not the Conservative who seeks, in this sense at least, to open a new page in Canadian history. The tact of Sir Wilfrid in advocating change under the cloak of tradition, evolution, natural development, could not be better exemplified. The appeal to the natural Conservative in politics could not be more skilfully addressed.

The truth is that the old conditions, policies, remedies, have gone. Local self-government has been settled as it should be upon the local governments; imperial self-government remains to be disposed of. Whether the latter is to be administered by Great Britain and the over-sea dominions individually, or by the empire as a whole through the erection of new government machinery, is the problem today. The Liberal party stands for Canadian "expansion," the Conservative, for imperial constitutional consolidation. Any attempt of Canadian Liberalism to misguide the public mind by confusing the old and the new issue is unfair to its opponent.

The Liberal Argument.

This blind or wilful misrepresentation proceeds in this fashion. Prior to 1840 the British colonies in America possessed representative not responsible government. The administrative offices were held by persons permanently appointed, but without the consultation of the popular house or popular wishes. Misgovernment, the lack of harmony between the upper and lower chambers of government, the need of responsibility to the people, the interference of the imperial government, produced public agitation and ultimately rebellion.

"When Lorn Sydenham came," says an article in Collier's Weekly, Canadian Edition, November 30th, 1912, "He asked himself the question whether he was King or Minister; and decided that he was not king, to have Canadian ministers, whose advice he must take, but Minister, who should himself advise the King and receive the counsel of Canadian advisors only as recommendations, to be accepted or rejected as seemed best to him, in the light of what he conceived to be his duty, to be best. He and his successors who held that view were high minded, intelligent and capable; but, after conflict, the decision of Lord Sydenham had to be reversed. Lord Elgin came as King, and his Canadian Ministers were endowed with the same rights as British Ministers. It was accepted as essentially final that anything which required to be done in the working out of Canadian problems of development should be done by a Canadian Executive under responsibility only to the Canadian Parliament."

On this basis self-government was organised, and on this basis British Canadian constitutional relations were revised as occasion required. On this basis the legislature of the United Canadas secured complete control of the ungranted provincial lands and the revenue from land sales, in 1847 the imperial government renouncing control over all revenues of the provinces, revising accordingly the instructions to the governor, and resigning forever control or disposal of ungranted colonial lands in North America. On this basis, the parliament of the Union won the right to regulate its own trade and fiscal policy, in 1842 the central administration drawing up its last tariff for its trans-Atlantic dependencies, in the period from 1843 to 1846, owing to pressure of Canadian opinion, admitting Canada's exclusive right to perform this function, and finally, in 1859, resigning any supervision in the matter when Sir Alexander Galt, the Canadian Minister of Finance, replied to a despatch of the Duke of Newcastle in the interests of certain manufacturers in Sheffield, that such fell within "the affairs of the colony." On this basis Confederated Canada, by the foundational act of 1867, passed subject to the assent of the local legislatures, won for its Governor General in Council, except possibly in extreme cases, the right to veto provincial legislation previously exercised by the imperial government. On this basis Mr. Blake, while Minister of Justice, through correspondence with the Colonial Office, had the instructions to the Governor General changed particularly with regard to the prerogative of mercy. On this basis the Dominion next advanced in the negotiation of treaties involving Canadian interests, in 1871 Sir John A. Macdonald representing Canada at the Treaty of Washington; in 1880 and 1881 as the result of Sir Alexander Galt's representations to the Foreign and Colonial Offices the Dominion being freed from the obligations of fresh commercial treaties with foreign nations; in 1883 and 1888, in 1892 and 1893, Sir Charles Tupper as colleague of imperial plenipotentiaries conducting negotiations with Spain and the United States; and in 1897 the commercial treaties of Great Britain with Germany and Belgium, a barrier to imperial preference as it forced Canada to give to these countries all tariff concessions to the United Kingdom or its colonies, being denounced and in 1898 ended, owing to resolutions of the Canadian Commons and the Colonial Conference at Ottawa (1894.) The recurring phenomena in this process was colonial initiative, British resistance, and ultimately British concession.

But now, owing to the institution of the Imperial Conference, concludes the Canadian Liberal, it is British initiative, Canadian resistance, and even Canadian concession. After the gradual withdrawal of the British military establishment, imperial control of the local militia and marine, of defence by land and sea, is to be resurrected. Through the opposition of the Liberal Government of the day, the encroachments of General Hutton and Lord Dundonald in the affairs of the militia department were frustrated; but now it appears that the interference of British authorities in naval concerns may be more successful, and the spirit of Sydenham and Metcalfe revived. "In essence," to quote again from the article in Collier's Weekly, "the cause for which Mackenzie and Papineau fought through contumely to disaster, is the same cause that has of late been beaten back by the persistent and insidious aggressiveness of its opponents, until to-day, on the avowed intention to recommend a payment of tribute, with the issue in this its final form covered by the thinnest veil, no candidate was on hand to take his stand on the side of autonomy in an election held in the city that was the home of Papineau and Lafontaine."

The Liberal Argument Criticized.

Such misrepresentation under the assumed garb of historical fairness cannot be too strongly condemned. The struggle is no longer between 'colonial" and "British" authorities as insinuated, but between imperial centralizationists and decentralizationists, a conflict which in a greater or less degree is found throughout the whole parliamentary empire, of which the United Kingdom as well as the Dominion is a part. The old differences were not over 'Canadian problems of development" as inferred, but over Canadian problems of "internal" development. The old warcry was not "self-government" in toto, but "colonial self-government," not national "autonomy" but "local autonomy." Howe, Lafontaine, Baldwin, and the other reformers admitted the imperial right to regulate imperial interests. The British Parliament, the British Governors abroad, Elgin included, the temporary representatives of the empire in the absence of common constitutional machinery, in admitting the principles of responsible government in Canadian concerns, vigorously at the same time asserted as vital the retention of imperial governance of imperial affairs. The injustice of Liberal insinuations is therefore apparent: the principle of colonial autonomy was won; the wider interpretation of what were local affairs remained for the successors of Baldwin and Lafontaine. Whether the later ideas were always correct is another question, but as the matter stands, the Conservatives have more right than the Liberals to be considered the true heirs of the Baldwinian policy.

In some ways, this latter conception of "local self-government" was justifiable; in others, problematical. In spite of the view of Lord Durham, the control of the ungranted provincial lands and the revenue from land sales should fall under this caption, although co-operation between the mother country and the daughter dominion in encouraging British settlers for these lands is a mutual concern. Similarly, so far, experience has justified the conclusion that imperial interests in provincial legislation can be protected by the veto powers of the Governor General in Council as long as the Federal authorities consider local self-sacrifice desirable for the common welfare. However, in a much more vital way, questions of trade and the negotiation of treaties have an important imperial, as well as Canadian, significance, as the existence of the preferential tariff, for instance, demonstrates. Problems of defence by land and sea can be more efficiently solved when grouped as imperial rather than local.

Causes of Existing Conditions.

It was natural that in the absence of proper machinery for imperial self-government, and in consequence of existing extreme conditions, the local authorities should stress the importance of fuller self-government, even under the veil of local control of local concerns; and that the British Parliament, as the temporary representative of imperial affairs, should as staunchly exaggerate the imperial function. It was as natural, after the policy of the iron hand had failed, that British statesman should rush to the opposite extreme, and in their eagerness to deal justly with Canada, deal unfairly with the Empire. It was natural even for political pessimism to proclaim colonial independence inevitable and protection of imperial interests futile. It was natural for this fatalistic philosophy to advise the cession of further local autonomy under the plausible plea of responsible government. That the central authorities resigned, under protest, certain powers, therefore, was no admission that they belonged to local concerns, but rather the realization that opposition to the colonial will was the most effective way of driving the colony out of the Empire.

The concession came with the feeling — grant these misguided children all they ask for, so that when the ultimate separation arrives, they may realize that the parents in the United Kingdom, stubborn as the pet bull-dog, can be indulgent as well as stern. The views of Lord John Russell and others, that in time the Empire would evolve into a group of independent nations, bound only by bonds of sentiment, were largely the result of the rebellion of 1837. Strange as it may appear, these statesmen passed by the true lesson of this experience just as their predecessors had at the time of the schism in America passed by the pleasant tasting fruit, and partook of the false, acid in taste, withered in the radical heat of revolution, and afterwards frosted by the cold calculating selfishness of the extreme Tories in the annexation movement of 1849. At last, after years of blindness, British statesmen are discovering in the orchard of colonial experience fruit of a riper hue and richer taste, and are leaving the withered samples to Canadian Pseudo-Nationalists who still find in the acidity the assumed sweetness of true imperial policy.

Whether the granting of Canadian local legislative powers in the field of imperial interests will continue depends entirely upon Canadian desire of imperial reconstruction. The only justification for such expansion was the non-existence of machinery for imperial self-government, the creation of which removes the necessity for the continuance of the tendency and enables the pendulum to swing in the other direction. That the movement has been in one direction is no proof that it will always be. As experience alone can tell, in many cases whether the subject for legislation should belong to the local legislature, imperial Parliament, or both, readjustment by joint agreement becomes inevitable. We are in a great period of test when settlements must not be accepted as final, but subject to revision as occasion demands.

Principles of Imperial Self-Government.

British imperial history in Canada as in other colonies is remarkable for the development side by side of two principles seemingly antagonistic. The British North America Act has enabled the Federal Government to become more and more centralized at the expense of the provinces. The struggle for local autonomy has assisted Canada, like other over-sea dominions, in participating in constitutional powers forfeited by the parent state, which are giving at present to the Empire as a whole a decentralized form of government. The logical stopping place of the latter movement is that at which the protection of these rights of colonial individuals and colonial communities which require local knowledge to protect are attended to adequately. For this reason the battle began; for this reason it must close and render constitutional consolidation in the remaining field of governance possible.

Ease of amendment of the imperial constitution when formed is a fundamental principle. An unwritten constitution has that adaptability to the different environments of the different generations, facilitating rapid solution of problems unforeseen. American experience shows that difficulty in amending a written constitution may block the path of progress. As it appears that reconstruction of the Empire should be as rapid as possible because of the external pressure of militant Europe and Asia and the internal pressure of cosmopolitan immigration, the policy of watchful waiting for the development of an unwritten imperial conference may be perilous, and the need for the adoption of a written constitution may arise. It is noteworthy that the written constitution is playing a larger part in the parliamentary progress of Greater Britain, not only in the evolution of Canada, Australia and South Africa, but in the proposed devolution for the United Kingdom itself.

The question as to whether the residuum of legislative power should be granted to the central government or to the provinces or states of the Empire demands consideration. In spite of the constitutional impediments in the United States, the view has arisen that the powers of Congress should be strengthened at the expense of the individual states; the result is that the tendency is that way. In view of the difficulty of interpretation of what are imperial and local concerns, it appears that the residuum of legislative power can safely be granted to the dominions of the Empire provided sufficient ease of amendment of the imperial constitution is secured. The present generation has no right to fetter those to come; it should leave to the future citizens of Greater Britain and to their experience whether there has been too much or too little centralization or decentralization in the imperial constitution. In time the proper balance between opposing principles may be reached.

Classification of Imperial Interests.

Legislative subjects which are possible fields for imperial legislation may be classified according to the degree of imperial control. Absolute control of strictly imperial matters, such as imperial defence, is axiomatic. Absolute control can also be given in certain matters not necessarily imperial at the present time, but which can be made imperial for the sake of uniformity, as they will not interfere with the local rights of Briton of any section of the Empire, and as they will afford further signs to the world that Greater Britain is a unit. Imperial postage and imperial copyright are examples of this class. A third and large field would be for divided or joint imperial and dominion legislation, namely, matters which have an imperial importance, but touch upon the internal interests of the partners of Empire to such a degree as to need a thorough knowledge of local conditions. The example which immediately rises to the lips in this connection is imperial and inter-imperial trade, over which a tremendous cleavage of opinion has existed in every corner of the Empire. However, it need not form an insuperable barrier to closer communion, as it can be classified at first, at least, among the advisory functions of the imperial authorities. In matters such as imperial and immigration, the functions of the central government can be limited to placing bills before the parliaments of the Empire states, which will possess the power to reject them individually or in common. Thus from the commencement the machinery of imperial self-government need not encroach upon local interests.

Need for Immediate Progress.

Such seem necessary principles in the permanent reconstruction of the Empire. It may indeed be problematical how soon in their entirety they can be put into force; but there is at least equal danger in the policy of procrastination, in the extreme interpretation of the cry, "Go slow." For a quarter of a century we have heard the same advice, and the problem is ever growing more difficult, and the crisis ever nearer. Did the fathers of unity in Canada, Australia and South Africa counsel their peoples to move slow at the approach of the climax? Did they point out difficulties and caution delay? Or did they realize that the psychological moment had arrived and the time for action? Surely the process of education throughout the Empire is sufficiently developed, and surely if reconstruction cannot yet come, certain initial steps may be taken immediately to warn the world and teach the citizens of America and foreign origin the determination of the Empire to unify more closely, and the firm fact that in entering Greater Britain they enter a contract to assist in its uniform development.

Great issues are won by great warcries. The ideal sought must be epitomized in the call to the public. Liberal decentralizationists have already their watchword; the time has come for imperialists to adopt theirs and to place the real problem before the people. Our fathers were strong enough to demand local self-government. We, in common with other over-sea Britons, are strong enough to insist upon imperial self-government, and the United Kingdom is strong enough to grant what is right. Our aim must be equal participation in the policy of the Parliamentary Empire; our watchword: imperial self-government.

WANTS CITY TO USE WOODEN BLOCK FOR THE STREETS

The Council were waited on last evening by R. B. Kinnear of Toronto, representing the Canada Creosoting Company of Toronto, with a view of inducing the City Fathers to take up creosoted wooden block paving for this city. After viewing the matter and describing the good qualities of his firm and ware, Mr. Kinnear was instructed to wait on the Board of Works, which meets next Wednesday evening. Tenders will be opened next Wednesday evening for the paving. Mr. Kinnear pointed out to the members of the Council that over fourteen million miles of this particular paving was being used throughout the leading cities of the world, including New York, London, Paris and several large Canadian cities. The initial cost of the pavement was a little in advance of the other pavement, but gave considerable more satisfaction in the end, there being very little repairing necessary.

Small Boy Drank Lye.

BROCKVILLE, Ont., July 4.—Douglas Stewart, aged 18 months, son of a farmer who resides just outside of Brockville, in playing around the house, encountered a can containing lye. The child drank a portion of it and for several hours hovered between life and death. The throat and mouth were frightfully burned.

MONTREAL, July 4.—John R. Roberts has placed his resignation as secretary of the Dominion Alliance in the hands of the president, S. J. Carter, as a protest against the failure of the organization to support him to the extent he desired in his protest against the present personnel of the Montreal License Commission.

HALF HOLIDAY FOR EMPLOYES AT CIVIC OFFICES

But One Member of Each Department Must Remain on Duty.

The annual request of the employees of the City Buildings in regard to a half-holiday on Thursday afternoons during the summer months of July and August, was the means of much discussion at the meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council last evening. It was finally decided to grant the request with the understanding that one member of each department was to remain for any business which might arise and necessitate the attention of that particular department.

Ald. Johnston expressed himself by moving that the request be granted. It was nothing but fair to the employees who were shut up during the day in offices. The rest of the city had the official half-holiday. There was no reason why the City's employees should not.

Both Aldermen McIntyre and Duffus opposed the motion of Ald. Johnston, claiming the attention of an employee was needed at the department during the day. Numerous affairs might arise during the Thursday afternoon, and no [illegible] about to attend to it.

"Then my suggestion does not meet with approval," declared Ald. Johnston, rising to depart.

"Give the entire employees of the city a holiday," remarked the Mayor.

"Couldn't think of it," rejoined Ald. McIntyre.

"There you go, the workingman suffers every time with you fellows," answered his worship.

Continuing, he remarked that the employees had no reason to feel huffy over their decision, as they were being well cared for.

Others voiced their opinion, and the Mayor finally took the above steps, which terminated the discussion.

It has been announced that Adam Edward Vrooman, M.D., ex-M.P.P., for what was formerly known as West Victoria, has been favored with the appointment of sheriff of Victoria County, in the place and stead of Mr. John McLennan.

Mr. McLennan, a man well up in years, filled the position for a period of twenty-nine years. He was appointed in the month of May, 1885, and during his term in office has filled the position in a very capable manner, and has given the County of Victoria and the Town of Lindsay his very best efforts.—Lindsay Warder.

POPULAR MAJORITY FOR GOVERNMENT LAST MONDAY AN INCREASE OF 11,000 OVER 1911

(Toronto Star)

Analysis of the majorities obtained by the various candidates in the different constituencies of the Province in the recent election shows that in spite of the fact that the Liberal party made a net gain of six seats, the popular vote in favor of the Whitney Administration was 11,037 greater than in the last election. This is due in large measure to the fact that in 1911 sixteen seats were allowed to go by acclamation, all to Conservatives, while in the present election only four members were returned unopposed, one of them a Liberal. Balancing one Conservative acclamation against one Liberal, the excess of Conservative acclamations in 1911 is 14 greater than in 1914. If the seats had been contested the majorities would not improbably have totalled something like 11,000, so that the popular majority in favor of the Government is practically the same this year as last election.

Liberal Majorities Shrink.

Complete official returns are not yet in from all the constituencies, but semi-official figures, which are not likely to be very far out, show that the 81 Conservatives who won contested seats in the recent election obtained an aggregate majority of 64,583. The 24 Liberals who were elected after contests received majorities totalling 7,874. The single Labor representative's majority was 1,029. The independent, Gustave Evanturel, won by 369. The net Conservative majority is, therefore, 56,709 over the Liberals and over all 55,311. In the last elections before the general election of 1914, the Conservatives held 16 seats by acclamation, and 69 seats by majorities aggregating 53,546. The Liberals held 19 seats by majorities totalling 10,153. The majority of the solitary Labor representative was 671. The net majority of the Conservatives over the Liberals was, therefore, 43,393, and the majority over all opponents 42,722. The number of seats that went by acclamation accounts for the smaller figures.

Strong West of Toronto.

An analysis of the constituenices shows that three-quarters of the Liberal strength lies west of Toronto. From the constituencies lying to the west of a line drawn north from the west boundary of Parkdale riding, 18 Liberals, 43 Conservatives, and one Laborite were returned. The Conservatives elected had a total majority of 54,001, the Liberals of 6,518. The net majority of the Conservatives over the Liberals was 47,483, and over all 46,454.

The Conservative majority was divided fairly equally between the cities and the country. In Toronto the Conservatives had a majority totalling 24,280. In sixteen other cities the net Conservative majority was 16,160. This makes a total net Conservative majority for urban Ontario of 40,440, and for rural Ontario of 16,269.

AGE REMAINS THE SAME.

Knights of Pythias Decide Not To Let Youths Into Order.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., July 4.—The Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias for Ontario before completing the business of the 43rd annual session yesterday afternoon decided to retain the age of 21 years as the minimum for candidates. The proposal to lower it to 18 years was voted down. Hamilton was chosen as the next place of meeting over Toronto and $150 was voted as a prize for a uniformed rank competition drill prize in connection with that convention and celebration. The following officers were elected: Grand chancellor, G. Farquharson, Stratford; grand vice-chancellor, Thomas Towers, Hamilton; grand prelate, James D. Wilson, Toronto; grand master at arms, A. D. Wilson, Hamilton; grand master of exchequer, John Burns, Niagara Falls; grand inner guard, Capt. Corrie, St. Thomas; grand outer guard, A. G. Marshall, Ottawa.

WOMAN CHOKES BURGLAR.

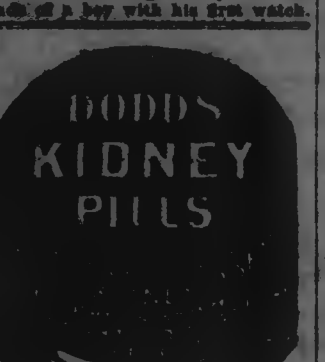
Her Husband Had Been Assailed By the Intruder.

CHICAGO, July 4. — Mrs. Joseph Grinwood, 55 years old, wife of a wealthy retired farmer, five years her senior, unarmed and clad only in her night clothes, choked to death a burglar in the darkened bedroom of a lonely farmhouse near Yorkville, Ill., early yesterday, after her husband, Joseph Grinwood, had fought a bitter battle in the dark. The burglar was armed with a heavy ice-pick, and with its sharp point took a heavy toll of the aged farmer's unprotected flesh. The farmer was clad only in his night clothes. He had no weapon, but his bare hands. The theory of the police is that the clothing was stolen and that papers in the robber's clothing are those of another man.

"Arson Squad" Still Busy.

BELFAST, July 4. — The "arson squad" of militant suffragettes yesterday set fire to and burned to the ground Ballymenoch, near Holywood, a great residential mansion, containing many priceless art treasures, all of which were destroyed. When the fire was discovered it was too late to save the mansion. It was the residence of the late Sir Daniel Dixon, who was Lord Mayor of Belfast for many years, and who sat in Parliament for a short time as member for the City of Belfast.

Time never hangs heavy on the hands of a boy with his first watch.



NOMINATIONS IN MANITOBA.

All the Seats In Provincial Election Contested Except One.

WINNIPEG, July 4.—The last lap of the Manitoba election fight was entered upon yesterday when candidates were nominated in forty-five constituencies, the election taking place July 10. Three constituencies—Le Pas, Churchill-Nelson and Grand Rapids—which are in the far north of the province, the elections have been deferred and no date for them is yet fixed. Iberville returned Aime Bernard, Conservative, and the member for that riding in the last Legislature by acclamation, this being the only uncontested seat. Liberal and Conservative candidates have been nominated in all other constituencies except "B" seat in Centre Winnipeg, where the Liberals are supporting F. J. Dixon, an Independent.

The leaders of the parties are running in their old seats—Premier Roblin in Dufferin and T. C. Norris in Lansdowne. The seats in Centre and North Winnipeg, in addition to the straight party candidates, are being contested by Socialist candidates.

SLAYER MUST HANG.

John Krafchenko Fails To Secure Clemency at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, July 4. — The Cabinet Council yesterday considered the case of John Krafchenko of Winnipeg, sentenced to be hanged on Thursday next for the murder of Bank Manager Arnold at Plum Coulee, and recommended to the Governor-General that the law be allowed to take its course and the execution be carried out as arranged for. It is expected that the order-in-council containing this recommendation will be signed by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught to-day or on Monday and forwarded to the sheriff in Winnipeg.

The petition for clemency, signed by 10,000 names, is not of unusual size, as many as a million names having been affixed to a former petition for clemency in the case of an Italian woman at the Soo. That for the commutation of Charles Gibson's sentence at Toronto was backed by over 100,000 names.

Verdict of Murder.

MONTREAL, July 4.—A verdict of murder was returned yesterday by the coroner's jury against Pickard, who was caretaker at the Chateau Tait, which was mysteriously razed to the ground by fire early in January.

The recent finding of the body of an unknown man in the ruins of the destroyed chateau renewed interest in the sudden disappearance of Pickard and a companion, who is said to have been with him in the Tait residence at the time of its destruction.

A warrant will be issued for the arrest of Pickard, who, so far, has eluded the police and detectives.

To Reorganize Battery.

LONDON, Ont., July 4.—Although all the officers of the Sixth Field Battery of this city have handed in their resignations following the dismissal of the commander, Major Wood Leonard, as the result of the finding of a quantity of liquor in their tents at Petawawa recently, the resignations have not yet been accepted, and it is reported that an attempt is being made to smooth over the difficulty. Although the battery is now pretty well disbanded, it may yet be reorganized.

ADVENTUROUS HORSEWOMAN

On this continent there have been many daring women riders of the plains, but probably none will ever attain to the record of a Cossack woman, Mrs. Kudasheva, who is bent on becoming the most indomitable horsewoman in history.

About three years ago she rode all the way from Vladivostok across Manchuria, Siberia and European Russia to St. Petersburg. She was presented to the Czar and gave her horse, Mongolik, to the Czarevitch. In return the Czar sent her an Arabian horse, which she named Krit, and on which she is now making an even more adventurous solitary journey.

In March of last year she left the Corean frontier of Russia and made her way across China and Mongolia into Turkestan. She has reached the Syr-Daria steppes and in the town of Aulieata had a public reception, at which she gave an interesting account of how she keeps her horse in condition.

Her principle is that if it takes eight pounds weight of food to keep it fit she would begin by giving it say sixteen pounds, half in the morning and half at night. Next day it would have fifteen pounds, then fourteen pounds and so on until it only had one pound, when she would raise the diet a pound a day until it got back to sixteen pounds.

Sleeps Beside Her Horse.

Her experience with horses has been that they age more rapidly on a diet of oats, and that they sweat under exertion. She prefers to use hay with some barley mixed in it. Occasionally she also gives vegetables, melons and even cheese or jam.

She always sleeps beside her horse, even in the same shed when they are in inhabited places. So far she has not encountered any serious danger but has had trouble at times, owing to the greed of people she wished to help her. They would ask as much as $5 to show her where there was a ford over a river.

Mrs. Kudasheva is to come up from Turkestan to Astrakhan through South and Central Russia to St. Petersburg, which she hopes to reach in September. But this Cossack woman will have to look to her laurels, for imitators are springing up.

GLORIOUS HAIR

Always Attracts—Use Parisian Sage. Thin or Faded Hair Becomes Abundant and Radiant With Life.

Girls and women of all ages want to be charming, beautiful and attractive—it's their birthright—but unsightly, thin and characterless hair destroys half the beauty of a pretty face.

If your hair is not attractive, is falling out, streaky, full of dandruff, too dry, or if the scalp itches and burns, don't delay — use Parisian Sage. Apply with a sponge or cloth, taking a small strand of hair at a time. Rub it well into the scalp. It will go right to the hair roots, nourish them, and stimulate the hair to grow strong and luxuriant. Parisian Sage removes dandruff with one application and cleanses the hair of dirt, dust and excessive oil. It will cool and invigorate the scalp and make the hair doubly beautiful.

Parisian Sage is a scientifically made preparation that gives the hair just what is needed to make it soft, fluffy, thick and gloriously radiant. It is delicately perfumed—not sticky or greasy. Sold in fifty cent bottles only at all drug and toilet counters. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." Accept no substitute.

Delighted users pronounce Parisian Sage the best hair tonic. Get a bottle from The Warne Drug Co. — to-day — they will return the money if you are not satisfied.

Motorist Meets Strange Death.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, July 3.—Clifford Johnson, aged 25, met death in an unusual automobile accident early yesterday. He was riding with two girl companions, both of whom, it is said, were asleep. As the car passed over a bridge, Johnson stood up, raised his arm in the air and it caught in the bridge girders, whisking him from the car. When his absence was discovered a few minutes later the car was run back and Johnson was found dead. His arm had been pulled out at the socket and he had bled to death.

Three Men Perish In Fire.

MANCHESTER, N.H., July 3.—A search of the lodging house of Mrs. David Mayo on North Elm street, which was damaged by fire early yesterday, revealed the fact that three lives had been lost. John Reed was killed when he disregarded a policeman's warning and jumped from a third storey window. Roderick Caron and Albert Lachance were suffocated in their rooms on the top floor of the four storey frame building.

ASSINIBOIA IS FLOATED

C.P.R. Liner Proceeds Under Her Own Steam to Port.

Most of Cargo Had To Be Removed Before Lake Steamer Could Be Released From Rocks But Is Not Believed To Be Badly Damaged—Passengers Arrive In Toronto After Anxious Experience.

MONTREAL, July 4.—A telegram to C. P. R. headquarters announces that the Assiniboia was floated at ten minutes after eight last night, and was proceeding under her own steam to Port McNicoll. The captain does not believe that his vessel suffered much damage. The boat has been lying on the rock since midnight Wednesday.

The 100 passengers on the steamer were taken off yesterday. They were taken to the sister ship Alberta, which was standing by. The Alberta continued on the voyage that was to have been taken by the Assiniboia.

The steamer floated after most of her cargo had been removed to the lighters which were rushed to the scene Thursday.

Yesterday morning the Alberta and a tug pulled at the grounded steamer for several hours, but were unable to move the big ship. After that the cargo was removed and the steamer pulled off. It is not thought that the boat was very seriously damaged. She will be inspected.

Told To Don Belts.

TORONTO, July 4.—Tired and exhausted from the loss of two nights' rest, the passengers from the steamer Assiniboia, which ran aground near Cove Island shortly after one o'clock Thursday morning, arrived in Toronto last night on the 9.35 C. P. R. special from Port McNicoll.

The party easily comprised a hundred or more, the majority of whom were westerners. They spoke rather reluctantly of their anxious 28 hours on the shoals.

Mr. Griffis, a passenger, stated that the Assiniboia was only going at half-speed in the fog when she grounded, and was no more than a quarter of a mile out of her course. He says the head waiter, a German, told all the passengers to put on lifebelts, but the captain soon checked the panic and countermanded the order.

WOMAN FAILED TO EXPLAIN.

Trail of Blood From Body To Her Room Leads To Arrest.

STAMFORD, Conn., July 4.—Because expert testimony showed that a trail of human blood ran from the lower hall of the building up two flights of stairs and into her apartments, and because she would make no statement, Mrs. Helen M. Angle was locked up without bail late yesterday, in the course of the enquiry yet incomplete, by Coroner Phelan, into the mysterious death of Waldo R. Ballou, on the night of June 22. Mrs. Angle had been at liberty under a $5,000 bond.

Ballou was found dying on the sidewalk in front of the building where Mrs. Angle lived. A few hours before he visited her in her apartments. He had apparently been dragged from the building into the street. Mrs. Angle early told the police that Ballou had fallen down a flight of stairs while under the influence of liquor.

NO LOW NECKS AT ALTAR.

Women In Decollete Garments Are Banned by Bishop.

KINGSTON, July 4.—In St. Mary's Cathedral yesterday morning Archbishop Spratt announced from the pulpit that no lady who wore a low-neck dress need come to the altar for communion after Mass. He would not tolerate it.

His Grace declared that it was most disrespectable for women in the garb of to-day to approach the holy altar.

Many women in the cathedral, who had come for communion, left without taking it, as they feared they would be sent away by the archbishop, who looked carefully at every women who afterwards came up.

Roosevelt Quits "Outlook."

NEW YORK, July 4. — Theodore Roosevelt has resigned from the editorial staff of The Outlook, it was learned last night. He had been a contributing editor of the publication since March, 1909, when he left the White House.

Lawrence Abbott, one of the proprietors of the publication, said there had been no break in the pleasantness of the relations between the colonel and the magazine management.

Surgeon Can Mend Heart.

ATLANTIC CITY, July 4.—"No injury to the heart, no matter how violent, should be considered hopeless," says Dr. Axel Verbus of Chicago. Results of experiments showed, he declared, that under anesthesia injuries and seemingly incurable diseases of the heart and lungs can be repaired with the knife. Certain abnormalities of the heart, such as small openings in the chambers, can now be mended by surgical means, he said.

Women Found In Tank.

WOODSTOCK, Ont., July 4.—Lying in less than three feet of water in a small tank the body of Mrs. William Nutt, 35, Lakeside, was found late Thursday night by her brother. Mrs. Nutt left her home early in the evening, and as she had not returned up to a late hour a searching party was organized.

Committed For Trial.

MONTREAL, July 4.—Vasall Delmebe, former clerk of the Merchants' Bank, accused of stealing $100,000 from the bank, was committed by Judge Leet yesterday to stand trial on two of five charges on July 9.

This map shows the path that the aeroplane "America" will try to follow on its flight from St. John's, Newfoundland, to England. Lieut. Porte, the British naval officer who will pilot the machine hopes to negotiate the Atlantic in 45 hours of actual flying. The machine is being assembled at Hammondsport, N.Y., and the flight will take place this month or in August if all goes well.

THE SPORTING WORLD

PETES LOST TO NORWOOD

Good Exhibition of Lacrosse Ended 6 to 3.

Although the Norwood club captured yesterday's lacrosse game by a score of 6 to 3, the locals were by no means outclassed, and the game was the best played at Riverside this season. Both teams worked hard all the time, but the visitors deserved to win, as their shooting was more deadly and they displayed a better line of team play than the locals. Both teams checked hard, but there was no undue roughness, and Referee Larone held the players in check all the way. The attendance was very disappointing because the men behind the local club deserve all kinds of credit for their plucky fight to revive lacrosse, but as one said yesterday, "I guess it's no use," he just about hit the nail on the head.

The Norwood team played in fine style, while their defence broke up numerous local rushes. Each team scored a goal in the first quarter, and in the second Norwood jumped to the front by a goal margin. In the third period each team scored once, but in the final stage, Norwood bulged the net three times to the locals' once.

Doc McFadden, in goal for the Petes, had a busy day and played a great game, while McCoy was very conspicuous and was the choice of the home. Dillon played his usual heady and steady game on the defence. For Norwood, A. Kemp loomed up like a lacrosse player of considerable ability. He is fast, has good stickhandling ability and can get in. Beckett was a tower of strength to the visitors defence, while Sutton in goal also did good work. The goals were scored by:

Peterborough — McCoy, 2, Halpin, 1.

Norwood — A. Kemp, 3; Edwards, 2; Laing, 1.

LEANDER CLUB FINISHED ALONE

Won in Final of Stewart's Challenge Cup.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Henley, July 4.—The Leander Rowing Club today defeated the Mayence Club in the final for Stewart's Challenge Cup. The German oarsmen collapsed and the Leanders finished alone.

LAWN TENNIS

The tenis beginner never volleys the ball. If you volley the ball at him he looks at you reproachfully, as if you were taking an unfair advantage. The champion volleys it every change he gets. The Dub volleys it when he has to—if he is a net player he looks for chances. But a Dub volley is all too often a thing to weep about rather than applaud.

Let us theorize a minute about this volley matter. What's the use of a volley, anyway? Why not stay back of the baseline and hit everything on the bounce?

The reason is the matter of time. Time is a very important element in any tennis rally. To procure and use as much time for your own strokes as possible, to give your opponent the least possible amount of time to plan and execute his—that is half the game.

Hence the net player and the volley—for the ball cut off in mid-air and shot back again quickly gives the other player less time to plan what he is going to do next, and less time in which to do it.—July Outing.

CANADA'S ATTEMPTS TO LIFT THE AMERICA CUP

When Ontario Boat Nearly Succeeded Americans Put Clause in Conditions That Yacht Must be Built on Salt Water

"Why doesn't Canada build a crackerjack challenger and go after that America Cup? The question is put most every day now that the trials are compelling notice on both sides of the Atlantic. It is conceded that Lipton's greatest difficulty is to fulfil that clause in the regulations making it compulsory for the challenging boat to reach racing waters under her own sail — yet the winner must be light-built — "then why not Canada try?"

The truth is that Canada sought the valued prize on two different occasions. It was in Lord Dufferin's term as Governor General that a noted designer on Lake Ontario named Alexander Cuthbert, built the first of our Canadian competitors for a syndicate. This schooner yacht was launched at Cobourg in 1876, being christened the Countess of Dufferin. She went east through the St. Lawrence, making a twenty-day run to New York from Quebec, but was handily defeated by Madeline, the defender. The famous America, which originally brought the international trophy overseas, was a third participant and also showed the boat from the Dominion a clipping pair of heels. The Countess was 101 feet on the waterline, had 23½ feet beam, and drew seven feet, slightly over. On her return to these waters she was easily outclassed by the first of the Gooderham Orioles, and, being sold to an American, met her doom in Lake Michigan, outside Chicago.

Cuthbert also built the second and last boat that sought to lift the America Cup and bring it to Ontario waters — the thumping sloop-rigged Atlanta, that was well known locally in the days when the late Hon. S. H. Blake and his brother, the late Edward Blake, were enthusiastic yachtsmen and owned the Rivet. The latter boat, a cutter, was a landmark in Toronto Bay and over the lake racing circuit, for whereas all her competitors were of wood construction, she was of iron, having been brought out from England. The Belleville designer put the best of his famed skill into Atlanta's designs, and the Belleville yacht club agreed to furnish some of their best experts to help race her. She proved a marvel in light winds in trials. Costing $2,100 to build, she was 68 feet over all, 19⅝ feet in the beam, and drew 6½ feet without her tremendous centreboard. Cuthbert thought he had a winner this time and passed down the Erie Canal in October, 1881, on the full crest of a wave of good hope. Her rival was the Mischief, and the races occurred in November's second week. But she was vanquished, although not badly. Atlanta lacked proper ballast. She also sailed with an incomplete crew, and in the first of the two races lost forty minutes in reefing, being then only beaten by eight minutes. Mistaking her buoy lost the Bay of Quinte craft the second race, and the series was over—won by two flukes.

This was the time that the gentlemen headers-and-reelers down in New York got wise that we could build swift-paced sailing machines on the Union Jack side of Lake Ontario, and which were likely to put a crimp in their fortunes before many more trials happened. Privately, that man from up in the Canada woods, Cuthbert, pretty nearly clever enough at yachts to be an American. That would never do. So they sat down in conclave and drafted a codicil to the America Cup regulations, making it obligatory upon a challenging yacht to be built on salt water. And that put an end to Ontario's attempt to corall the big pond pennant to flap below some red-crossed ensign. Halifax and St. John, down by the sea, both have flourishing yacht clubs, but they seem to have lacked any such vaulting ambition to date.

GLAD TIDINGS FROM THE FRONT

Includes a Chance to Land Gilhooley of the Hams

Leonard Mark Dobson, as Addie Richardson, the Canadian League's Sporting Life correspondent, terms him, sent glad tidings from the front this morning. Headquarters of the local club were more than pleased to know that Dolan, the elongated first sacker is whaling the pill in big league style and fielding his position perfectly. Then the other good news was that Louie Schettler, the semi-cripple, whiffed fourteen of the clouting Erie club. He also states that the team is hitting in grand style, and with the added strength by Dolan's presence should break up many games. The Hamilton Club is negotiating with Manager Blount with a view of trading Gilhooley for a pitcher. Curley is negotiating for the services of a twirler named Harten, but has not received any definite word. Joe Byrne blew in from home and reported his father as gaining in health every day. Thrailkill, the former Saint, who filled in during Joe's absence has been let out.

The Petes are still three points ahead of Hamilton for seventh place which Ottawa by beating London yesterday tied up the race for supremacy. St. Thomas lost to Toronto which makes the race tighter than ever. The Petes are five games from third place. Go to it.

Contrariwise.—Mrs. Beat. — Tell the gentleman I'm not receiving today, Nora. New Maid—But he ain't deliverin mum; he's collectin!

SCHETTLER STRUCKOUT FOURTEEN

Petes Walloped the Ball in Fourth and Fifth

Special to The Review.

Erie, July 4.—The Petes had their murderous optics with them yesterday, and whaled the offerings of Fitzpatrick and Clare for sixteen hits and ten runs. On the firing line for the visitors, Louie Schettler was master of the situation at all times and considering that the veteran is not fully recovered from the crack in the eye he received at Peterboro last Saturday, his pitching was excellent. He fanned fourteen. In the fourth and fifth the Petes put the game in the refrigerator by gathering eight hits and six runs. Sandwiched in were a couple of boots on the part of the locals. The score by innings:

1 2 0 3 3 1 0 0 0—10 16 1
Erie.
1 0 1 0 0 0 0 1 1— 4 9 6

COMMENT

As You Like It

Bob Dibble of the Don Rowing Club of Toronto, failed to capture the Diamond Sculls, and although his defeat by Sinigaglia, the big Italian, was a disappointment to the sculling experts and followers in Canada, it was not discouraging. Dibble is still young. He is brave, too. No one ever accused him of having a chicken heart, and his race of yesterday, when although beaten he rowed till every ounce of stamina was exhausted, and fell unconscious in his shell, is sufficient to prove that in Bob Dibble, Canada has an oarsman worthy of the emblem he wore on his jersey. His rival and victor must be a man that Sunny Italy should feel proud of, because the man who beats Bob Dibble has got to be an oarsman of gameness and ability, regardless of his strength. Dibble is still young. He practically was unknown in 1912 when he cleaned up the junior, intermediate and senior championships of Canada at the Canadian Henley at Port Dalhousie. That year he started as a junior, but when he won that event, he immediately started after the intermediate and when he won that, he went after the senior and won it. Some accomplishment for two day's rowing. Last year he won the senior again when he defeated Butler of the Argo Club in hollow fashion. Considering that Dibble has still to reach his twenty-third birthday, and that his first year as a championship competitor was in 1912, and he won the championship of America in 1913, it must be admitted that this sturdy Scotch-Canadian is one of the sculling marvels of the age, and some day Bob Dibble will show his shell's stern to the cream of the world in the Diamond Sculls, and there are sports enough in the good Don Rowing Club of Toronto to send him back again. Above all Dibble is a good loser and a credit to the grand old sport of rowing.

The defeat of the Winnipeg eight, that sturdy crew from the west, was more of a surprise than it was a disappointment, and Harvard must be very good. The 'Peg crew is one of the best sent from this country in years, and it was confidently expected that they would dispose of Harvard, but such was not to be. Harvard deserves all the credit coming to them. The honor of capturing the Grand Challenge now rests betwen Harvard and the Boston Boat Club, so the prize must come to the United States at any rate, and will prove a balm for the defeat of the American poloists by the English team. If Harvard wins, a peculiar situation will arise, as only a month ago Yale defeated Harvard in the inter-university race. The Yale crew was coached by Guy Nickals, the eminent English coach, who had charge of Detroit when that eight was beaten by ten lengths by the Winnipeg eight at the Canadian Henley last year.

Extraordinary Values in Women's

Pretty Summer Dresses

IN the free and frequent use of the word extraordinary, we believe, it is rarely, if ever, more requisite than it is to describe the values in this instance.

The prices quoted are so very much lower than these garments are worth, that we do not see how any young woman can afford to disregard such a splendid opportunity, unless she already has all the clothes she wants—and that is something that never happened in the history of the world.

This schedule of prices will give you an idea of the very marked reductions.

$12.00 Dresses	$ 6.00	$25.00 Dresses	$12.50
$15.00 Dresses	$ 7.50	$30.00 Dresses	$15.00

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

MACK—MARK.

Lindsay Post.

A very interesting event took place on Tuesday, June 30th, at 2 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Mark, when their daughter, Lily Evelyn, became the bride of Percy Roy Mack of Toronto.

The marriage was performed by the Rev. Dr. Shorey, in the presence of about thirty guests, the home being beautifully decorated with banks of palms, ferns and roses.

The bride entered the parlor on the arm of her father, to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Miss Hattie Morrow, of Toronto, and looked charming in a gown of cream satin, with lace and pearl trimmings. She wore a bridal veil of tulle, and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley. She was assisted by her sister, Miss Bertie who was attired in a gown of shell pink silk crepe, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The groom was assisted by Mr. J. A. Coakwell, of Toronto.

During the signing of the register, Mrs. C. A. Downer, of Harriston, sang "All Mine Alone," after which all adjourned to the dining room, where a dainty luncheon was served.

Amid showers of confetti, Mr. and Mrs. Mack left on a short motor trip, the bride travelling in a suit of peacock blue broadcloth, with panama hat.

Guests were present from Toronto, Peterboro, Harriston, Woodstock, and Woodville. The presents were both numerous and costly.

Mr. Donald Shook, manager of the Oriental, has returned from a visit to Rochester, Toronto, Niagara Falls and other points.

The week-end dance at the Floating Pavilion, held last night, proved a very enjoyable affair. The music was delightfully rendered by Miss M. Grady and Mr. S. O'Shea. The gentlemen instrumental in holding the dance were Messrs. E. White and W. Allen.

Misses Mary R. Arnold and Charlotte V. Arnold of Indianapolis, are guests at the Oriental.

Mr. A. W. Robertson of Montreal, is among the visitors in the city.

Mr. George Spotton of Wingham, is in the city on business.

Mr. C. L. Howse, Public Utilities Manager, arrived here last evening to assume charge.

Mr. G. A. Raynor of Dundas, is registered at the Oriental.

Mr. R. B. Kinnear of Toronto, is in the city on business.

Mr. C. Armstrong and wife of Havelock are guests at the Snowden House.

Miss Edith Bonner of Toronto, is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Jas. Edgar, Weller Street, for a few weeks.

Mr. C. Earls, of Toronto, is in the city.

The marriage of Mr. Charles Parsons, of Dundas, and Miss Katie Leary will be solemnized this afternoon. Members of the Conservatory Orchestra, of which the bride-to-be has been a valued member, will play the wedding march.

FINE BAND CONCERT

A perfect evening and an exceptionally fine band concert caused hundreds of people to linger in the vicinity of Victoria Park last evening. The work of the band was particularly good, more noticeable perhaps because of their rendition of Remick's Hits No. 14, which included all the songs you hear fellows warbling on the street. The selection of Yankee Airs was also a feature of the program. Mr. Knipper rendered a fine Fluguel Horn solo, while Mr. J. Minicola sang "Sing Me to Sleep" in his usual expressive manner.

CHURCH MUSIC

The music in St. Andrew's Church to-morrow will be specially interesting on account of the presence of Miss Sutherland, soprano soloist of Holand Center, who will sing at both services. The morning solo will be, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," —McDougall, and in the evening, Miss Sutherland will sing "Babylon," by Adams.

The evening music will be:

Prelude—Sunset in the valley.—Engelmann.

Anthem—The Radiant Morn. —Woodward.

Offertory—Serenade—Gounod.

Solo, Babylon.—Adams. Miss Sutherland of Holand Center.

Postlude—March.—Pease.

Charlotte Street

Morning — "Consider and Hear Me," Wooler—Miss Ada Richardson.

Evening — "The Golden Threshold," Lohar—Miss Ada Richardson.

Violin Obligato—Miss Edwina Palmer, A.T.C.M.

Centreville Garden Party.

A very successful garden party was held on the grounds of the Centreville Presbyterian Church last evening. The Ballieboro band supplied music and ministers of the district were in attendance. One of the interesting displays was a quilt made by the Mission Band.

THE PRINCESS OF HOHENBERG the second victim of the assassin at Sarajevo, Bosnia. She was the morganatic wife of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the position she would have occupied had her husband ever become Emperor was long a matter of doubt.

CLASS TO NEW CAR.

The new pay-as-you-enter car on George Street is larger than the old style and affords accommodation for ten more passengers. The partitions which divided off the rear and front platforms in the old cars are done away with and brass railings used in their stead. Thus the car sets forth a much brighter and more attractive appearance. The rear platform is rather small and smokers are likely to get crowded out.

CHAUFFEUR RUNS OFF WITH BOSTON SOCIETY BELLE

Boston, Mass., July 4.—An alleged elopement, which has stirred the police of New England and Eastern Canada to activity became known yesterday, when J. H. Hallian, a Boston business man, whose summer residence is at Hull, issued a frantic appeal for aid in the search for his daughter, Fern Hallian, 18 years old. Mr. Hallian said the girl disappeared last evening under circumstances which caused her parents to feel that she had eloped with Louis Elcman, 23 years old, of the West End. He has been employed by the family as chauffeur for about a year.

"I was anxious to have the couple arrested before they get married," said Mr. Hallian. "My daughter left her home early last evening to attend a moving picture show near the Bayside station, and when she did not return at a late hour we began a search for her, because we were anxious for her safety. We learned that she had been seen walking in Nantucket avenue at 5.45 in the company of Elcman."

Beyond that fact, the only thing learned by Mr. Hallian was that the couple were driven in an automobile to the Boston and Maine railroad station.

"We have asked the police in all cities in Maine, chiefly Portland, and those of Montreal and Quebec, to be on the watch for them," said the father.

Describing his daughter, Mr. Hallian said: "Fern is 5 feet 11 inches tall, and she wore a black gown, white tennis shoes, a shaggy yellow automobile coat and a white panama hat, having a blue and white band, and with an elastic band under her chin. She also wore a green veil around her head and neck."

"I do not believe my daughter had more than three or four dollars in money, although she wore some valuable jewels. She had on two valuable bracelets, a signet ring having her initials 'F. W.' upon the shield, and there were two fine diamonds set, one on each side of the shield of the ring. She also wore rings set with amethysts, turqouises and opals.

"Elcman had considerable money to his credit in the savings bank, because he was frugal. I fear this young man has drawn this money from his bank and carried it away with him to finance the proposed wedding trip. He is short and stocky, and has a prominent nose."

While telling of the disappearance of his daughter, Mr. Hallian was greatly excited and he said with emphasis, "Understand me, I want the help of the police, the public, and the newspapers in the search for my missing daughter, and I insist that she be arrested when found and detained until I can reach her and take her into my charge."

Miss Hallian was active in the social life of the summer colony at Hull, and well known in Arlington. Her father is a wealthy Boston business man.

CROPS ARE BETTER THAN LAST YEAR

Regina, July 4.—With the exception of the territory surrounding Swift Current where the land is very light and sandy, and condition of the crops in Saskatchewan is beyond question better than it was last year at this time, according to the report of the statistical branch of the department of agriculture. Wheat is beginning to head out and is from twelve to eighteen inches high, averaging around 15 inches.

Flax is satisfactory and barley and oats are doing well. The Swift Current district, with its sandy loam, absorbs every bit of moisture that it can get.

Farmers who are having their first experience in this district, it is expected, will harvest fifteen bushels only to the acre of wheat.

The district along the boundary line of the Grand Trunk Pacific has had considerable rain and a few days ago there was some wheat on the low lands which was partially under water. The hot weather of the past few hays, however, has dried up the water to a large extent and the crops are forging ahead. Wheat is leaping ahead and other crops are following right behind. Other points in the province report normal conditions with crops looking fine.

POLICE CHIEF THOMPSON ON CRIME INVESTIGATION

Local Head of Police Department Read Paper at Convention in Winnipeg --- Says Citizens Should Assist Police With Information.

Police Chief Thompson, has returned from Winnipeg where he attended the annuer convention of chief constables of Canada. He reports a very fine trip and a helpful convention. There were some very interesting and educative features of the sessions. The chief read a paper on Crime Investigation.

Col. A. P. Sherwood, head of the Dominion police force, was elected president.

The new president has had extensive experience in police work having been chief of police or Ottawa for some years and superintendent and commissioner of Dominion police for a long period and also having charge of the secret service work of the Dominion.

Crime Investigation.

Chief Thompson's paper read as follows:

We have arrived at the stage of this work where we must go more deeply into the subject of crime generally.

We shall assume that the police constable having been given the choice after a number of years of service of continuing in the ranks as constable or transferring to the criminal investigation department as already described, has chosen the latter course, he will be of course have been considered adaptable to the higher class of work. It should henceforth be his ambition to justify the confidence thus reposed in him by his superior officer. He should take an intelligent view of crime and from his previous years of patrol duty, should possess a serviceable knowledge of those who habitually commit it. His duties will in future be almost exclusively devoted to detection and investigation of crime, and he will be called upon to exercise all the skill, subtlety and patience of which he may be possessed with a view to attaining still further promotion. He should be constantly educating himself on the subject, ever bearing in mind that not a day passes but which may make valuable additions to his store of knowledge. He should therefore be constantly alert, untiring in his determination and worthily climb the ladder of promotion to the topmost rung of distinction and well earned reward. He should always bear in mind that nothing appertaining to crime is without the sphere of his industry. He should have a thorough knowledge of criminal law and law on evidence. If he does there can be no limit to his knowledge on the subject in question. It is unpardonable for a police officer engaged in the investigation of crime to take no more than a superficial or common place interest in his subject, in addition to being a paid government or municipal officer. He should also be a metaphysician and a psychologist. In short, the subject of crime is so comprehensive, embracing as it does, either directly or indirectly every branch of the social system, that he who is engaged in the investigation and detection of it cannot know too much. He should in truth have an all round knowledge of it.

Human Nature Study.

His work embraces a close study of human nature, in the mass as well as individually. As his knowledge should be without limit so should his virtues and qualifications be without number. He should have the memory of a calenday, the eye of a lynx, the nose of a bloodhound, the ear of a moose, the touch of the blind and the courage of a lion, the cunningness of a fox and the patience of Job or a journalist, if he is sound in mind and limb. It is a well known fact that every police officer must be with intelligence and a desire for the work. He may by application and steadfastness in time develop all the above mentioned qualifications. "Where there is a will there is always a way." The member of the criminal investigation department cannot regard his position with too much gravity. He should indeed take himself very seriously. His mind should not lose grasp of the fact that he stands between the peaceable and for the most part defenceless portion of the community, lawless depredatory and violent section, at one and the same he is called upon to defend and to detain. He therefore cannot be too earnest and conscientious in his efforts to uphold the law and the dignity of his position as one who is in his Majesty's service.

Two Departments.

I purpose here to make a few remarks on the subject of crime. Generally there are departments in crime just as there are departments in trade. Crime is the habitual wrongdoer's trade just as commerce may be the pursuit of the honest man. One lives as much by his nefarious work as the other does by his legitimate calling and the line which decides the two is sometimes a very

STATEMENT SIGNED BY MR. SODEN AND MR. PECK

Reports of Dissentions in Conservative Ranks Due to Irregularities, Without Foundation

Nearly all the executive members of the West Peterboro Conservative Association attended a meeting at Ruddy and Burnham's offices, Saturday night. The executive submitted the following statement, signed by both Mr. Soden and Mr. Peck:

Reports and complaints having reached this Executive Committee to the effect that there were dissentions in the party, due to allegations of irregularities of procedure in selecting a candidate for the late provincial election, your Executive Committee wishes to report that it has gone into the whole question from the beginning and its findings are:

1. That a meeting was held on May 18th at Mr. Peck's office, for the purpose of filling vacancies on the Executive and for selecting a date and place for holding the convention: After the business of the meeting was over, Mr. Peck then informed the Executive Committee that he would not be a candidate at the coming election. Much surprise and regret was expressed by all present, and Mr. Peck was then urged by those present to reconsider his decision, which he agreed to do, and was to inform the secretary on the following day.

2. As agreed Mr. Peck informed the secretary, on the following day, that after further consideration he had decided he would not be the candidate.

3. On the following Friday, May 22nd, Mr. Peck informed the Secretary that he had decided to become a candidate, and would offer himself at the convention, and further made the announcement in the Review on the following Saturday, May 23rd.

4. That the Committee find that the submission of names, the selection of delegates, the voting and all other matters concerning the convention were conducted regularly. The candidate chosen by the delegates was duly announced and became the candidate of the party for election, and was approved of by the Executive at Toronto.

5. That no objection was made at the time of the convention by any candidate or anybody on their behalf, nor has any charge of irregularity been made by any candidate since.

6. That your Committee therefore issues this statement for the information of the Conservatives of West Peterborough and for the purpose of setting at rest any reports that may be circulated of a contrary character, through mistake or otherwise. If the majority is entitled to rule, it did so in this case, and no complaint of discourtesy or lack of due consideration or impropriety is well founded.

7. We further recommend that Mr. Peck and Mr. Soden be requested to sign this statement if satisfactory, also the President and Secretary of the Association, and that copies of this report be sent to the press for publication.

JAMES KENDRY,
President W.P.L.C.A.
FRANK ADAMS,
Secretary W.P.L.C.A.
R. J. SODEN, Candidate.

I approve of above statement of facts.

The Power Situation

The question of power is now at an acute stage in Peterboro, but the solution lies in new hands. We have been informed on many occasions that Hydro has begun to operate in Peterboro. If so power users can get power by applying to the city, which in turn can get all the power it wants from the Hydro. This matter should be seen to by the Mayor and Council at once as it is a bad year for water. There is a great demand for water. It is being used for the logs, and steamer traffic is being interrupted, but the Superintendent of the Canal will no doubt look after that part of it. As for power, the city has the remedy in its own hands.

VESTRY MEETING.

An important vestry meeting will be held at St. John's Sunday School room to-night at 8 o'clock to consider certain improvements to the church.

LAD INJURED ON HIGH DIVE

Cecil Carney Slipped on Roof of Boathouse

Cecil Carney, the young son of Mr. R. Carney, Water Street, had the misfortune of falling off one of the boathouses at the foot of Sherbrooke Street yesterday afternoon, receiving a bad shaking. The lad was in bathing and was diving off the top of the house. The third dive he undertook was not quite successful as he slipped and losing his balance he went over the edge. He endeavored to swing himself clear of the platform below but was unable to do so. When he struck the boards he slipped over the edge and into the water and had it not been for the prompt action of several of his pals he might have been drowned as the fall had practically stunned him.

GEORGE CLARK MAKES CLEAN GETAWAY FROM COUNTY JAIL

Secured Freedom By Cutting Through Steel Bar in Kitchen Window and Using Knotted Sheet to Clear the Wall.

The County jail officials were thrown into consternation on Saturday evening about six o'clock when they discovered that George Clark alias George Coats had made his getaway by cutting through an inch steel bar of the prison kitchen window with a plumber's saw. Clark was awaiting the arrival of a Central Prison official, he having been sentenced to the Central Prison for six months on three charges of theft. He is about five foot, ten inches, aged 43, dark complexioned with sandy beard, dressed roughly and came from Wilksburg, Pa. Clark came to Peterboro about the 10th of June and was arrested two days later by Detective Meagher on the charge of theft. He pleaded guilty and was remanded. Investigation by the Police Department revealed the fact that he had served time before and it was thought he was wanted in the United States on several serious charges. Shortly before coming to Toronto he had been deported from Toronto. Clark came here with the intention of trying to locate his wife, who he said, had left him after their marriage, owing to his habits and record. She is at present believed to be staying with friends in the city. Photographs of the man have been sent to the various nearby officials and his apprehension is probable. Before making his escape Clark broke into the prison wardrobe and extracted his own wearing apparel. As soon as his disappearance was noticed, Gaoler Nesbitt notified the police who are still searching for the man.

The immediate district was thoroughly searched but no trace of the prisoner was found.

According to the condition of the window, Clark made his getaway from the prison kitchen by cutting through the one inch steel bar.

Used Knotted Sheet.

A knotted sheet furnished means of escape over the fifteen foot wall to the ground and freedom.

Clark exchanged his prison garb for his own clothes before escaping. This morning Goaler Nesbitt in an interview stated that owing to being shorthanded, they had removed Harry Cook outside for outside work and had placed Clark in the prison kitchen as cook. The kitchen was well ironed.

On Saturday evening about six o'clock Clark was cooking when the officials went to their supper. Cook was upstairs at the time. On returning they found he had made his escape. Immediately the police were informed and the search commenced. Clark had always taken his incarceration with the best grace and was always ready to work. His conduct was such as to warrant him being trustworthy although the officials were very careful with the prisoners.

This is the first time a prisoner has ever made good his escape from inside the walls of the local jail.

Cook, a cellmate of the escaped prisoner, denies any knowledge of his cellmate's intention of escaping. Clark secured the saw from some tools belonging to the jail while working on repairs to the cell floors.

ENCOURAGEMENT AND ITS PLACE IN THIS LIFE

Help Others On Their Stormy Journeys

Rev. R. G. Peever delivered a very instructive and interesting sermon on the subject of Encouragement and its place in life, at George Street Methodist church last evening. He urged his hearers to have a word of cheer for everyone and to bear life's load cheerfully and help others on their stormy journeys. He quoted from the scriptures the passage where it had been said, "Well done thou good and faithful servant." The Divine recognition was within the reach of all. There were numerous tributaries leading to a good life and it was a precious thing to know that you had given a faithful service. Jesus Christ gave His life as a ransom for his fellowmen. The kindliest heart and the most faithful servant was the Man of Galilee. The small things in life were not to be despised. Life will always have promise and prospect for the man who is willing to be faithful. The persistent application to the small things meant ultimate success.

He referred to the work of the missionaries in Labrador who had isolated themselves to follow their choice of life. Whether it be in the gospel, the commercial world or the professional sphere it was the purpose followed out sincerely which accomplished the task.

Thos. J. Kennedy Died at Toronto

The funeral of the late Thos. J. Kennedy, a former resident of Peterboro, who passed away at Toronto, was held here today at Fraserville, with interment at Bewdley Cemetery. The late Mr. Kennedy was the son of the late Archibald Kennedy of Hope Township, and leaves a brother, Joseph, of Almeda, Sask., and two sisters, Mrs. [illegible] Lacy, of Ballieboro, Ont., and Mrs. E. H. Irish, of Buffalo, N.Y. He was 56 years of age, and was married 32 years ago to Mary Matilda Cowan of Belleville. Besides his widow are two daughters, Myrtle (now Mrs. J. J. Kronchere of Detroit) and Miss Olive, of Toronto.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, JULY 6, 1914

THE APPEAL IN MANITOBA.

NEXT THURSDAY the people of Manitoba will vote either censure or approval of the Conservative Roblin Government. As in Ontario, the Opposition is trying to make a handle of the temperance question in order to get into power. Certainly the result of the Ontario elections will not be a trumpet of support to the Manitoba Opposition. Some think that Manitoba, being a younger province than Ontario, is more susceptible to changes, but our experience would not lead to that conclusion. Manitoba has a large population of old Ontario people, who can be depended upon to resist innovation and uncalled-for reforms. They voted against reciprocity, a fact that the other prairie provinces and the Liberal party could scarcely realize, and the nature of the Opposition leader's appeal should merit a decisive defeat.

Mr. Norris, the Liberal leader, has not taken as strong and open a stand as Mr. Rowell took. He does not commit himself in his appeal to an abolish the bar policy. He merely promises, if elected, to submit a referendum on that policy. His sincerity on the temperance platform is to be very much questioned, because it was by such dodges that Liberals in Ontario fooled the people for many years. He is afraid to shoulder the responsibility of adopting a straightforward though drastic temperance program.

But, in addition, he is advocating other proposals, imported from the United States, which should never receive support from a Canadian electorate. He advocates the initiative, referendum, and recall, and also votes for women. Any leader who favors the initiative and recall, and the referendum as it exists in some American states, should be so completely defeated that even his own party would discountenance him. Direct legislation, as such measures would inaugurate, is contrary to British constitutional practice. It is an American political subterfuge adopted by incompetent men to avoid legislating on difficult questions and to escape responsibility for the existence of bad laws. British practice, and Canadian, too, for that matter, has been to face the problems that arise in the politics of the country, to try to solve them in the public interest, and to stand or fall by their solution. Sir Charles Tupper did not propose a referendum or direct legislation on the Manitoba school question, nor did Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the Reciprocity issue. They both met defeat on the answer they gave to the question involved, and the Liberal leader in Manitoba is false to the traditions of his party and his country in thus departing from the established practice.

Other aspects of the electoral contest seem to point to a severer test of the Roblin Government than was the lot of the Whitney Administration, but, on the other hand, the platform of the Manitoba Opposition is singularly weaker than that of Mr. Rowell, and contains proposals so dangerous that it is difficult to see how the people of Manitoba could honestly endorse them. If the fight is fair, we look for a return of the Roblin Government with a substantial majority.

TRADE REVIVAL IN SIGHT.

WITH THE PUBLICATION of the June wheat crop report of the United States Government, announcing an estimated total yield of 900,000,000 bushels, it became evident that the coming autumn would witness a general and permanent revival of trade. This favorable forecast has already been confirmed by events. In anticipation of the demands of the coming harvest, orders for farming implements are now being received on a large scale by manufacturers. The Rock Island Railroad for the first half of June reports an increase of a thousand of its freight cars in commission.

Fortunately, the outlook for the other cereals besides wheat, and especially for Indian corn, is good. Unless present prospects are contradicted by later adverse conditions, the crops of 1914 will reach a total value of $10,000,000,000. Although the condition of the cotton crop is not as good as it might be, it is expected that the total yield will be above the average. In all the lists of farm and garden products, potatoes and the other garden vegetables on the Atlantic seaboard are the only failures of the year.

Following the Balkan war, which resulted in the destruction of the large volume of wealth, business conditions in Europe became bad, and during the past year have been much worse than in the United States. This country was the last to feel the world-wide depression, and it is the first country to emerge from it.

On this side of the ocean the ruinous collapse of the New Haven Railroad, with a consequent loss of $700,000,000 in capital, has upset the European confidence and led to a wholesale unloading of American securities. These sales of stock have produced a protracted export of gold, but this outward flow of the yellow metal has now ceased and this cause of commercial disturbance is now removed.

If the Interstate Commerce Commission grants the 5 per cent. advance asked by the railroads, the trunk lines can go ahead with the improvements necessary to prepare them for a period of augmented activity. Under these conditions there will be no lack of orders for the iron and steel plants, which will soon be running full time to meet the demand for rails and other materials.

MR. ROWELL AND EVANTUREL.

WHAT WILL Mr. Rowell do with Gustave Evanturel? That is an interesting question. Mr. Evanturel, it will be remembered, resigned from the Liberal party and the Legislative Assembly because of some compromising evidence that showed he was trying to misuse his position as a member of the Assembly in the interests of the liquor party. At the last Ontario elections he was returned — the Globe says as an Independent, but as Mr. Evanturel affirms, as a Liberal. He is undoubtedly one of Mr. Rowell's supporters, but is confessedly opposed to an abolish the bar policy. Mr. Evanturel is the only Liberal who has openly declared his opposition to the policy of Mr. Rowell, and this was one of the facts doubtless realised by the majority of temperance electors that made Mr. Rowell's temperance policy futile. But concerning Mr. Evanturel, it is interesting to note what a French newspaper, L'Evenement, has to say of him:

> "We regret the re-election of Mr. G. Evanturel in Prescott. We are not perhaps au courant with the local conditions of this division, but it seems to us that our compatriots should have relieved themselves forever of this cynical and impudent personage. This man was taken in the act of trafficking in his honor, in his conscience and in his votes as a representative of the people. In the face of undeniable proofs he admitted his guilt, but had the audacity to plead as extenuating circumstances, his poverty, the custom of politics, and his thought for the liquor sellers whom he offered to defend against his own party for a given sum. Repudiated by his colleagues on both sides of the chamber, he still sought to stick to his seat as a member and only gave his resignation after having been publicly threatened with expulsion. His re-election is as regrettable as would be that of a Mousseau or a Berard."

Mr. Rowell's position is undoubtedly compromised by having Mr. Evanturel in his following and what to do with him is for Mr. Rowell to say.

WHY NOT DO IT RIGHT?

WE ARE PLEASED to observe that some inventive genius has acted on our suggestion and attached home-made spouts to one of the local sprinkling waggons. This move is in the right direction, but it is far from a satisfactory trial of the idea. The real flushing waggon should have one flusher, not two, in order to get the full head of the water within the tank. It also has the outlet much closer to the road and of a shape that shoots the water out in greater force, sufficient to sweep the asphalt pavement clean of manure, chips, paper, dust or other debris. No doubt the action was well meant, but to try make a flusher out of a sprinkler in this way is about as futile as running an automobile on thirty cents.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE DESIRE to draw attention to the report of the Executive of the West Peterborough Conservative Association. Notwithstanding reports of dissention within the Conservative ranks, the statement that has been handed to the press assures Conservatives that such does not exist and that there is no cause whatever for reports of this nature. Possibly there may have been some dissatisfaction, due to a misunderstanding over the last nomination, but the executive has straightened this out, so that no one who has the interests of the Conservative party at heart will have any reason to hold aloof from the party. It is essential that all work together for the success of the Tory party in West Peterborough, and, we think the signed statement appearing in another column ought to satisfy all.

WHY IS Montreal not represented at the great regattas at Henley, when Toronto and Winnipeg are? Are we advancing or sleeping? asks our friend La Presse. While it is not a good policy for Montreal to imitate only Toronto and Winnipeg, it was unnecessary for Montreal to go to England for an interesting race. At present there is a newspaper contest on in Montreal that is interesting, vigorous, and not yet decided.

THE AUTHORITIES in Montreal are in a quandary to explain to a prisoner why he has been incarcerated. He is charged with being drunk, and some twenty languages have been tried by interpreters, but he fails to understand them. We have thought of the remedy. Try Gaelic, and if that fails, let him go hungry for a while.

MR. JOSEPH CLARK paid us a visit the other day. He says he has stayed with the party for sixty-five years. We imagine there are one or two in this riding who cannot say that.

Cotton is the most valuable crop grown in the United States. This year the cotton acreage amounts to 39,477,000 acres, or one million more than last year. Wheat, the next most valuable crop, has an increased acreage of four million. In Canada our crops show a two million increase in acreage. These figures should not be lost sight of in counting up the favorable factors in the financial situation.

Touching.

Harper's Magazine.

William MacDonald, a youthful Scotchman, was seriously in love, but to arrive at the point of proposing marriage to the fair one of his choice was too much for his sensitive soul. Finally, after many hours of deliberation, he hit upon a plan.

It was a moonlight, starry night, and he led the maiden of his heart to a churchyard and, pointing to the various headstones, said:

"Allie, my folks are buried there. Wad ye like to be buried there, too?"

CONAN DOYLE

By Walt Mason

We ought to give ovation to Arthur Conan Doyle, who spent his short vacation on Freedom's sacred soil; beneath the Leafy banner, he took some notes, they say, and in his sprightly manner he'll write us up some day. At home he has been knighted, with Britain's chosen few, and we should be delighted to do him honor, too. To every farthest distance extends his well-earned fame, for he has made existence a better, brighter game. How every reader glories in good old Sherlock Holmes, in all Sir Arthur's stories, his essays and his poems! In letters he's the leader; romancer, bard, and sage, who never bored a reader, or wrote a dreary page! They caught old Homer nodding, in olden times, it seems; they had to do some prodding to rouse him from his dreams; and almost every author has days when he can't write much better than a Goth or a Vandal who is tight, but Doyle has never written a line devoid of grace, or sent me off a-hittin' the flagons for a brace! We don't appreciate him or rightly guage his worth; we haven't learned to rate him with giants of the earth, but when he has been planted for fifty years, by jing, posterity, enchanted, will say he was a king.

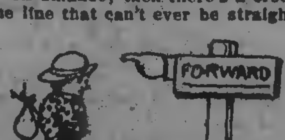
LOOKING BACKWARD

WE'VE been taught that a man with his hand to the plow should never look back, but when you come to think on it, a feller, particularly if he's a good plowman, sorter likes to glance over his shoulder onst in a while to admire his straight furrer. Trouble is, when he's looking bakward, he's liable to stumble on sumthin' and throw his plow off balance; then there's a crook in the line that can't ever be straightened.



It's human natur' to look back though, whether it's to admire sumthin' we have done or in regret for sumthin' we're leavin' behind. But when you come to think on it, it's a useless thing to do, useless and dangerous. Best thing to do is keep yer eyes straight ahead of ye, leave yer leetle triumphs to balance off yer petty failures and give yer whole mind to the big task ye have on hand of keepin' straight to the line.

Six Grand Trunk train crews with headquarters at Brockville have been notified to report for duty at Ottawa. The reason is the rush of grain from Depot Harbor east, and the men are required to handle the extra traffic.

NO COERCION SAYS BRYCE.

He Denies That Britain Forced the Repeal of Tolls Bill.

LONDON, July 6.—A flat denial that Great Britain had brought pressure on the United States in connection with Panama tolls was made on Saturday night at the banquet of the American Society by Viscount Bryce of Dechmont, the former British Ambassador at Washington. Lord Bryce said that he had simply advised his Government that "if the President thinks it right to repeal or go to arbitration he will do it."

Lord Bryce added: "No country in the world has a stronger desire than the United States to do what is right and honorable."

The American ambassador, Walter H. Page, said that the last letter to the Washington Government relating to Panama was written by Ambassador Bryce before the end of the Taft administration.

Hindus Who Dislike Food Barred From Ship

VANCOUVER, July 6.—When five Hindus who were permitted to go in a Government immigration launch Friday from the Komagata Maru to parley with three local Hindus in regard to better food conditions turned to board their own boat again they found the gang plank drawn up, and Gurdit Singh, the leader, refused to permit them to go aboard, claiming that they were playing traitors in complaining to the local Hindus of the food on the boat. The immigration officers had to bring the five to the detention shed here. Three attempts have been made to put them back on the Komagata Maru, but the Hindus on the vessel refuse to allow them to get on, threatening to kill them. The trouble arose when the five complained to their friends here that Gurdit Singh, head of the band of 375 trying to land in Canada from the Japanese boat, was not giving them decent food.

Bandit's Victim Dying.

QUEBEC, July 6.—S. F. Charland, who was shot in the abdomen by the desperate bandit Moraud, is dying in the Hotel Dieu Hospital here. He had a very bad night and his life is despaired of.

Morand is still at large, and a posse of eight provincial detectives is scouring the woods, in the vicinity of Villeroy, where the shooting occurred. Little hope is held, however, for his capture, as he is determined and desperate.

Before the shooting Morand said in his crazed intoxication that he was out to shoot "at least five."

THE YELLOW FLASH

It Served Their Purpose

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Scott Perry stared at the old Indian tracker with widening eyes. Did Daga Bendrib really expect him to believe that there was a tiger—a man eating tiger—at large in the Wundri district?

Daga Bendrib bumped his turbaned head on the floor of the veranda and protested vigorously.

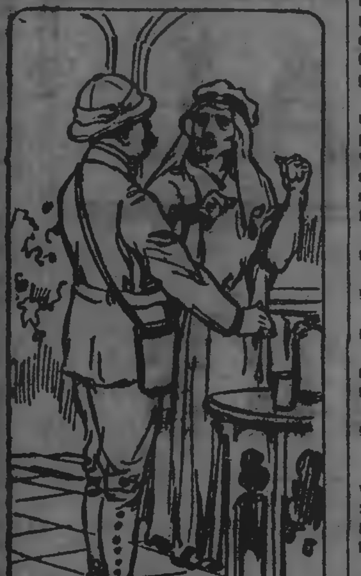
"Ah, Sahib Perry, it is the greatest beast India has ever known! My son-in-law glimpsed it as it sped through the village, and he swore that it went like a flash of yellow lightning. Its lips dripped blood, and its eyes blazed like balls of fire. If the presence would condescend to leave his study of the birds and butterflies his servant would show him the mangled bull and the track of the great man eating tiger!" Again Daga Bendrib salaamed.

Perry knocked the ashes from his pipe and dropped it in his pocket. He was rather taken with the tracker's plea that he should come and kill the tiger that was molesting the cattle and threatening the lives of the peaceful inhabitants of the little mountain village. It would be a welcome change from his everlasting chase after the birds and butterflies of India.

It was midafternoon when they were ready to set out, Bendrib in the lead, Perry following, and in the rear trotted Sunnai, who carried the guns, as well as the knapsack.

At the entrance to the village they were met by a crowd of excited natives. There was much rejoicing over the arrival of the white sahib, whose deadly gun would put to rout "the great yellow flash" which had killed the finest bull in the chief's compound. The beast had dragged the animal to the outskirts of the village and had evidently been driven away from his orgy by the rising of the sun.

An hour before sunset Perry and Daga Bendrib were seated on the top of a flimsy platform which they had hastily constructed between four palm trees within twenty feet of the dead bull.



HE WAS RATHER TAKEN WITH THE TRACKER'S PLEA.

A bower of branches and shrubs concealed them from the ground, and it was from this vantage point that Perry hoped to kill the tiger with one shot from his rifle.

He had killed tigers before, and the fine skins that graced the walls and floors of his bungalow bore testimony to his skill as a marksman.

The platform was ten feet above the ground, and, provided Perry could get good sight of the great cat, he would have no difficulty in adding another royal skin to his collection.

Suddenly Daga Bendrib hissed sharply through his teeth.

"Ah, sahib! Ishnie!" whispered the tracker.

"Ah, the tiger!" repeated Perry, moving cautiously beneath his bower of branches.

There came a snuffling growl from nearby thicket.

Then followed silence.

Daga Bendrib breathed shortly. Perry felt his own heart beating to quick time.

Something moved in the thicket behind them.

"Two!" hissed the tracker.

Perry began to feel uneasy. The platform was a flimsy structure at best. If one or more tigers should attack it there was no doubt that the platform would tumble to pieces.

Again came the growl from the left hand thicket and again a responsive movement from the thicket behind the platform.

Perry had his gun sighted and pointed the barrel toward the dark bulk of the dead bull on the grass below.

While Perry listened for a repetition of the soul chilling growl from the left hand thicket, there suddenly came a horrifying interruption from the rear.

A wild, panther-like scream split the air; there was a rush of wind overhead, and the two hunters were suddenly struck flat to the platform by the falling of a heavy body upon them.

The platform shook, tottered and fell, crashing with its burden of two men and a full grown panther. As the platform fell Daga Bendrib's gun went off, scattering a double charge of buckshot.

The panther screamed savagely and thudded heavily to the ground, rolling over in agony. The double charge of buckshot had entered its eyes and, so far as the hunters were concerned, had put the panther out of business for that occasion at least.

But the excitement was not yet over.

As Perry and his tracker clambered up to the remains of the fallen platform and each found a perch on the supports which still clung to the four trees the moon found an opening among the trees and sent a broad shaft of silver light into the jungle where the dead bull lay, with the stiffening panther near by.

From the left hand thicket was a repetition of that low, deep, ominous growl, ending in an ugly snarl; there was a sudden rush of misplaced air as something long and yellow and black striped streaked across their vision to fall upon the body of the panther.

There were the rending of flesh and the crunching of bones.

The two men in the trees shivered and changed their positions.

The tiger ceased his feasting, and a rigid line ran along his lithe form.

His back was toward the platform, and his left shoulder presented a splendid mark for a bullet.

Perry lifted his rifled shotgun to his shoulder and fired.

Bang!

The tiger whirled about, screamed with pain and rage and was about to charge the hunters in the tree when there came another interruption from the thicket.

This time it was a full grown tigress, and she leaped straight toward the broken platform.

A bullet from Perry's gun crashed through her brain, and she fell staggering at the very foot of the platform supports. At the same instant Daga Bendrib's gun spattered buckshot in the eyes of the wounded tiger, and while the beast pawed blindly at them another bullet from Perry's weapon stretched him beside his dead mate in the parched grass.

Perry drew a long breath and wiped the cold sweat from his brow.

All around them were myriad sounds from the startled denizens of the jungle. Aroused by the double killing and attracted toward the spot by the dead bull came jackals, hyenas and others of their tribes.

Perry was anxious to protect the skins he had won at the risk of his life, so his gun answered the cries of the jungle beasts while Daga Bendrib sped toward the village to bring help.

In half an hour the two tigers and the panther were lashed at the heels of an ox team and the dead bodies were dragged to a deserted hut on the outskirts of the village where Daga Bendrib and his son-in-law and his two brothers and their son-in-laws set to work to skin the three animals for the great sahib.

Perry went back to the tree in order to guard the village from a surprise visit from the panther's mate or from other beasts if the smell of blood should attract them into the village. The body of the bull had entirely disappeared now, and from distant thickets Perry could hear the jackals snarling over the fragments they had stolen.

He was tired and happy. The night's excitement had been a pleasant relaxation after the dullness of bug hunting at this season, and he was grateful indeed for the information which Daga Bendrib had brought him concerning the depredations of the tiger which had killed the bull.

Perry nodded in the crotch of the tree.

The sun was slanting in his eyes when he was awakened by the sound of voices at the foot of the tree.

He looked down and saw several men standing there. They were neighbors of Daga Bendrib. They were speaking of the triple killing made by the white sahib.

"That Daga Bendrib—he is a clever man," said one enviously. "Who but Daga Bendrib and his son-in-law would have dreamed of killing his best bull—the finest in the village—and then running ten miles to the bungalow of the white sahib and telling him that a tiger had been seen in the village and had carried off a bull?"

"Who, indeed?" echoed his companions.

"And, lo, when the white sahib returns with Daga Bendrib and with the promise of many rupees if a tiger is shot, waits for the wicked beast—why, the tiger comes, and the tiger's mate, and, as if those were not rupees enough in crafty Daga Bendrib's pocket, there also comes a panther! All attracted by the smell of the dead bull's blood, when we all know that the jungle has been cleared of these beasts for many years! Whence came these blood hunters? From the distant mountains?"

"Clever Daga Bendrib!" muttered his companions as the three returned to the village.

Perry grinned to himself as he thought over this revelation of Daga Bendrib's device to earn a few rupees. His reward would be ample and the sacrifice of the fine bull would be well justified in the eyes of Daga Bendrib's neighbors, Daga Bendrib's sons-in-law and his brothers and their sons-in-law.

As for Perry himself, he calculated what the tiger skins were worth to him when he could return to America and dispose of them, and he was well satisfied with the craft of Daga Bendrib and with the opportune arrival of the "yellow flash."

CHILDREN'S FROCKS.

Linens and Crapes Popular Materials For These.

Linens of all kinds are liked for children's wear, and although the fine varieties soil and muss with distressing readiness, the durability and laundering possibilities of good linen offset this disadvantage. The coarser kinds of the material are most serviceable for the play frock, but heavy linen, fine and smooth of surface, is used for many of the smarter little frocks of the simplest tailored kind.

STRIPED CRAPE DRESS.

Flowered crapes are utilized for the frocks of the small girl as well as for the older sister, though for children's frocks those crapes having the smaller flower designs are selected rather than the large designs, which are so conspicuous this season. Illustrated above is a roman striped crape dress with white dotted crape. Tones of red in stripe and ribbon trim it. The low belt and tunic effect make the dress very smart.

Keeping Egg Yolks.

When only the whites of eggs are to be used, the yolks may be kept fresh for several days by leaving them in the shell after the whites have run out through a small hole. Wet some paper with a little of the white and paste it over the hole. This will exclude the air. The yolks may be boiled in this shell, as their weight keeps the shell upright in the water with the hole above the water, or they may be used for cakes or for salads several days later.

OLD LAMPS FOR NEW.

Collectors of Curios Find In India Countless Treasures.

Collectors of grandfather clocks, china, and bric-a-brac generally are complaining that there is nothing left to collect in this country or, indeed, in any of the accessible parts of Europe. Such disappointed persons, sighing for new worlds to conquer, should go to India if they can afford to do so, says The London Standard.

According to a prominent member of the Society of Antiquaries, who has just returned from Calcutta, "treasures are scattered all over India, and lie mouldering in the palaces of the native princes or pass from hand to hand without anyone being aware of their great value. No one," he continued, "knows what these princes possess, but there is no doubt that many of them have in their possession heirlooms of enormous value, for in various families they can trace their origin back to mythical times, and during all these centuries have held a position of wealth and magnificence.

"The presence of a few collectors in Calcutta, 'prospecting,' let us say, for arms and armor, carvings and jewellery, might bring to light a good supply of genuine articles which would soon begin to drift in from out-of-the-way parts when it was known that there was a sale for them. Of course, in every city in India there are curio shops, mostly filled with trash—worthless cloths and embroideries, modern metalwork, trumpery trinkets, and so forth. Nevertheless, mixed with it is much valuable ware of more or less ancient manufacture. Roughly speaking, antiquity is the test of its value."

Mr. Stanley Clark, the expert director of the Indian section of the Victoria and Albert Museum, does not entirely agree with the antiquarian. The rajahs and other native princes, he said, have become much too sophisticated and commercial to harbor treasures upon which they can realize hard cash. The conversion of their valuables began some forty years ago, when they sold a large portion of their native ornaments, jewels, furniture, and other possessions, and invested in modern furniture from Tottenham Court road. Among other things of that period which they bought lavishly were the huge, glittering chandeliers which are now almost unknown to the present generation. Tons of them were "unloaded" on the rajahs.

"The modern Indian prince," continued Mr. Clark, "knows the value of his art treasures, and when he wants to dispose of them he calls in a European dealer and sells them for the full market value. Every season the best of these dealers come to London with the pick of the art objects they have acquired. Last year one well-known Delhi merchant brought a most magnificent emerald, which ultimately found its way to Paris in the form of a pendant and was sold for many thousands of pounds."

"At the same time, there is, no doubt, a very good field in India for the collector who specialises. One very good 'line' I may mention—Kashmir shawls of the seventeenth century. These are wonderful examples of hand-woven work in intricate designs, mellowed by age to the most perfect combination of colors. These shawls, or, more often, portions of them, are still to be picked up cheap, and over here they are of great value."

Plenty of Exercise.

"Do you belong to an athletic club?"

"No."

"Dear me, don't you take any exercise?"

"I do."

"In what form?"

"Running the hot air furnace."

Natural Inference.

"Hear about the fire in the clock factory?"

"No."

"The fire department didn't seem to be in much of a hurry to get to it."

"Maybe they thought the man had time to burn."

Culinary Notes

Apples of Olden Times.

Long, long ago Greece was famous for its fine apples, and in the apple season people ate them at every meal. They had one kind so choice that each person was allowed to eat only one a day, and he was punished if he disobeyed this law.

The early Romans, too, were very fond of this fruit and had many fine apple trees near Rome. They were always trying new kinds of grafting and named the results after their favorite generals. They are said to have had twenty-two varieties.

The druids cherished this tree not only for its fine fruit, but also for the mistletoe which grew on it.

In Wales the poets were rewarded for their beautiful songs by a wreath of apple sprays.

Employment Plan For Boy Scouts.

The chamber of commerce now offers "efficiency badges" to boy scouts of Greater Boston who show efficient acquaintance with industries on which they have chosen to be examined. Names of successful candidates will be kept on file at the chamber for the benefit of members desiring to employ boys.

Eggshell Football.

Make the football by making a tiny hole in each end of the shell and blowing out the contents, and then mark boundaries on the table field with tape or chalk, having two ends of the table for goals. Each side elects a captain, and then the fun begins. At a given signal both sides or teams begin to blow upon the eggshell, that has been placed in the center of the field. Each side tries, of course, to blow the egg toward his goal. No player must leave his place, and it is a most rigid rule never to move the ball by any other way than blowing. For so doing a player is sent from the field, as in the actual game. Regular football rules are used, and the score is kept as in the real game. Each of the two teams should have a name, either ridiculous or after some of the colleges or schools. This always adds interest to the contest. Old and young equally enjoy the game, especially if they understand football tactics and rules.

BRAMWELL BOOTH

And The Future of His Movement

(From the London England Daily News and Leader.)

GENERAL BRAMWELL BOOTH.

If you will walk down the Strand or loiter along the Embankment in these bright June days you cannot fail to notice that we have got visitors in our midst. That, it will be said, is no unusual thing. Every day brings its hundred thousand strangers into London, and in a walk from Trafalgar Square to the Law Courts you may at any time catch the accents of many strange tongues and rub shoulders with visitors from the islands of the utmost seas. But the present invasion is distinct from this normal condition, for it is noticeable for many things beside its magnitude. For example, it is the most remarkable agglomeration of human types we have ever seen in our streets in large numbers. There are white faces, and brown faces, black faces, and yellow faces, Japanese and Koreans, Indians and West Indians, Americans and Australians, Swedes and Swiss. And although their garb is as various as their speech, it has this in common, that it is always splashed with red — red hats or red robes, red badges and red ribbons. At certain hours, when the tide ebbs, and flows from the great Congress Hall that has been built in the Strand, the streets seem bright with red. And it is not only this note of color that is common to all. In spite of the disguises of tongue and of skin, they are obviously one people, with a common citizenship that ignores the boundaries of Kings and States, of color and speech. They have some secret fellowship that unites them — a secret, too, which makes them conspicuously happy.

It is this atmosphere of happiness which will impress you if you follow them to these amazing meetings which they are holding thrice daily. Amazing is not an excessive word for such a phenomenon as I witnessed this week, when I made the round of the services which were in progress in the evening. It was the fifth day of the Congress, and there had been great gatherings in the morning and afternoon; but the Central Hall of the Wesleyans at Westminster was crowded to the doors. I went into Kingsway Hall and found it thronged to the vestibule. Then to the temporary hall erected on the Aldwych site in the Strand, where five thousand people were listening to an address from General Bramwell Booth, while outside the doors there were crowds still waiting for admission. This is going on each day and thrice daily. It is a fact which means a good deal.

Father and Son.

It means, for example, that the prediction, which used to be common, that the Salvation Army was a mushroom growth that would vanish with its founder, has been falsified. Two years have passed since General Booth died, and in the interval the Army, so far from fading away, has developed as rapidly as at any period during its existence. It is time to revise our impressions of its place in the scheme of things. It is not enough to say that the Army has been fortunate in securing such a successor to such a Chief. That is true, of course. This grey-headed, man, with the sensitive mouth and the serene eyes, who stands before the great audience pleading with them to leave the life of pleasure for the life of sacrifice and service, is not unworthy of comparison with his father.

And yet he is singularly unlike him. There was something masterful and hawk-like about the old General. The black, bead-like eyes and the beaked nose gave an extraordinary impression of penetration and personal contact. He dominated you, not merely by the flame of his passion, but by the intensity of his will and the sense of the superiority of his worldly wisdom. He was an autocrat who founded an empire. His son could not have founded that empire, for he has none of the originality and daring of his father. But he is perfectly adapted to maintaining the empire and strengthening its foundations. He is an organizer where his father was an adventurer. It is probable that his father's dreams would never have been turned into solid achievements but for the calm, laborious engineering work of Bramwell Booth. What the Salvation Army owed to him in the past is only now becoming apparent. He supplied precisely the balancing element that the General needed. He supplied it because he was his mother's son.

That fact is apparent from his physical aspect, which is singularly reminiscent, in its mingled tenderness and serenity, of his mother. It is apparent also in his methods. What was compulsion in the father is persuasion in the son. He holds his great audience by a certain air of sweetness and light, and the sense of an illimitable passion for humanity. He is free from extravagances of speech and suggests both in manner and matter an Evangelical bishop more than a revivalist preacher. Like his father, he is indifferent to the distractions of intellectualism and modernism, and rests his appeal upon the simplest gospel pleas.

The Flock.

It is the power of that appeal of which this remarkable Congress is the witness. No one can be present at these gatherings without being impressed by the magnitude of the hunger to which the Army ministers. Morning, noon and night ten thousand people crowd these halls to hear addresses, now from black men, now from white, to sing hymns and to shout "Hallelujah." Next Tuesday there will be a hundred thousand of them at the Crystal Palace. They seem a community by themselves, chiefly, one would say, belonging to the comfortable working class and the small trading class; but no doubt inclusive of all sorts and conditions of men. They are people of whom we never hear in the newspapers, for they are not politicians, or lovers of sport, or theatre goers. They are just quiet, plain people who have "found religion" and to whom religion is the one serious interest in life.: They are attracted to the Army because it gives them religion and not theology, a way of life and not a creed.: It does not offer them intellectual solutions of intelligent problems. It ignores problems and solutions alike and addresses itself directly and simply to the spiritual disquiet of men. Francis Thompson said that it was easy for a man to find God if he did not seek to define Him. And that seems to be the working principle of the Army. Its methods may seem crude and violent; but at the bottom they anticipate much of the new philosophical movement which seeks to substitute the Rule of the Spirit for the Rule of Nature.

The Politics of Zion.

The Salvationist has no regard for secular remedies. Hence his divorce from the political world, his coldness towards Labor movements, Socialits theories, and so on. General Bramwell Booth repudiates all these things. Sin is to him the one supreme, overwhelming fact of life. And it is remediable not by legislation, or collective action, but by personal salvation. On all sides he hears the question, "What shall we do with our sin?" and around him many voices speaking in answer. Some say, "Do nothing. There is nothing to be done. The world is lost and man is but a beast who will presently perish. Sit still and die." Others say, "We must improve the laws and customs of the nations. Civilization is the cure. Better manners, larger ideas, greater freedom; they will bring deliverance." They forget, he says, that the most highly civilized peoples, so far, are perhaps the wickedest of all. Others say, "Educate the people. That will make them better. Improve their minds. Instruct them. Sin is only ignorance: it will disappear before the advancing light of knowledge. Science and art will bring the people out of their degradation. Schools are the only cure." And, he says, they forget that many of the most learned and gifted men and women in every age have been the most miserable, the most profligate, and the most cruel. Others, again, advise more money, higher wages, better living. Destroy poverty and you destroy vice. They forget, he says, that the black sin of Sodom itself came out of the fulness of bread. And so, having dismissed all the theories of the economists, the reformers and the educationists as worthless, he arrives at personal salvation through Christ and the life of righteousness as the one remedy for the world's ills. He preaches the politics of Zion.

A Theocracy

And yet there can be no doubt that it is the social reform policy of the Army which is largely responsible for its position to-day. It was the appeal of General Booth through his "Darkest England" scheme to the conscience of the country that won for the Army such universal sympathy and gave so powerful an impulse to that movement of social reform which has become the supreme concern of politics. And it is the social work of the Army to-day which to the outside world at all events, it is most conspicuous title to thanks. The value of that work cannot be exaggerated. In England, in America, in Japan, in Norway, Sweden, India, China, South Africa—wherever the Army goes it carries with it healing for the sores, as well as for the sins of society. Children's homes, mother's hospitals, labour colonies, industrial workshops, rescue homes, work in the streets, in the prisons, among the forlorn and the lost—all this is included in the task of the Army in all lands. Perhaps it would be fair to say that what General Bramwell Booth objects to is not social reform but the secularising of social reform. He would have it flow not from Parliament and politics, but from religion. In short, though the Army is not a Church in the strict sense of the word, its conception of society is a theocracy. Even the material remedies of society must have a spiritual inspiration and direction.

The Future.

This aloftness from and distrust of the secular activities of the world may ultimately have a profound influence upon the Army. If in course of time it became enriched and respectable and were to take on the formulas of Churches and encase itself in creeds, it would become a powerful clerical factor in politics and its head, with his absolutist authority, a foe to a democratic State. That is the peril that lies in its path. It is not apparent now because the Army still preserves to an astonishing degree the virgin enthusiasm with which under the inspiration of its greater founder it came out of the East End nearly fifty years ago with drums beating and flags flying to encounter the ridicule of the world and wrestle with the sins of men. Its disciples still go out like preaching friars or knight-templar to carry their message to every land. You may see and hear many of them at these meetings—colonels from every country from Korea to Peru, bronzed, hardy men, simple of speech, simple of faith, working for the wage of an under clerk. For proverty is still the badge of the Army. There is not a salary of £300 a year paid to anyone in connection with it, and the General himself receives nothing, living like his father before him, on the life interest of a small sum invested for his maintenance by an admirer of his work. And its adherents too, still keep their primitive fervour, crowd to the Mercy seat, shout "Hallelujah" and observe that rigid self-denying ordinance in regard to alcohol, tobacco, and simillar indulgences, which the Army imposes on its members, much to its disadvantage so far as its numbers are concerned. In short the movement, is that most unprecedented achievement, a revivalist crusade organized into a system. That it has maintained this character so long is evidence of the vision and the power of the founder. There is no likelihood of any departure from it while the Army is controlled by Bramwell Booth whose passion is entirely for the regeneration of men, unqualified by any personal ambition or the pursuit of any temporal power.

While the Army can produce such leaders and keep so close to its simple ideals, it will prosper and serve the highest interests of humanity. But should it ever fall into the hands of an ecclesiastical statesman its doom will be sealed. No one but a saint can be trusted to wield such autocratic power as that which Bramwell Booth possesses And we cannot be sure of the succession of the saints even in the Salvation Army.

NOT A PRIVATE FIGHT

It was noon hour in a factory town. Two young mechanics were engaged in a game of fisticuffs which verged upon actual fighting. A crowd of fellow-workers formed a ring about the pair of belligerents and egged them on with grit and cheering. As the fun grew fast and furious, a young Irishman made a way for himself through the ring of onlookers by means of some vigorous shoulder-work and, finally reaching the neighborhood of one who was constituting himself a sort of referee of the match, hoarsely whispered to the latter: "Say, mister, is this a private fight or can I get into it?"

A very similar question is often asked by those who do not consider themselves to be expert baseball "fans" concerning our Summer Pastime, and it should be plainly understood that no special advantage is enjoyed by even the most expert at the game. Our contest is a public one, open to everybody, and with the aid of the Handbook at any rate, a man, woman or child who has never even seen a game of ball, stands just as good a chance of winning a prize as anybody.

There may be a reason why people who are too fond of pie are apt to be crusty.

Rev. J. P. Wilson at Charlotte St. and Rev. L. Phelps at Mark St.

The opening sermon of Rev. J. P. Wilson's pastorate in Charlotte Street Methodist Church was preached on Sunday morning, when the church was crowded to the doors. Mr. Wilson is not unknown in Peterborough, having been a pastor of George Street Methodist Church. His subject was well selected, being a discourse that fitted the people and was without great display. His text was from Galatians 6-9, "And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

REV. J. P. WILSON
Who commenced his pastorate, on Sunday at Charlotte Street Methodist Church.

The great wheel of Methodist itineracy, the speaker said, has made another revolution. Many ministers find themselves in new places this (Sunday) morning. It is said that somebody always suffers in this rearrangement of ministers. He did not in coming to this city, as he spent four very pleasant years here. He remembered the loyalty of the citizens to their own city. He has been here two days now, and he thought he knew the streets, but was bewildered from the development that has taken place, so many new streets having been opened up and so many vacant lots built upon. Peterborough seemed to be the most progressive place this side of Toronto.

Most ministers changed their place of residence. Methodists changed about every four years, and he thought that system had good and bad points. In fact most systems of stationing ministers could be criticised. It was said of the Methodist system that every man gets some kind of a place and every place gets some kind of a man.

He spoke very highly of the late Rev. T. J. Mansell whom he did not like to designate as "the late," because he was sure he still lived in his many good works. He was one of the kindest and most respected men in the Conference, and it was to take his place that he gave up his last charge, where he was finishing his second year. He found many familiar faces in the audience, for he was formerly frequently in this church, and he hoped that he would be a good shepherd to the congregation of Charlotte Street Methodist Church. The Church was planning great things and needed the efforts of every member in the congregation.

Turning to his text, he said that years before this was written, a party of Gauls, as the early inhabitants of France were called, settled in Asia Minor. They were a fierce, restless host of barbarians. They were trying to be clean, pure men. Paul addressed them differently from most followers. He says walk in the spirit. His epistle bristles in activity. The epistle hidden for a thousand years, was brought to light by Martin Luther. Historical criticism brought it forward as the keynote of Christian ministry.

If we sow we shall reap. Two words here, season and opportunity, mean exactly the same thing. If we reap a harvest, we must sow the seed. We get weary because there is so much commonplace work to be done. Men and women get weary of the same round of duties. Even steel gets weary, for the carpenter has more than one saw. Engineers say that locomotives need the night of rest in the roundhouse owing to changes caused by the constant friction when in use. How much more do people need rest.

The silent work is the work that tells. The snow flake is light and fragile yet it has sculptured continents. There are a great number of active workers whose names never appear in print who are doing a great work in the church of God. Yet this common place work is wearisome.

The history of Christanity is written in lives—not in pictures of heroism, but in the biographies of heroes. It is not the history of Wesleyism or of Puritanism, but of William of Orange and John Hampden, for example.

The [illegible] of the Christian life is doing commonplace things. Think of the past, what has been done, the buildings built and missionaries sent out. Burn them up and these men who would build them up again. The glory of life is the spirit of self denial. The faithful men who have passed away are living. Sometimes unappreciated work takes away the spirit for labour, yet we must go on. There are three kinds of men in the church. Some will not bear burdens at all; some do their own work well but no more; othrs will do their own work and another's as well. Only great souls sink under the burden in the Church of God. There is no room for failure or for frauds in the Church of God. God is in his Heaven and on the earth. Let us not be weary, but do good unto all men.

At the evening service, Mr. Wilson delivered a very helpful sermon on experience.

The music at both services was exceptionally good. Miss Richardson sang at the morning service "Consider and Hear Me," and at the evening service "The Golden Threshold," which was accompanied by Miss Edwina Palmer on the violin. The latter was so well rendered that it drew forth many remarks of appreciation, both for the singing and the violin playing. Mrs. McClelland, the organist played among other pieces, a rendering of Ave Maria.

AT MARK STREET.

Rev. Leonard Phelps opened his pastorate at Mark Street Methodist Church yesterday before a large congregation, there being some members of the pastor's congregation when he was connected with Mark Street some years ago.

In his sermon taken from Romans 15 chapter, 29 verse, "And I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of Christ." Mr. Phelps drew an excellent lesson on the duty of a Christian and how to be sure.

The preacher said that the Christian should not contemplate any doubts. God is helpless without His subjects. He makes us the channels of his mercy. The Christian sentiment was increasing decidedly every day. In sorrow, trouble of all kinds the human nature craves for the sympathy of God. Let the heedless step into the paths of sin, yet Christ is always willing to help. We ought to have confidence in His life and work. It is one of the greatest sins to doubt when we have such a permanent asset in his Christian character. "Look to Jesus and He will comfort you, assist you against your foes, he will speak courage to you and you will learn to say with all moral courage I am sure. Why should we hesitate? What is it that is at the bottom of our reluctance.? If we lack this confidence we lack energy begotten of it. The service of power is knowledge. The lover never fears repulse. We are the mighty instruments to which His gospel comes. The waters of living water are ours.

A formal reception for the new pastor and his wife will be held on Tuesday evening at the church.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir,—I noticed in your paper on Saturday last, the announcement of a garden party and sale of work to be held at St. George's Church grounds, Braidwood Avenue, on Thursday next. May I appeal to my fellow English Church people in the city to help the southenders in this effort. Certainly no church deserves greater support than St. George's. Although the congregation is made up entirely of working men, there is not even a store keeper among its members—yet they have raised for church extension over $2,000 in the past 15 months, and have had the pluck to start another mission in the West End. If this sort of work does not appeal to the heart and pockets of the well to do English Church people in the city, it is difficult to know what will do it.

Yours truly,
A Well Wisher of the South and West End Mission.

THE ELECTION RETURNS.

Editor Review,

Sir,—The returns for the province as given by the Toronto Star (Liberal) are to the effect that Whitney has fifty-five thousand majority being no less than eleven thousand more than last time. If bilingualism had not been to the fore in Ottawa where we lost two seats and in other places Rowell would be still more "worse off" than last time. By the way I heard someone say the other day that Mr. J. B. McWilliams is now a Conservative. This is not true. I heard him tell a bunch of men that he was still a Liberal and would always remain a Liberal. I knew he never pretended he was a Conservative but always has contradicted it. But when spite is going round anything will do for talk.

Yours,
OLD TORY.

EIGHTY CADETS LEAVE FOR CAMP

Jamieson is in charge and will assume charge of the 3rd Division of the cadets of the camp. Camp Commandant Major Horden will be in charge of the camp which will be conducted under military regulations. The cadet corps representing Peterborough this year is the strongest yet and will show up better than ever with other corps. Majors Cann and Stratton are also with the cadets.

ANOTHER POLICEMAN.

The strength of the police force was added to-day when Jas. McCarthur a local man, was appointed on probation to take the place of Sergeant Brown, who is in Scotland on a six weeks' vacation.

narrow one. Likewise certain criminals rarely if ever quit certain departments of crime. So will the presumably honest man pass his whole career in one particular department of trade. For instance, you might speak of banking as a department of trade, so might you speak of forgery as a department of crime. Crime, I believe, is largely the result of evil environment or circumstances. I make this statement at the risk of incurring the contempt of the ultra-scientist, and probably those who read him. I may also be severely criticized for not taking a more scientific view of crime and writing about it from a purely scientific standpoint. I set out to write about crime from my own point of view, based upon material obtained by my own personal observations. I have read literary productions of criminalagists, but in spite of this fact, I still maintain that if one wishes to write anything of any value concerning any given subject, he should depend largely upon his own experiences, personal observations or knowledge obtained through the medium of his own experience. I have no desire to be an echo of another man's thoughts, however great he may be. Therefore I cannot agree with the professor or scientist concerning the physical conformation of those unfortunate persons who have happened to have been convicted of crime. He seeks to point out certain distinguishing features or short comings which he maintains point to their being born criminals, this I think is an altogether erroneous and unjustifiable assumption inasmuch as physical deformalities and abnormalities may be found in persons who have never committed a crime, and so far as we can ascertain in all probability are destined never to do, so it is quite conceivable that a man may have a twisted eye, a short leg, a hump back, any yet be an honest, peaceful and law abiding citizen. He may have a peculiar formed frontal bone, an abnormally developed jaw and yet never commit a crime while on the contrary a man with none of these physical disabilities may be a wrong doer of a habitual and persistant kind. In fact, many criminals have been examined and found to be almost normal in physical conformation. Therefore I do not think that physical peculiarities can be accepted as of much value as a disdinctive theory. In the diagnosis of the criminal to be sure one may readily perceive in reading between the lines that even those who would have us believe that criminals are born have not too much faith in their own assumption. In my humble opinion it is quite easy to be too scientific about crime and so miss the plain matter of fact which lies much nearer the surface. It is of course beyond dispute that a person may be possessed of a brain that is deficient in some one thing or another, a brain that may impell him to diverse, undesirable things, stupid or otherwise but not I maintain necessarily to commit acts of criminal culpability. I entertain a large measure of doubt as to whether any criminal is born. I believe there is not the slightest doubt that the majority of them are made, moulded by environment and circumstances. Some would have us believe that the true criminal, known as the habitual, is the evil result of some abnormal and unfortunate process of birth; or that he is the product of evil parents. This I believe is not by any means wholly correct is made sufficiently manifest by the trend of crime at the present day. It needs very little pointing out. Most newspaper readers must know that the bulk of crime committed of late years is committed by persons who are possessed of more than average intelligence. Some of whom have come from good stock. Crimes of brute force are on the decrease, while crimes of skill and daring, incurring great financial loss to the victims, are rapidly on the increase. Does this not go a long way to confirming the contention which I have ventured to assert, that crime if not wholly at least is very largely the result of evil environment or circumstances? Those criminals of refinement and intelligence may invariably be found to have fallen into evil ways, so that it was not their begetting that mattered, but their subsequent departure from the straight path of life and continued to allow their mind to run along that channel which brought them to be habitual wrongdoers. If the above reasons, which I have mentioned, are largely responsible for the making and moulding of criminals, it does follow that the responsibility rests upon us, as heads of our respective departments, to see that the law given to us by the legislatures is so intelligently and rigorously enforced, that we shall eliminate as far as possible the different places of environment and circumstances, which tend to mould and educate criminals, but in order to enforce the law properly we should have the undivided support of all our judges and magistrates and also the support of the citizens at large, who should be anxious to see the law intelligently and strictly enforced.

Duty of Citizens.

Every citizen should realize that it is his duty to assist the police in securing information which would materially assist the police in the enforcement of law and order, but we sometimes find in our anxiety to suppress vice and crime we are often severely criticized and held up to ridicule because of our inability to detect crime, when probably the very person or persons who are holding the police up to ridicule is or are withholding information, which would tend to close the only avenue through which information regarding the crime could or would be obtainable. Such conditions should not exist with the good and right minded citizens when they know that any information given to the police is always treated as confidential and I believe I am right in saying that the standards of the police throughout Canada are such as should receive the undivided support of every good and right minded citizen in their effort to protect life, society and property.

D. L. THOMPSON,
Chief Constable.

BOMB INTENDED FOR JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER EXPLODES IN NEW YORK

THREE ANARCHISTS ARE KILLED

Woman Who Lived in Adjoining Flat Is Also Killed When Powerful Dynamite Infernal Machine Goes Off, Wrecking Tenement---Three Victims Were Well Known.

NEW YORK, July 6.—A dynamite bomb of terrific strength, supposed to have been completed early Saturday morning for use at Tarrytown today, when the dozen or more International Workers of the World agitators recently arrested near the summer home of John D. Rockefeller will be arraigned, exploded a few minutes after nine o'clock Saturday morning in the top-floor rooms of the flathouse at 1,626 Lexington avenue, between 102nd and 103rd streets, on the west side of the avenue.

Three young anarchists, all identified with the recent disturbances of the unemployed and all implicated in the fights near Mr. Rockefeller's Tarrytown home, and a woman living in the rooms next to theirs were killed. The body of one anarchist was shattered so that the pieces were gathered up in newspapers.

The dead are: Arthur Caron, 24 years old, unmarried; lived in apartment 35, sixth floor front; Charles Berg, lived with Caron; Carl Hanson, about 30 years old; also lived with Caron; Mrs. Marie Chaves, 35 years old; lived in adjoining apartment.

All three of the men who were killed and a woman who lived in the flat with them had attended a meeting the night before at the Francisco Ferrer Association's school at 63 East 107th street, where, with Leonard Abbot, president of the Free Speech League; Alex. Berkman, the anarchist who served time for shooting Henry C. Frick, and others who have been making demonstrations against the Rockefellers in Broadway and at Tarrytown, they talked over the visit to Tarrytown to-morrow.

Imbedded in the thumb and fingers of part of a hand found by Assistant District Attorney Deuel and the police late Saturday evening in a room adjoining the one in which the explosion occurred were bits of copper wire such as might be used to set off a bomb.

The bomb literally blew off the southern part of the three upper floors of the six-storey building, and hurled the right shoulder and part of the scalp of one man over the roof of the German Evangelical Church next door and onto the pavement of 103rd street, half a block north.

Amid the wreckage of the room, where portions of bodies were found Inspector Cahalane and detectives dug out of the debris a printing press, piles of books and pamphlets in various languages on anarchist subjects, a loaded magazine pistol, a blackjack, a quantity of large calibre cartridges and the tops of two storage batteries.

One leaflet, evidently printed on the hand press in the anarchists' rooms, was headed "Bulletin No. 2," and read: "Why wait longer for those money tyrants to come to our terms? We must employ force. Force is our remedy."

WILSON REBUKES THOSE WHO PUT BUSINESS FIRST

In a Remarkable Address at Philadelphia President Replies to Critics of Anti-Trust Legislation---Meaning of Panama Treaty Cannot Be Mistaken and Must Be Fulfilled.

PHILADELPHIA, July 6.—Advocating the modernizing of the Declaration of Independence by applying its principles to the business, the politics and the foreign policies of America, President Wilson Saturday thrilled a huge crowd assembled in Independence Square within a few feet of where the original declaration was signed. The President touched on Mexico, the Panama tolls repeal controversy, his anti-trust program, business conditions and his ideas of modern patriotism.

Pounding his fist on the table on which the Declaration of Independence was signed, he declared Americans to-day must manage their affairs in a way to do honor to the founders of the nation. There are men in Washington to-day, he declared, whose patriotism is not showy, but who accomplish great patriotic things. They are staying in hot Washington, doing their duty, keeping a quorum in each House of Congress to do business.

"And I am mighty glad to stay there and stick by them," he added.

Touching on business conditions of the country, President Wilson said a great many allegations of facts were being made, but that a great many of these facts do not tally with each other. "Are these men trying to serve their country or something smaller than their country?" the President asked. "If they love America and there is anything wrong, it is their business to put their hands to the task and set it right."

Speaking on Panama tolls, the President said the treaty with Britain might be a mistake, but its meaning cannot be mistaken, and he believed in keeping the nation's obligations. He believed in keeping the name of the United States unquestioned and unsullied.

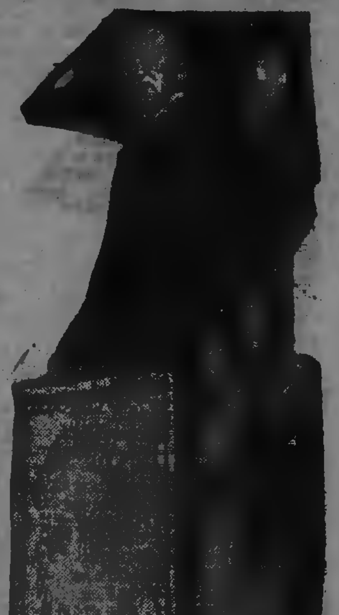
CARSON DETERMINED TO "GO ON TO FINISH," HE DECLARES

Leader Announces That He Will Go to Ulster This Week and If No Tokens of Peace Are Forthcoming, Anti-Home Rulers Will Rely on Themselves

LONDON, July 6. — Sir Edward Carson declared at Horne Hill Saturday his determination to "go on to a finish" in the Ulster matter. "The people did not sufficiently realize," said he, "that Home Rule had been passed, and could be passed into law on presentation to the King."

He presumed that the Ministers, as straightforward, honest men, would tell the King the position, that if he signed the bill there would be serious commotion in the north of Ireland, and, if he did not sign it there would be civil commotion in the south and west.

"Ulstermen," said Sir Edward, "have been making ready for two years, and they are now ready. They want no make-shift government, no six years' limit, no county limit. The sands are running out. I am being pressed forward and I am prepared to go forward. I go to Ulster next week and I hope still to have tokens of peace. If not, we must rely only on ourselves, and we will. I will not shrink from it."



SIR EDWARD CARSON.
Photographed at a recent open-air meeting in Belfast.

Following Sir George Richardson's order permitting volunteers to carry arms, 800 men of the 2nd Battalion, South Belfast Regiment, marched through the main street Saturday in full uniform, carrying their rifles with the band playing and colors flying. It was the first time armed volunteers have been seen in Belfast streets, and great crowds cheered the men.

At the same time, nearly 1,000 men of the West Belfast Regiment were manoeuvering on Black Mountains. Arms were stored in haylofts, rifles with bayonets fixed, being handed down two at a time to the waiting troops while police officers stood by and counted the number of rifles issued.

Plans have been made for a striking demonstration during the week.

Sir Edward Carson, addressing a gathering of Unionists in South London last night declared that Ulster would reject any proposals made by the Government placing a time limit of any sort on her exclusion from Home Rule.

"If ever we go into the Irish Parliament," he said, "we shall go in not at the point of the bayonet, but of our own free will."

The Probable Amendment.

BRISTOL, July 6. — Frederick E. Smith, M.P., one of the Ulster Unionist leaders, speaking at an anti-home rule meeting last night said that the House of Lords would so amend the amending bill as to make the exclusion of Ulster terminable only when Ulster said "We want to come in."

Redmond Checks Recruiting.

MONTREAL, July 6.—A London cable to The Gazette says: "It transpires that, besides being unarmed, the Nationalist volunteers are practically without trained officers, twelve battalions in County Dublin having only one with previous military experience of any kind. Recruiting has been checked, owing to Redmond having gained control.

Mediators Confer With Rebels.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—Minister Naon of Argentina, one of the mediators at the Niagara conference, returned to the capital Saturday, and prepared for conferences with leaders of the Constitutionalist agency. Later he will confer with President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. Minister Suarez of Chile and Ambassador Da Gama of Brazil will not return to Washington until later, but they will be kept in touch with the situation through Minister Naon and the American delegates, who have been instructed to wait here for further developments.

Austrian Noblemen Not Invited To Funeral Defied Officials.

VIENNA, July 6. — The restricted number invited to the funeral service over the late Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife, in the imperial court chapel Saturday, although attributed solely to the limited accommodation, gave great umbrage to many titled friends of the couple, who were not invited.

As a protest against their seclusion about 120 members of the noblest families in Austria and Hungary, some of them being privy councillors and court chamberlains, and nearly all holding court offices, decided to march in the funeral procession from the Hofburg to the railroad station. This coming to the ears of Prince Montenuevo, chamberlain of the emperor and court, he hastily summoned a Ministerial Council to decide upon what action should be taken to prevent a demonstration, but the council, when informed that the nobles concerned would resign their office if interfered with, decided to do nothing. Consequently, when the nobles appeared, many of them wearing their official uniforms, the police made way, and allowed them to fall in immediately behind the hearses.

WILL ENCOUNTER FOGS.

Aviators, However, Think Porte Will Cross Atlantic.

HAMMONDSPORT, N.Y., July 6.—Aviators here are confident to-day that Lieut. Porte will be successful in his transatlantic flight in the aeroplane built for Mr. Rodman Wanamaker.

Porte is confident he will make the flight from Newfoundland to the Azores easily. It has been demonstrated that the America can easily lift two thousand pounds, the required lifting capacity. The airship showed perfect control when the lifting test was made. Several more changes will have to be made on the machine. These may cause some delay. The July pilot chart of the North Atlantic, issued Friday by the hydrographic office, United States navy, shows plainly the advantages of flight this month, sought by Lieut. Porte.

All the experts agree, however, that he will have to traverse a considerable fog area.

THEY'VE GIVEN PA A RAISE.

SAY, you ought to hear ma singin'
She's as happy as a lark,
And her smile stays on from mornin'
till a long time after dark.
She's been buyin' rugs and gettin' a new costly switch to wear,
And she takes a cab whenever she goes
callin' anywhere.
She has bought herself a dimund, and you ought to see it blaze!
Ma's as cheerful as a robin—they have given pa a raise.

Sister's busy gettin' dresses that'll cost an awful pile,
And the hats that she's been buyin' are the very latest style.
She's to go abroad this summer with some people named the Cooks.
Is she happy? Well, I guess so! You can see it by her looks.
She goes hummin' songs and dancin' and in forty thousand ways
Lets us know that she is cheerful since they've given pa a raise.

Pa still works the same as ever, and he's smokin' stogies yet;
Wears the suit he got last summer, and I guess he's still in debt.
Anyhow, he starts off early and comes home fagged out at night,
And his forehead's gettin' wrinkled, and his hair is turnin' white.
Can't somehow help feelin' sorry as I sit and watch him gaze
With a vacant look at nothin'. Yes, they've given pa a raise.

Not Quite Insolvent.

Abraham Lincoln Carter appeared before the bar of justice in Staunton, Va., charged with stealing $7.50. Evidence was strong against him, but the young lawyer appointed by the judge to defend the prisoner put up a strong plea, and Abraham was acquitted.

A little later counsel and client met outside the courthouse. "I worked hard for you this morning, Abraham," said the lawyer, "and the court pays me very little. There is a big wood pile out behind my house, and you had better work on it two or three days and pay your part."

"Yes, suh," replied Abraham, "but couldn't I pay you in money 'stead o' work?"

"Money! Where will you get any money, you rascal?"

"Well, boss, I reckon I still got dat seven dollars an' fifty cents."—New York Post.

Queer.

"You remember Dibbert, the terror of the neighborhood?"

"Sure. He shot his wife, set fire to a church and poisoned a horse."

"That's the one. Well, he's going to get out of prison in a few days."

"Well, well! He hasn't been there more'n a year. On what grounds are they letting him go?"

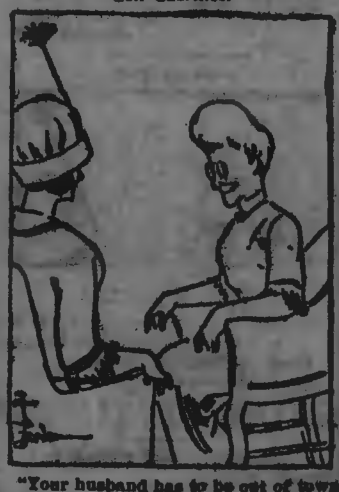
"Good behavior."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Not So Rare.

"Oh, Will," she said, moving a trifle closer to him, "I am so glad you are not rich! They say that some of those millionaires receive threatening letters saying that something dreadful will happen to them if they don't pay the writers sums of money."

"Oh, is that all?" replied Will. "Why, I get plenty of such letters."—New York Tribune.

Self Sacrifice.



"Your husband has to be out of town on business a great deal, doesn't he?"

"Yes; I don't suppose he is at home more than ten days a month on the average."

"I should think you would find such a state of things very unsatisfactory."

"It isn't as pleasant as it might be, but he tells me that he would have to accept $25 a month less than he's getting if he stayed at home, so what is one to do? Of course if he were a younger and handsomer man than he is I shouldn't put up with it even for the money it brings us."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Not an Expert.

"Do you hesitate?" she asked when he had come to remind her that she was engaged to him for that dance.

"Ye-ye-ye-ye-yes," he replied, "bu-bu-bu-but not as w-w-w-w-w-well as I w-w-w-w-wish I did."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Nearly Transparent.

"She is rather thin."

"Who?"

"That girl in the purple gown over yonder."

"Gosh, I thought that was a design in the wall paper."—Pittsburgh Post.

"The habit is hard to conquer."

"Yes, but I have changed it. I make it an absolute rule never to tip a waiter."—Washington Star.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

CAILLAUX TRIAL

PARIS, July 6. — Mme. Henriette Caillaux, who on March 16 last shot and killed Gaston Calmette, editor of The Figaro, was visited Saturday in St. Lazare Prison by Judge Louis Albanel, president of the criminal court which is to try her. Following the legal usage of France, the judge formally read the indictment to the prisoner. When asked if she persisted in the statements she had previously made to the investigating magistrate Mme. Caillaux replied in the affirmative. The meeting between the judge and prisoner took place in the office of the prison warden. Mme. Caillaux's hand shook as she signed a copy of the questions and replies. She said: "That is the effect of hypodermic serum which the doctor gave me this morning."

Chamberlain's Body Reaches Home.

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., July 6.—The body of the late Joseph Chamberlain, accompanied by Mrs. Chamberlain and her mother, and the Misses Chamberlain, arrived at Birmingham from London yesterday. A floral offering from Mrs. Chamberlain in the form of a cross was placed on the coffin.

A tremendous crowd awaited the cortege at Highbury, and deep emotion was displayed as the coffin containing the body of the great statesman passed.

Fatal Fall From Haymow.

WATFORD, Ont., July 6. — Bert Campbell, 20 years of age, living near here, was fatally injured Saturday when he fell 50 feet from a hay mow, where he was adjusting a hay fork rope. The young man crushed through the floor of the barn, landing on his head on a cement trough in the stable below.

TYPOS SPRUNG SURPRISE BY DEFEATING DRAFTING ROOM; HAMILTONS LOST TO BANKERS

Good Baseball In the Mercantile League

Two good games of baseball were provided the fans by the Mercantile League teams at Riverside Park Saturday when the much despised Printers beat the Drafting Room by a score of 4-3 and the Bankers beat the William Hamilton company 4-0. Both games were exciting from start to finish the Typos winning their game in the last innings when one run was shoved over. The games were worthy of better patronage. The fact that the clubs were playing on a first class diamond had its effect as the line of play was far superior to any dished up in the league this season. For the Typos O'Connell twirled good ball and was given good support while Henderson who worked on the mound for the losers also heaved a nice game. Neither team hit the ball hard and it was anybody's battle until the finish. The losers threaten to protest, claiming that the type slingers played a couple of men who were not on the certified list.

In the Bankers-Wm. Hamilton game Rose, the kid twirler of the losers, pitched masterly ball and showed up like a comer. Huycke who twirled for the Bankers pitched his usual good game but had Rose been given the support by his team mates that Huycke received, the result would have been different. Andrews officiated in both games and did his work well.

The teams lined up as follows:

Printers—Taylor c., O'Connell p., Henry 1b., Moore 2b., Rose s.s., Butcher 3b., Curtis r.f., Milloy c.f., Neary l. f.

Drafting Room—Stanton c., Henderson p., Walker 1b., Olson 2b., Boone s.s., Jackson 3b. ,Cranfield l.f., Metheral c.f., Gorman r.f.

Bankers—Cavanah c., Huycke p., Parson 1b., Corkery 2b., Minorgan s.s., Aikins l.f., Smith 3b., Moran c.f., Phelan r.f.

Wm. Hamilton Company—Ross c., Rose p., Neary 1b., Murphy 2b., Giroux s.s., Murphy 3b., O'Hearne l.f., Newbigging c,.f. Condon r.f.

PETES WON SUNDAY BILL AND ARE HOME FOR WEEK

One of Holiday Games Played Under Protest --- Erie Here For Three Games

The Petes returned home this morning after having won four out of the nine games on the road. The second game at Erie on the glorious fourth was played under protest as Umpire McPartlin was very raw according to local players and he was continually heckled. Four out of nine is not bad going on the road and as the Petes play nine of the next thirteen encounters on the local lot they should climb. The team is hitting in good style and Dolan the new first sacker has added strength both in fielding and batting. Welsh, Steware, Blount, King and Miller are slugging the pill with regularity. Rooney is warming the bench and as the other members of the club are going so good Manager Blount is at a loss to know just what to do with the youngster as he has shown good form in the games he played.

Sunday's Win.

Erie, Pa., July 5.—Peterboro won the final game of the series from Erie today by the score of 7 to 3. It was a hard fought contest until the seventh, when the tide turned for Peterboro. Behan failed to cover second on a double play and Peterboro followed the lapse with five hits scoring four runs. Two men were out when the rally was started. Schettler kept Erie's hits well scattered. McNeil drove in all three Yankee runs. Score:

Erie .1 0 0 0 0 1 0 1 0—3 9 0
Petes 0 0 2 0 1 0 4 0 0—7 11 0
Close and McNeil.
Schettler and Miller.

Holiday Games.
Erie Dispatch.

Good pitching on the part of Erie hillmen and equally good clouting by the team as a whole, netted the Yanks two more victories over Peterboro, yesterday. The morning session of the holiday bill was won 4 to 0, and the afternoon 5 to 2. In the morning game Dorbeck gave the visitors four hits and Brown allowed one more in the afternoon. On each occasion the visiting pitchers were hit hard.

Good fielding helped the Erie twirlers, for the team worked like a clock behind both Dorbeck and Brown. With London and Ottawa locking horns in a fight that will, temporarily at least, decide the leadership of the league, the Yanks exerted every effort to win and creep just a bit nearer the top. And they succeeded.

Both games were marred by considerable kicking against Umpire McMcPhartlin's decisions, with Petes by far the worst offender. The afternoon game exhibited prolonged chinfests that wound up in fines being plastered onto two players, King and Kelly. Blount finished the game after the seventh inning, under protest. In the eighth, after an argument with McPhartlin, Blount retired the side by nailing Gygli's fly to center. To show his spite—or disgust—Curley whirled and tossed the ball to the centerfield fence.

Morning game—
Petes 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0—0 4 1
Batteries—Dorbeck and Carney; Tracey and Miller.
Afternoon game—
Erie .3 0 0 0 0 1 1 0 *—5 11 1
Petes 0 0 1 1 0 0 0 0 0—2 5 3
Brown and Carney.
Belting and Miller.

COMMENT
As You Like It

THE PETES drew very badly at Erie and according to the players and Secretary Dobson the fans over there are still sore at the thought of playing in a Canadian League. The class of ball was fast at all times and the fans that did turn out were well pleased but the Erie populace as a whole laughs when the name Canadian is mentioned in connection with baseball. Some people are more to be pitied than laughed at.

THE TWO GAMES on July 4 at Erie drew about 1800 people while yesterday's game drew about 800. After all that has been said of great money being made in Erie on Sunday and holidays the ones who predicted such great gains were probably misinformed. The Review stated at the time Class "B" was granted the league that Toronto and Erie would be doubtful, but the wise acres laughed at the thought. Gate receipts to date have proven that Toronto and Erie are not drawing any better and in fact not as good as Peterboro and there is a wide difference in population figures.

GIL FORGUE, of the Brantford club is the original hard luck guy of the league. When he was with St. Thomas he was out of the game for half of the season last year, and just when he looked like hitting his stride this year, he fractured the fibula in his ankle while sliding into home at Hamilton Friday. He will be out of the game for two months and there is some talk of Gilhooley the Hamilton infielder, on the suspended list, being sent to Brantford.

SINIGAGLIA, the Italian, captured the Diamond Sculls on Saturday afternoon in easy fashion, Stuart, the English finalist, collapsing at the mile. Harvard captured the Grand Challenge from the Union Boat Club of Boston after a hard race.

DIBBLE of the Dons, Canada's representative, will be sent across the pond again next year in an effort to win the coveted trophy. Joe Thompson, one of the Don Club's stalwarts, has announced positively that Dibble will go back again.

JACK WHITE, formerly of the Petes, and manager of the Berlin Club for a portion of last season, has been appointed pilot of the Hamilton Club, and under his leadership the Athletics took Friday's and Saturday's games from the Deneaulites. White should prove a good man. He is popular in Hamilton and will have the fans with him, while he surely will have more control over his men than Doc Yates had. Lack of managerial control had more to do with the poor showing of the Hamilton club than lack of pitching control did.

FOUR OF THE BIG HURLERS in the big tent are off form and their work has had quite a bit to do with the failure of their clubs to make the showing they are capable of. Washington feels the failure of Walter Johnson to win, the Athletics are pulling hard for the return to form of Chief Bender, who will be needed on the long stretch run, while McGraw is worrying his head off over the showing of Demaree and Marquard.

"I never dealt here before, and I'll never deal here again!" he shouted. "I'll try once more. Have you any tomatoes?"

"No, sir," replied the clerk.

"What? Not even in cans?"

"Not even in bottles."

The apoplectic little man crushed his hat down further on his head and consulted the list in his hand.

"Have you any potatoes? Think carefully now."

"Not a potato in the place," said the clerk apologetically.

"Ye gods! Well, I'll see the end of this. Have you any sugar?"

"Not a grain, sir. Sorry, sir."

The apoplectic little man sat down on a stool and let his list flutter to the floor.

"And you call this a grocery store?" he said tauntingly.

"No, sir," corrected the clerk mildly. "This is a cigar store."

The apoplectic little man rolled off the stool in a fit.—Indianapolis Star.

A BIG STRIKE

Ten Thousand Out in Woolwich Gun Factories

LONDON, July 6.—Ten thousand men are now on strike at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. The trouble may spread to other army and navy factories. The origin of the dispute was the case of one man, a fitter named Entwhistle, who was asked to erect a machine on a concrete bed laid down by non-unionists during the building disputes. The fitter answered that he would do this only if a guarantee were given that never again would union men be asked to follow non-union men. On this Sir Frederick Donaldson dismissed Entwhistle, and by Saturday afternoon 7,000 men had thrown down their tools. They were to-day joined by 3,000 more, leaving only a few hundred non-union men in the Arsenal.

The strike committee last evening issued instructions that all men engaged under the direct supervision of Donaldson must stand down to-day. These men include all the employes in the royal laboratory, the royal carriage department, the royal gun factory, the mechanical engineering department, and the building works department. If this has no effect, the men in the army ordnance department, the naval ordnance department in the Government factories at Enfield, Pimlico and Waltham Abbey, and other departments will be asked to cease work.

Decision This Week.

QUEBEC, July 6.—Lord Mersey and his colleagues have had a busy week here sifting the mass of evidence submitted in the Empress of Ireland enquiry. The four assessors and Chief Justice McLeod returned from Montreal on Tuesday after spending a day looking over the injuries to the Storstad.

Since then the commission has sat twice a day at the court-house. The decision will probably be announced some time towards the last of this week. Captain and Mrs. Kendall are in Montreal awaiting the result of the enquiry. They hope to sail for their home in Liverpool on the Bulgarian next week.

Sacred Heart Lawn Social.

Final arrangements have been made for the holding of the Sacred Heart Lawn Social on Tuesday, July 14. It was formerly announced that the social would be held on the sixteenth but as this conflicted with the Merchants' Picnic and if they were held simultaneously it would mean poor success for both, Rev. Father O'Brien decided to hold the social on Tuesday, July 14. The grounds will be repaired next Friday evening when a bee will be held at 6.30.

TWO NEW ROOMS FOR THE SACRED HEART SCHOOL

More Accommodation Needed For Pupils

The Sacred Heart School, formerly known as the Lake Street School, is to be enlarged to the extent of two more rooms, to be contained in a wing 55 feet by 30 feet and two storeys high. Some thirty years ago one single room afforded the residents of the south city and the greater portion of Otonabee with educational facilities; later another room was added and then more, till in all it contained some four rooms. About six years ago two very large rooms were added to the south, the school thoroughly renovated and modern equipment installed. With the founding of the Church of the Sacred Heart, the Catholic families of that section of the city have become very numerous, thus necessitating further enlargement of the school. It is expected that it will be but a matter of a very few years till a new separate school will be required to meet the demand of that flourishing parish.

The work on the addition is to be commenced this week and will undoubtedly be completed previous to the opening of the fall term. When finished the school will embrace eight rooms and acommodate about 340 pupils. At present there are six rooms and 294 pupils.

The retreat is held every year. The local priests will return next Saturday.

FINAL CALL IS ANSWERED BY A. G. DICKSON

Well Known Merchant Had Been Ill Only a Short Time

The hand of death has again visited the ranks of the older residents of this city, this time robbing the city of one of her most well known merchants, Mr. Alexander Gillespie Dickson, who passed away at his residence, 383 Park Street, on Sunday morning at half-past four.

The late Mr. Dickson was born in Scotland but came to this country and started travelling for a dry goods firm. Evidently seeing great possibilities in this city, he came here 24 years ago, and opened up a retail store two doors south of Hunter Street on the west side of George and there, in a quiet, unassuming manner he centred his energies till a few days before his death. Last Monday he took a slight chill before retiring and the following morning felt a trifle ill. During the week he remained about the same despite medical skill and Saturday evening he took a turn for the worse from which he never rallied. His end came very peacefully.

He is survived by his widow here, and other relatives in Scotland. The funeral will take place on Wednesday morning from Comstock's Undertaking parlors to the C.P.R. 7.34 train and the remains will be forwarded to Toronto for interment. Service will be held at Comstock's on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

She leaves to mourn her demise two daughters Mrs. J. McIntyre of Renfrew, and Miss Minnie at home. The funeral will take place from the late residence tomorrow afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery.

Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Charlotte Street Methodist Church, officiated. Employees of Matthews-Blackwell Co., where the deceased was employed, were present in a body, and six acted as pallbearers. There were numerous floral tributes.

MIGHTY MIDWAY SHOWS ARRIVE

At the Exhibition Grounds Tonight

Tucked away somewhere in the innermost consciousness of every man and woman is the memory of the first Midway they ever attended. How vividly, when one of the old recollections are aroused does the memory of that great epochal period come back. The days of preliminary expectation, heightened by the curiousity-arousing newspaper announcements; the early morning arising to see the "big show unload." The crowds in the street and around the entrance to the still unknown world of marvels; how vividly one lives it all over again, what a glorious page it makes in the life story of days gone bye.

Is it any wonder, then, that the coming of the Midway stirs the community to its centre? To the children it means the unfolding of new delights; to those of mature years it is a promise of the renewal of pleasures of sight and sound that have never been forgotten.

There is, too, an educational side to the Midway that instinctively appeals to young and old. The great American Midway, as typified by Leon W. Washburn's Mighty Midway Shows nad Trained Wild Animal Arena and Jungle, is a travelling university of entertainment and instruction. It has its agents everywhere on earth, seeking out new and novel features for the amusement of its patrons; it makes known to Canadians the startling exploits of other countries; or originates new sensations to make the eyes sparkle and the nerves tingle with excitement; it brings to the doors of the American public strange people and odd curious animals from every spot on earth, does Leon W. Washburn's Mighty Midway Shows, which under the auspices of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition is in Peterborolgh at the Exhibition Grounds all this week.

ARE STILL SCARED

Few in Mexico City Have Courage Enough to Vote

MEXICO CITY, July 6. — Yesterday's elections passed almost unnoticed. Your correspondent, between the hours of 10 and noon, made a round of several polling booths. At none was a single voter seen and at some not one vote had been cast up to the time of your correspondent's visit. The maximum number of votes cast at any of the booths visited was seven. The votes cast for the President were distributed among Huerta, who seems to have polled the most votes in Mexico City; Blanquet, Federico Gamboa de la Barra, Augustin Rodrigues and Emilio Rabasa (the Niagara delegates), Nicolas Zuniga, Y. Miranda, and some persons like Licentiado Gabriel Ormachea, who are not even known to the general public.

The general indifference of the public was greater than in the case of the elections held on Oct. 26 last, when a fair number of votes were polled here.

Moheno's Resignation Accepted.

MEXICO CITY, July 6.—President Huerta has accepted the resignation of Querido Moheno, Minister of Commerce and Industry. Senor Moheno, in announcing that he had tendered his resignation, categorically denied that it had been demanded by the President because he awarded oil concessions to persons connected with a big American oil company. He said he was retiring because of his health.

Leaves For Englishman's Trial.

EL PASO, Texas, July 6.—American Consul Theodore Hamm left yesterday for Zacatecas to represent the United States at the court martial trial of George St. Clair Douglas, an attache of the British Consulate, charged with aiding and abetting the Huerta army during the Constitutionalist attack on Zacatecas. Gen. Manuel De La Vega, military governor of the State of Zacatecas will preside at the trial. Douglas is accused of having acted as spy for Gen. Barron and of having operated a searchlight on La Buffa Hill during the rebel attack.

CELEBRATION COST $8.75

Jos. Long appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning, charged with being drunk while in charge of a team of horses on Friday evening. He was assessed $8.75 forthwith. The fine was paid. Bob Dixon who was reported to be missing, also the woman, turned up yesterday, unable to give a satisfactory account of his whereabouts. He demanded his team and was given the same. This morning he appeared and cashed a $50 check for his pal. Both deny the presence of a woman with them on their big night.

MARTIN COMING

LONDON, July 6.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Joe Martin announced yesterday that he sails on the Aquitania on Saturday next to reside permanently in Canada. He will remain member for East St. Pancras, however, until the general election.

A certain amount of friction has existed for some time between Mr. Martin and his political chiefs, and a section of his supporters in his constituency over the independent attitude he adopted over certain questions, notably when he voted against the Government on the Marconi revelations. Lately he offered to resign his seat and fight on his own account, but he received intimation from the chief Government whip that in such case another official Liberal candidate would not be brought out against him.

NO CHANGE IN MARKET BY-LAW

Fowl Must Be Weighed and Tickets Attached---Dealers Cannot Buy After 9 a.m.

Despite the fact that the Council were waited on last evening by two delegations in regard to the market by-law, no action was taken by the Council and the by-law stands.

The Property Committee submitted that in order to consider the suggestion from the Retail Merchants' Association, that a strip be paved inside the present market sidewalk for rigs and that both sidewalks and strip be covered for protection from the elements, that the Chairman secure an estimate of the cost. On the motion of Ald. Johnston and Langford, the recommendation was carried.

Considerable discussion arose over the matter of the committee in recommending that to meet the wishes of the Retail Merchants Association, the clause compelling sellers to weigh their fowl and to have tickets attached to same with their names and addresses, be rescinded. On motion of Ald. Johnston and Langford, no action was taken in the matter.

Clause number three, that the Market By-law be amended to accede to the request, that dealers be allowed to buy on the market after 9 o'clock a.m., was dealt with in the same manner.

Mr. Barrie, president of the Retail Merchants' Association, addressed the Council to the effect that the by-law was going to prove a detriment and drive people from the local market. There was not the slightest advantage to be obtained in the regulations as set down on the by-law.

Secretary Cameron spoke along the same lines, also other members of the delegation of the Association.

Mrs. J. C. Davidson, president of the Women's Council advocated the upholding of the by-law. It was unfair to turn the by-law down after only a six weeks' trial. The Retail Merchants were rather out in their ideas. The Women's Council wanted a market fit for women to attend. The present market was not such. The farmers should pay for the privilege of attending the market with their produce. Mrs. Kingan expressed herself along the same lines.

Mayor Buller agreed with the ladies that it was right that fowl should be weighed and also ticketed. He assured them that the Property Committee would take the matter of improvements at the market into their serious consideration.

A NEW ONE FOR BAD YOUNGSTERS

Police Chief Tries Whipping as Punishment

Chief Thompson has decided on a more serious means of punishment for the young delinquents, that of a severe whipping by the cat o' nine tails. Yesterday afternoon five youthful housebreakers were dealt with in such manner by giving them each a whipping by the newly purchased instrument of justice.

The ceremony was in charge of a physician, who sounded each boy and passed him to the constable who applied the "trimming."

"That will do more good to check juvenile crime than anything we have tried," remarked the Chief at the conclusion, to the parents of the boys, who had consented to the whiping.

HIS FLIGHT ENDED IN FATALITY

Man Who Escaped From County Jail Killed By Train

Toronto, July 7.—A man thought to be George Coates, of 335 Thirteenth Street, West Scranton, Pa., was found lying with his legs amputated beside the Grand Trunk tracks on the embankment at Ellis avenue, Swansea, yesterday afternoon. He died without regaining consciousness at the Parkdale Hospital, where he was removed.

The police base his presumptive identification upon a letter bearing the name and address in his clothes. A second letter addressed to the same name, in care of H. Nesbitt, of Peterboro, was also found, and enquiries are being made in both places. A grim comedy was enacted previous to the finding of these letters, when the police were following up a supposed clue afforded by a piece of paper in the man's pockets bearing the signature of S. Willcock, 136 Broadview Avenue.

Enquiries were made by the authorities at the Broadview address, and a man by the name of S. Willcock was found. He came to the morgue and, after viewing the body, said that he had never seen the man, and knew nothing about him. He was shown the piece of paper bearing his name, and acknowledged it as his own handwriting. He was at a loss to understand how it came to be in the man's possession, declaring that he had no recollection of writing on the scrap of paper in question.

Part of a postcard relating to a wedding at Havelock, Ont., was also found in the man's pockets, but only a small portion of the writing was left, making it impossible to connect any one sentence.

Coates is the man who escaped from the County jail on Saturday evening. He was sentenced to the Central Prison under the name of Clark for theft. He escaped from the County jail early Saturday evening by the means of sawing the bars of the window of the prison kitchen and climbing the fifteen foot wall by means of a sheet.

He evidently came into possession of the address of Wilcox owing to the fact that Wilcox served ten days here for being drunk and was a cell mate of the dead man. Evidently Coates had travelled on the bumpers to Toronto being without funds when he left this city on Saturday evening. His wife is believed to be living with relatives in this city.

CONTEST IS A WARM ONE

Victory in Manitoba Claimed By Both Sides

WINNIPEG, July 7. — The last week of the political battle has been entered upon with expressions of confidence on both sides. T. C. Norris, Opposition leader, after touring the province last week, declared on his return here: "There's going to be a change on July 10th," and issued a manifesto to the electors emphasizing the certainty of victory if the polls are protected on election day.

"The machine," he says, "is desperate. I feel it will stop at nothing."

Many meetings have been arranged for this week, including one here last night, addressed by Mrs. Nellie McClung.

The Conservatives are leaving nothing to chance, and the Cabinet Ministers are assisted by Hon. Messrs. Rogers and Roche of the Federal Cabinet. Many meetings are being planned for the closing days in the city and province.

CLOSE SHAVE IN RIVER AT GOOSE POND

Two Companions Saved Wm. Preston From Drowning

GOT BEYOND DEPTH

While parties were performing hair raising acts of bravery at the Exhibition Grounds last night, there was a rescue enacted at what is known as the Goose Pond at the foot of Dublin Street, in which the party saved was truly in peril. Several young men were enjoying an evening's "duck," but as often happens, one of them, William Preston, a blacksmith, at Batten's Blacksmith Shop, who boards at 351 McDonnel Street, went out beyond his depth. The river at the jacks becomes deep very rapidly, and, while splashing around, Preston underestimated the depth and before he was aware of it, he was over his depth.

Mr. Archie Sollitt of Downie Street and Mr. Fred Woods, another employe of Batten's, were swimming some distance away, and the former was given cause to look back when he heard Preston cry, "Archie, Archie, hurry." Sollitt is an expert swimmer and immediately turned and headed for the drowning man. Wood came along behind. When he reached Preston, the latter had gone down the third time, but his white form could be seen a few feet below the surface and Sollitt dived after him.

Excited at the thoughts of meeting death so unexpectedly prompted Preston to grasp out frantically and he caught Sollitt around the neck and came near shutting off his wind, which would undoubtedly have cost both of them their lives. The drowning man is rather big physically, and it was with great difficulty that the rescuer could break the hold. He did, however, and brought him to the surface and lost no time in heading for shore.

Wood had in the meantime arrived on the scene and assisted Sollitt to get Preston out of the water and both men rendered first aid. In the course of a few minutes the greater part of the water was worked off his lungs, and he came slowly to consciousness. He was weak and greatly upset, but after a short rest, was able to dress and return to his boarding house.

Speaking to a Review scribe today, Preston claimed that he had no idea that the current would carry him under so easily. He felt the water pulling at his feet and remembered shouting for Sollitt, but after that things were a trifle mixed. He could not express his thanks for the rescue and remarked that it was as close a call as he ever wants.

Mr. Sollitt informed the scribe that he thought of getting the pulmotor as soon as he had the victim out, but as there were very few people around, he and Wood were alone in their efforts to bring Preston to life. He thought it best for them to concentrate their efforts in first aid rather than take a chance on the pulmotor arriving in time.

Judging by the story of the incident as told by a couple of small boys who were playing in the vicinity, Mr. Sollitt "won his laurels" and is surely deserving of just reward by the Royal Humane Society.

HOLD UP AT OVAL

Two Men Point Revolver at Robert Nantell

TOOK HIS MONEY

As Robert Nantell of Auburn was passing through the Nicholls Oval last night about midnight he was held up at the point of a revolver by two masked men and robbed of some $5. Nantell was just entering the park when the men sprang at him with the request to throw up his hands. This remark was backed up by a revolver.

Both men wore a handkerchief tied over the lower part of their face. The authorities have been notified of the matter and are investigating. Several other residents have complained of noticing suspicious characters around the park.

BRITON IS FREED

Vice Consul Exonerated of Charge of Assisting Huerta

EL PASO, July 7. — George St. Clair Douglas, the British subject held by Constitutionalist authorities at Zacatecas was released yesterday. His detention had been the subject of representations to Carranza and Villa agents here by H. C. Miles, British vice-consul. Theodore Hamm, American consul at Durango, who investigated the case, left here yesterday to return to his post and report on the Zacatecas case.

The charge that Douglas assisted the Federals at Zacatecas has been withdrawn according to a telegram yesterday from Manuel de la Vega, Constitutionalist governor of Zacatecas state, in which he said Douglas had been found not guilty before a court-martial.

ROBERTS WARNS THE CABINET

Coercion of Ulster Will Ruin Army He Declares

LONDON, July 7. — How was it, asked Lord Roberts in the House of Lords during last night's debate, that they were faced with a situation in which the army had indicated the possibility of disobedience? The answer was that this was no mere political crisis; they were face to face with a clash of principles which raised a question far beyond the realm of ordinary politics at a comparatively early stage in the struggle. He warned the Government that any attempt to use military forces for the coercion of Ulster would break and ruin the army. His words fell on deaf ears. The country might plunge into civil war or might drift into it, but whichever course they took it remained civil war. They might make the position of the army yet more difficult by graduating the steps, so as to give each step a fair appearance of legality and reason, but those steps would none the less put them into the same abyss. Later it would become manifest that force was to be used for the sole purpose of coercing Ulster. When that moment was reached the disaster to the army which he foresaw would come about.

YOUNG WOMAN KILLED AT RAILWAY CROSSING

Miss Waller, Daughter of Principal of Huron College, London, Is the Victim of Peculiar Accident When Auto Slips Down Hill On To Track

Girl Too Terrified To Heed Advice To Jump With Others

TORONTO, July 7. — One person was killed and six others escaped death by leaping to the ground, when a heavy motor car stalled on the steep Maclennan avenue hill, just north of the C.P.R. tracks, and backed directly in front of the eastbound afternoon C.P.R. freight bound for Lindsay.

Miss Ella Waller, of London, is dead; her father, Principal Waller, of Huron College, London; Rev. Francis E. Powell and Mrs. Powell, of Toronto; Samuel Kennedy, chauffeur, and two girls whose names have not been ascertained, narrowly escaped being killed.

The car commenced to climb the hill at a slow rate of speed, and was stalled at a point about 25 yards away from the railway tracks. The police think the chauffeur may have lost his head, at any rate he did not put on the brakes and the car slid gradually backwards down the hill, with the heavy freight pounding along at 20 miles an hour, and bearing right down on the crossing. When the motor reached a point twelve feet from the tracks, all but Rev. Mr. Powell and Miss Waller had jumped. The pastor then called to the girl to follow him and leaped to safety, but Miss Waller, apparently too terrified to move, remained in the car and was hurled with it twenty feet to the fence on the west side of the roadway. Rev. Mr. Powell extricated her from the wreckage, and she was conveyed to the General Hospital, where she died at seven o'clock.

Samuel Kennedy, the chauffeur, was afterwards arrested by the police of No. 5 division on a charge of criminal negligence. He was released late last night on $5,000 bail.

Auto Kills Child.

STRATHROY, Ont., July 7.—Leila Willoughby, aged six years, of Adelaide village, near here, was struck by an automobile yesterday afternoon and died a few hours later. The motor was carrying a number of Chicago people, and the girl was running across the road to her home at the time. Coroner Thompson of Strathroy has opened an inquest.

WILL ASK THE ASSISTANCE OF THE COMMISSION

Hydro to Help In Ground Work of Local Offices

At their meeting last evening the Public Utilities Commission decided to ask the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission to send an auditor to Peterborough and give instructions regarding the preparation of the books, etc., and means of conducting the Hydro Electric business.

It was decided also that the water rate for the Carnegie Estate in Smith now occupied by Mr. Thos. Scott remain the same as charged.

On motion of Messrs. Moore and Hicks a check for $25 will be issued to M. Cook for overtime in connection with the water works.

Medical Health Officer McPherson, reported on the water conditions for the past month. The report compares favorably with other months and shows the water free from infection.

A petition was received from the residents of Morrow Street for a water service.

A letter was received from the Employers' Liability Corporation to the effect that they were willing to settle the case of an Italian who was recently injured, by paying his wages and expenses providing his expenses were not over $50. The Superintendent was asked to report on the matter.

The application of Miss Lillian Eastwood for position as stenographer was received.

The Quaker Oats Company asked that the hydrant in front of their offices on Hunter Street be removed across the street. The matter was referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

The Superintendent reported on the petition for a water main on Gilchrist Street and Dublin Street. The estimated cost would amount to $502.80. The money derived from it would amount to $39.84 and the Commission decided that there was not sufficient revenue to justify the expense.

A Rubidge Street application for a water main was dealt with in the same manner.

A report was read from the Superintendent in connection with the application for water service to the Separate School on Mark Street. The Superintendent was instructed to lay the main.

A resolution was passed by the Commission to the effect that St. Vincent's Orphanage be permitted to arrange their service so as to pay for the lawn service at the flat lawn rate instead of meter.

The Superintendent was instructed to report on the arrangement which is to be under his direction.

The application of J. J. McBain for a water service on Hunter Street west of Belmont Avenue was not granted as the City Council have not taken over that particular part of the street.

The various accounts were passed. Chairman T. F. Matthews presided with Messrs. Hicks and Moore in attendance.

THE COMEDY CONTINUES

Peter Thompson, Plumbing Inspector---Not Yet

Council Sends Matter Back to Property Committee

Once again the wrangle over Peter Thompson as Plumbing Inspector, resulted in a deadlock among the members of the Council at their regular monthly meeting last evening. The Property Committee recommended that Thompson be appointed Plumbing Inspector. Ald. Duncan objected and the fire works started lasting for over one hour during which time each member relieved his system of what he thought of ideas of some aldermen and others. The outcome was that the appointment was referred back to the Committee for further action and that Thompson was to appear before the committee and have the matter threshed out immediately before the next meeting of the Council.

In his objection Ald. Duncan referred to what he termed the inefficient services of Thompson, in the past. He certainly would not have any man who would refuse to obey the orders of the committee.

Ald. McIntyre strongly objected to having the City Engineer appointed as Plumbing Inspector for the reason that he already has too many duties to attend to. If Thompson was not the right man get the right man.

Ald. Stratton expressed the same opinion he being against giving the position of Plumbing Inspector and adding it to the duties of Mr. Parsons, who was already over burdened.

COURAGE OR THE LACK OF IT.

THE NEWS of a London tragedy, cabled to the Mail and Empire a day or so ago, gave the details of the death of Sir Denis Anson and a bandsman who went to his rescue. The party, which included Raymond Asquith, son of the Prime Minister, and his wife, were enjoying a midnight launch party after an evening at the Russian opera. It was a very lively party and they danced and sang all the way to Kew except when they were sitting on the deck at an al fresco supper. On arriving at Kew the boat turned and proceeded towards Westminster. The party continued in a gay and festive spirit, and although there appeared to be plenty of fun and skylarking there was no untoward conduct, according to the skipper, until the boat was approaching Battersea Bridge. On the way back a young lady dared Sir Denis to jump overboard. He took the dare, jumped, and sank, although a good swimmer, before being picked up.

Sir Denis Anson was the nephew and heir of the great constitutional lawyer, Sir Wm. Anson, who died a month or so ago. He was an Eton and Oxford man, and had every prospect for a useful career. He showed he had courage to dare, but we think it required more courage to refuse the dare than to act upon it. It is a most senseless act to risk life for no purpose at all, for Sir Denis Anson gave his life to prove he was not afraid of a ducking. It is a kind of false courage that leads to acts like these. If there was profit in it, that would be at least one reason, but here was a young man with every prospect of a useful career, who threw away his life merely to gratify a purposeless boast. His death should be an admonition that courage does not always consist in risking life, but in resisting the temptation to do something foolish.

OTTAWA DOCTORS LACKED CHIVALRY.

THE OTHER DAY the papers contained an item that Mr. Justice Lennox, in a judgment delivered at Osgoode Hall, dismissed the action brought by two Ottawa doctors, Rufus H. Parent and Rudolph Chevrier, against Miss Celina Charlebois, an aged lady, for specific performance of an alleged agreement for the sale of certain property in Ottawa, and in handing down the judgment made some very scathing comments on the conduct of the plaintiffs. They were suing for specific performance or $5000 damages as the alternative. His Lordship said the evidence convinced him that the lady was unfairly dealt with. She was never given a fair chance to understand, deliberate, or protect herself. The alleged agreement was practically wrung from her, and the plaintiffs, as medical men, were peculiarly fitted to appreciate the unfitness of a nervous, excitable, worried, hysterical woman to make a contract. At the time she was incapable of weighing or appreciating any important business proposition. There never was a valid contract, as it was shown the defendant did not understand the language of the agreement, that material provisions were omitted from it, and that she was frightened and intimidated and threatened.

The dispute arose over some property that Miss Charlebois owned and which the doctors wanted to possess. The lady did not want to sell, but they asserted if she did not conclude a bargain with them she would be without bread and upon the road.

While Judge Lennox is to be commended for his decision, which was undoubtedly rendered not on sentimental grounds, but on the evidence of the case, it seems that a greater punishment than merely losing the case is due the two medical men in question. They are certainly no credit to their profession and have apparently used their position to intimidate a helpless old lady for the purpose of private gain. We do not know if the Medical Council has any jurisdiction in this matter, but if it were heard from, their action might prevent a repetition of such unworthy conduct.

THE ROMANCE OF THE RAND.

TO CANADIANS the story of the famous South African field has an absorbing interest. The history of the Rand is the history of one of the greatest romances of all time. On September 19, 1886, the Transvaal was a colony offering little, if any, attraction to the settler. On September 20 the Witwatersrand — the Rand — a stretch of land extending for fifty miles around Johannesburg, was proclaimed a gold-field. The first actual find of gold by a Mr. Minnear dates from 1881, but it was not till five years later, thanks to the enterprise of the brothers Struben, that the fallacy of Mr. Rhodes' engineer reporting against the Rand became evident. The pioneers were soon in the field prospecting above the reef they were so soon to strike. Sir J. B. Robinson, Knight, Douthwaite and Whitehead, all entered into friendly competition. But for the whites there would have been no gold found on the Rand. When gold was struck, Johannesburg sprang up in a night. The Rand hung fire a little at the start. Experts believed that the reef was not deep, but when the shafts began to get down, proving the contrary, the rush came. In lumbering ox-waggons, on foot, on horseback, the cosmopolitan crowd poured in. It was a curious happy-go-lucky community in those days. Through drouth and flood, bad speculations, mistakes and "slumps," the Randites held on their way till perfecting of the cyanide process made the future success of the goldfield a certainty. The Rand's progress is well reflected in the rise of the population of Johannesburg.

In 1887 the inhabitants numbered 3,000. By the beginning of 1890 they had increased to over 25,000. A census taken in July, 1896, showed a population within a radius of three miles from Market Square of 102,078, of whom 50,907 were whites. At the census of April, 1904, the inhabitants numbered 90,022, the population within the municipal area being 155,642, of whom 83,363 were whites. Of the white inhabitants 30 per cent. were of British origin, 51,629 were males and 31,734 females. The last census of the town resulted as follows: Whites, 95,162; natives and colored, 78,781; Asiatics, 6,780, making a total of 180,723.

It is no exaggeration to say that if anything adverse happened to the Rand today the whole world would be affected. The gold production of the Rand has become such an important factor in the world's monetary position that its sudden curtailment for any length of time would have a serious and far-reaching effect. To show how largely the Rand's contribution bulks in the world's gold supplies, it is only necessary to state that in 1912 the world's supplies amounted to £98,000,000, while the Transvaal production was £38,757,000.

SILVER THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

THE GREATER PART of the silver mining output has been trans-shipped across the world for centuries, from west to east. As the cost of transmitting metals increases in proportion to bulk and weight, the purer the form in which silver travels the cheaper is the expense of carriage. For this reason silver is always smelted at the mine itself, provided sufficient labor and fuel be available.

Electricity has been brought into use for refining during recent years, and by its means the quality of the silver refined has raised to a remarkable degree. It is not uncommon for electrically refined bars to run 9,997 or more parts fine in the 10,000. Silver after refining is melted, as a rule, into the form of what are styled bars, about 1,100 troy ounces in weight; massive bricks measuring 12 inches long by 5 wide by 4½ deep.

London is the world's silver centre, says the London Chronicle, where the greater part of the refined silver output of the globe is brought to market. Here governments, with the exception of those in the Americas, obtain supplies they need for coinage. China and India have the most capacious appetites of all. The greater part of the silver imported into India is utilized by the arts, namely, for manufacturing jewellery and utensils — not for coinage. The average import for industrial purposes at the present time is about 50,000,000 ounces per annum. The vast bulk of this quantity is worked up into jewellery in the form of bangles, etc. In India the manufacture of silver utensils is confined principally to those intended to contain food.

A Real Chance.

Vancouver Province

Five state banks in Chicago have gone to the wall in the space of a few weeks. If this had happened in the Canadian west the calamity howler would have some excuse for a screech.

How Money Grows.

Montreal Journal of Commerce.

During the past century the wealth of the United Kingdom increased from twelve billion dollars to eighty-five billions or by 550 per cent. The increase in some of the nations has increased in the same period by 700 per cent or from one billion five hundred millions to twelve billions. In other words the present annual income of the United Kingdom is equal to the principal of a century ago.

Suicide Knows No Age.

London Chronicle.

The astonishing news from Germany that during 1912 over a hundred children committed suicide, reminds us that apparently there is no age limit at which man cannot sometimes find life unbearable. Suicide at the early age of five has been known, and in 1892 a Russian, reported to be 106, took his own life, leaving a letter in which his reasons were fully stated. Life, he declared, was nowadays too insipid for one who had known the good old days.

"Independence" and Journalism.

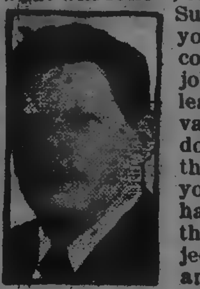
Colliers.

To most folks an independent paper is one that supports their side; the one that supports the other side is partisan. Also, there seems to be something in human nature which reacts against the idea of a really independent paper—a paper, that is to say, which supports the better acts of a man or a party and condemns the less desirable ones. Perhaps it is mixed up with the universal human liking for the quality of loyalty. To interrupt a course of praise, of course, seems like the unpleasing trait of disloyalty. But is there anything else for a really independent paper to do? Many a paper which regards itself as independent merely contents itself with keeping silent about the things it cannot conscientiously praise. In the nature of things, a really independent paper cannot inspire universal affection. It is on the fence, and it is going to get the bricks from both sides. In spite of all the talk about an independent press, in spite of the great growth of the independent vote, the only really independent papers in the U.S. continue to be the ones that have held to that rule for more than a generation, such as the New York Evening Post and the Springfield (Mass.) Republican. The editorial page of the New York World, which has been for more than thirty years a remarkably able and virile critic of public affairs, has been, of intention, prevailingly Democratic. It has not been independent in the sense of detached regard, or disregard, of all parties and all leaders alike.

BLOWING MONEY

By Walt Mason

It's surely funny to blow in money as fast as it is earned, but what will follow, oh, gentle Rollo, when all the wealth is burned?



Suppose you sicken, and troubles thicken about your lowly shack, while docs and nurses discourse of hearses as you lie on your back? The job you're holdin', with stipend golden, may leave you any day, and you'll sit sweating, in vain regretting the dough you fooled away. Salt down the plunder, or you will blunder so bad that all your days with melancholy you'll view your folly, bewail your spending craze. If you have rhino, the people, I know, to you will lift the hat; but none respects you, the world rejects you, if you are busted flat. How sweet and mellow to every fellow is life's serene decline, if he is loaded with uncorroded doubloons, put down in brine! How bleak and dreary, and sad and weary, is age to one who's broke, who sits and hollers about the dollars that he sent up in smoke!

HOE YOUR OWN ROW

THERE air people who have the knack of shiftin' their responsibilities and burdens to other people's shoulders down ter a science. It's a mean and contemptable thing ter do and if I believed in the transmigration of souls, which same I don't, I'd say any person little enough to do it would be a mouse er a crawfish er somethin' equally as distinctive in the life ter come. Thar's only one fair and square way to live life and thet is to carry yer own troubles and worries; in other words hoe yer own row, er in still others, set tight, square yer jaw and mind your own dinged business. It may be a lonesome and uninterestin' pursuit at fust but thar's a dipperful of joy at the other end of the row and any amount of genuine satisfaction between the hills yer hoein'. Yebetye, it pays to hoe yer own row!

INDIANS SHOT OFFICER.

Three Arrests Follow Attack on the Police at Naughton Reserve.

TORONTO, July 7.—Three brothers, Commanda Indians, have been arrested under instruction from Chief of Police Rogers, of the Ontario force, by Inspector Storey. The arrests follow a search for some days of the Naughton Reserve, back of Sturgeon Falls. The Indians are charged with shooting with intent to kill, with assaulting an officer in the discharge of his duties, and with taking game out of season.

A month ago two game wardens went to inspect the Indian camp for contraband skins, and some beaver pelts were found. One of the brothers in a rage started to shoot from ambush and injured both game wardens, wounding one in the wrist. The warrants were issued and the arrest effected yesterday.

To Look For Hulls.

SARNIA, Ont., July 7.—Word was received here yesterday that a survey party will patrol a considerable portion of Lake Huron in the vicinity of Goderich, where some of the boats lost in the disastrous storm of November last are supposed to be. The Canadian Government already has a survey boat in that neighborhood investigating reports to the effect that the hulls of the steamers Wexford, McGean and Carruthers are lying just off Naftel's Point.

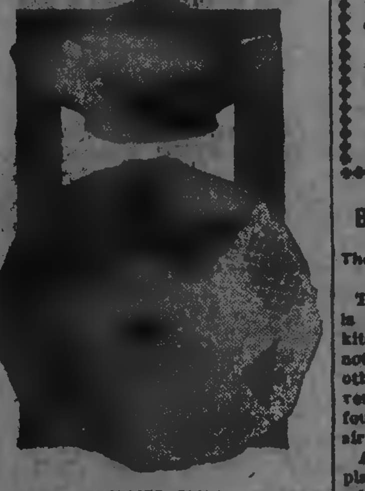
TABLE NOVELTIES.

One of These Is the Bluebird China Whose Beauty Makes For Happiness.

Manufacturers of china are giving us more attractive table ware than ever before. Who could fail to feel happy partaking of luncheon or tea from one of these bluebird china sets, specimens of which are illustrated here? Even the heaviest food should taste better served in such dishes.

Useful and attractive are the new English breakfast sets. A silver plated waiter, some sixteen inches long, is fitted to a pair of U shaped legs, which because of their very shape stand satisfactorily on a bed, making an excellent table for an invalid. When not in use the legs fold under. Two sets of pretty china go with each tray. If one set becomes chipped or broken the second one is there to replace it.



BLUEBIRD CHINA.

In these sets come a small individual coffeepot fitted with a silver lid, as also are the marmalade and jelly jars. The sugar bowl is an open one and is only large enough to hold three blocks of sugar. It is quite complete with tiny sugar tongs, the cream jug is cute and pretty, while the combination bread and butter plate, with fitted toast rack above, is both attractive and novel. Another combination piece is the egg holder, which has tiny salt and pepper shakers inset into silver rims at each side. A coffee cup and breakfast plate complete this little breakfast set.

Home Helps.

Discolored bronze should be thoroughly cleaned of dust, then apply a mixture of two parts warm water and one part muriatic acid. Wipe dry with a chamois skin.

A velvet hat can be kept in good condition by wiping it with a piece of black stocking after brushing.

A good sauce for stewed fruit is made by boiling ½ ounce of very fine sago in one pint of milk till so tender that the grains almost disappear.

Cook's Cotton Root Compound

A safe, reliable regulating medicine. Sold in three degrees of strength—No. 1, $1; No. 2, $3; No. 3, $5 per box. Sold by all druggists, or sent prepaid on receipt of price. Free pamphlet. Address: THE COOK MEDICINE CO., TORONTO, ONT. (Formerly Windsor.)

VANITY'S VAGARIES.

Sport coats have broad, soft collars.

Shirring seems to be popular.

For hair ornaments peacock feathers are worn.

Butterflies are worn on evening gowns and on hats.

The high Henry II. and renaissance collars of lace or mousseline appear on all classes of costumes.

Taffeta and crape dresses are trimmed with collars and cuffs of ecru batiste, embroidered.

Sealing wax red is a new shade.

Handkerchief linen blouses are made in colors—green, rose, pink, maize. Some have white organdie frillings.

The silk petticoats with yokes are new.

Coat buttons are of metal, bone or wood.

Sleeves grow less and less and very sheer.

BUYING A REFRIGERATOR.

The Selection Should Be Based on Common Sense.

The summer refrigerator or ice chest is the most important item of the kitchen outfit. A refrigerator should not be kept in the cellar. If there is no other place for it the cellar must be very dry, the floor level and a place found near a window so that light and air will be at hand.

A shed or outer kitchen is the best place for a refrigerator. Here it is within convenient reach and well ventilated.

Select an oak or white pine exterior. These are more durable even than ash, and oak is superior to any casing unless one feels like providing real white porcelain.

It is possible to buy a good sized oak refrigerator from $15 upward which contains a separate ice chamber within convenient reach. Some models have the ice chamber at the top reached by a lid, so that it is necessary for the average woman to stand on tiptoe to look inside and remove the interior support for cleansing purposes.

With such an arrangement it is often necessary to remove the entire interior arrangement to get at the drain, and anything so awkward and complicated must be avoided, even if its care is not to be intrusted to the maid. In such a case the old fashioned ice chest is easier to handle, but the advantage of the ice chest is that while cheaper it is all practically one compartment, whereas the up to date refrigerator has its chambers all separate, with a well regulated system of cold air drafts reaching down from the ice chamber and outside air currents passing behind the side walls to give proper circulation.

His Trade.

"He makes the living for all the people in town."

"He?"

"Yes."

"Is he a working philanthropist?"

"No; he is a working baker."

Got His Bit.

"I fine you," said the judge, "$50 and $10 costs."

"But I only have $10, judge."

"Then I remit the fine."

FAVORED MATERIALS.

Crape In Either Plain or Figured Fabrics.

CRAPE AFTERNOON GOWN.

One of the most favored fabrics for summer gowns is crape. It comes in sheer and heavy weaves and may be had in plain or figured effects. The figured crapes are shown in both printed and machine embroidered fabrics. The gown illustrated here is of plain white combined with figured crape. The waist peplum and pannier are developed in the figured crape. The double tunic is bound with pink satin matching the color of the little pink flowers on the figured crape. The wide satin girdle is also of pink ribbon.

Making Parties Successful.

When they begin to give "at homes" it never occurs to most women to think out beforehand a plan of campaign for amusements. They introduce people to one another for no better reason than that they chance to be standing close together. Consequently their parties do not "go" a bit.

The wise hostess makes mental notes that this person and that have something in common and so should meet. They mention the mutual interest when they introduce them. Things go swimmingly at once if everybody is talking to the right instead of to the wrong person.

Platinum Rings.

The up to date bride is married with a band of platinum, which has taken the place at many fashionable weddings of the band of gold. To the bride who cherishes tradition the platinum wedding ring is not welcome. For generations the ring has been of gold, and, to the traditional bride's mind, for generations more it should be of gold. It is this sort of bride who prefers a solitaire diamond to everything else for an engagement ring.

In spite of her sentiment for the old and accepted, the platinum ring has advocates among the brides who are seeking change.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

"I HAVE GAINED FIFTEEN POUNDS

Since Taking "Fruit-a-tives" And Feel Like A New Person"

DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th, 1913.

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address and, on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a most terrific pain at the base of my skull. This pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

Police Officer Shot.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 7.—Special Policeman Frank O'Leary was shot in the side yesterday by Jack Breman, aged 18, whom he had just arrested on suspicion of breaking into H. J. McWatt's drug store.

The shooting took place near Breman's house. Breman admitted the breaking, but told O'Leary he would shoot him if arrested, and he carried out the threat.

O'Leary made deposition to this effect just before going under an operation in hospital yesterday afternoon. His condition is doubtful.

Despite his injury O'Leary clung to his prisoner till help came.

Breman said there were two men in the burglary. They got about $200.

Boy's Heroic Rescue.

BRANTFORD, Ont., July 7.—Willie Smith, a youngster living in Eagle Place, while swimming in the Grand river got beyond his depth. He was swimming, and turned over on his back to rest. Then he dropped, to put his feet on the river bed, but found it was over his depth. He yelled, and was taken down by the current when Arthur Ratcliffe, a lad smaller than Smith, dived for him twice, and grabbed Smith by the hair. Smith fought, and Ratcliffe stunned him, and then held him up until a canoe reached them.

TRUSTFUL MA.

Ma has every confidence in pa.
She says she knows he always does what's right.
He's not at all like some folks' husbands are,
Whose conduct very often is a fright.
She says that she can trust him anywhere
An' know he'd never think of doing wrong,
But when he meets a widow young an' fair
Ma never leaves them chatting very long.

Ma never has a single doubt of pa,
An' she is very thankful, too, for that.
She says she knows he'd never go too far.
Besides he's growing old an' bald an' fat.
But just the same when we have friends for tea
An' ma has shown 'em where their places are,
Although she trusts him most implicitly,
She never puts the pretty girls by pa.

In Store.

The regular trombone player of a Scottish orchestra was laid up with a cold, and the conductor reluctantly accepted the services of a brass band amateur. He was a little doubtful, however, as to the suitability of his substitute.

After the first performance the new player asked the conductor how he had done.

The conductor replied that he had done pretty fairly, but that perhaps he would do better next night.

The newcomer, eyeing him gratefully, answered:

"Man, ye see the music is a' strange tae me the nicht, an' I'm no' jist shair o' 't yet, but you wait tae the morn's nicht, an' ye'll no hear ane o' thae fiddles at a'."—Weekly Telegraph.

Taking Advantage of Opportunity.

"Have you come to an understanding with my daughter?"

"Not exactly."

"What do you mean, then, by asking me to consent to your marriage?"

"This happened to be such a good chance that I thought I'd ask you and get that much out of the way. I always hate to have things on my mind when they can be disposed of as well as not."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Mr. Robert Thompson, traveller, of Toronto, spent Dominion Day with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. J. N. Thompson of Sturgeon Street.

Decoration Day was observed at the Emily Presbyterian Cemetery on the afternoon of June 30th. There was a splendid attendance and besides the floral decorating of the plots, there was some general fixing up done. The Improvement Committee went over the work of the past year, the report showing increased financial assistance from previous years. A committee was appointed for the ensuing year, and it is to be hoped that their efforts will be crowned with still greater results in this commendable work.

Mr. Frank Ford is holidaying at his home in Omemee.

A very quiet wedding was celebrated on the afternoon of June 30th when Miss Nellie Hurd was united in the holy bonds of wedlock to Mr. Andrew Irwin, both of Omemee. Congratulations to the young benedicts, who will reside near Omemee.

On Thursday afternoon, Rev. J. W. Down, the newly appointed pastor of the Methodist Church, with his wife and family, arrived in town and have taken up residence in the parsonage. They were welcomed by many members of the church.

There was no celebration in Omemee on Dominion Day except for the flying of a few flags and the diminished efforts of business, one would scarcely realize that our national holiday was on. Our baseball team attended a picnic at Reaboro and crossed bats with the team of that village with an overwhelming result in favour of Reaboro. The reasons given for such a weak showing were that the victorious team was composed of a part that did not reside in Reaboro. However that may be, wo say, "Cheer up boys and at them again."

Dr. W. H. Kennedy, veterinary surgeon, has taken up residence in Mr. M. H. Kennedy's residence on King Street, two doors west of Coronation Hall.

The official result of the recent provincial election in South Victoria gives Mr. John Carew a majority of 700.

Mr. Elgin Thompson, after having written on the Middle School Entrance to Normal exams, has left town for his vacation.

MOTION TO REJECT HOME RULE AMENDMENT FAILS

Lord Willoughby de Broke's Supporters In House of Lords Are Snowed Under by Unionist Peers, Who Plan to Amend Measure In Committee---Crewe Urges Conference of Leaders.

LONDON, July 7.—The House of Lords yesterday passed by 273 to 10 the second reading of the bill to amend the Irish Home Rule bill.

That the House of Lords would pass the bill in order to amend it in committee, was a foregone conclusion, but there was surprise that only ten "die-hards" could be found to vote for Lord Willoughby de Broke's motion for its rejection.

The Marquis of Crewe, in winding up the debate for the Government, challenged the Opposition to guarantee that there would be no civil war in Ireland, even if the bill was amended totally excluding Ulster. Concerning the possibility of a solution by conference, if dropping the amending bill and breaking down the Government's policy was to be a preliminary, it would be impossible for the Government to accept it, but, short of entailing such a sacrifice, the Government was most anxious to facilitate a conference, he said.

For himself, he did not hesitate to say that if John Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Uninoist leader; William O'Brien and two or three other Irishmen, could get together it would be a better augury for some permanent arrangement than any other kind of a conference.

After division was taken, notice of several amendments was handed in providing for the exclusion from Home Rule of the whole of Ulster.

These amendments, if carried, will make the exclusion of the whole Province of Ulster absolute, without any referendum and election, and the excluded province will be placed under the jurisdiction of the new Secretary of State in the Imperial Parliament, whose administrative orders would require the sanction of the British Parliament.

BASS FRY IN STURGEON AND PIGEON LAKES

About two weeks ago the Department of Game and Fisheries, through the influence of Col. Hughes, deposited 25,000 bass fry in Sturgeon Lake and the same quantity in Pigeon Lake.

These lakes were greatly in need of this, as the supply of bass was getting very limited. The fish-loving people of Lindsay will be very grateful to Col. Hughes for this timely work, as the fishing of these two lakes attract a large number of people during the summer months.—Lindsay Warder.

Chas. Lawrence Made Bad Mistake at His Hotel

MOTORIST IS FINED

Misdirected Salutation Cost Wm. McGill $5.75

The cook and Chas. Lawrence failed to agree and the latter found himself in the prisoners' dock at Police Court this morning, before Magistrate Dumble charged with being drunk and disorderly. He was fined $10. Last evening Lawrence who boards at the Palace Hotel started out to look for the cook. She met him and handed Charles the cold shoulder, with the result that he landed into an altercation with the proprietor of the house and was put out into the cold world. Lawrence then smashed a heavy plate glass window with his fist but failed to notice that Constable Reid was standing beside him at the time.

"We can't afford to have our bylaws broken by reckless motorists crushing the lives out of our residents and being a general nuisance to the public by endangering their lives with their machines," said Magistrate Dumble, to W. W. Theobald, a local motorist, found guilty of the charge of driving his auto faster than ten miles an hour. He was fined $20 and costs. Constable Dainard gave evidence that Theobald was driving over twenty miles an hour when he passed the corner of George and Charlotte Streets.

William McGill having celebrated unwisely said "Good evening," to two ladies, he thought he knew and he was arrested charged with being drunk and disorderly. He was fined $5.75.

"PEBLO"

THE GLASS OF QUALITY

When we took the exclusive right to manufacture and fit "PEBLO" Lenses, we believed our patrons would appreciate having their eyeglasses fitted with this superior quality lens, and after two years' exclusive use of "PEBLO" Lenses, we are well satisfied with the result, judging by the hundreds of satisfied customers whom we have fitted with these beautiful lenses.

It is interesting to know that in spite of the expense of procuring "PEBLO" Lenses, the prices to our patrons are no more than when we used other makes of lenses, this being due to the large quantity we buy at a time. Remember we manufacture these "PEBLO" Lenses from the uncut Peblo Glass, in our own Lens Grinding Department. We can duplicate any kind of lens while you wait, and all our work is guaranteed.

FULL PROSPERITY AT HIGH PRESSURE

The Wishes of Waterworks Employes to Retiring Superintendent

The regret of the employes of the Water Works Department occasioned by the resignation of the superintendent, Mr. A. G. Fawcett, was plainly demonstrated last night in Coleman's Grill Room, when they held a banquet at which Mr. Fawcett was the guest of honor. After all the delicacies were enjoyed, Mr. E. Massey Cooke, the assistant engineer, arose and read the following address:

Mr. A. G. Fawcett, A.M.I.C.E.,
Superintending Engineer of the Peterborough Water Works.

We, the undersigned, ask you to accept the accompanying suitcase as a mark of the appreciation and esteem in which we have held you for the past three years that you have been Superintendent of our Department.

Much as we regret your departure, we have, nevertheless, the satisfaction of knowing that you do so to accept a more responsible and highly remunerative position than that which you have held.

Wishing you every success and hoping that a full and steady stream of prosperity, under high pressure, may flow your way in your new life.

(Signed) E. Massey Cooke, David Oliver, J. Meharry, J. Curran, E. Park, B. Robertson, T. Scott, M. Wainwright, G. Gist.

Mr. Cooke also presented the ebony fitted suitcase and the address, which was illuminated.

It was with difficulty that Mr. Fawcett could frame sentences with which to thank the gentlemen for their kind wishes. As he proceeded, he spoke enthusiastically of the cooperation that had always prevailed and it was straining a tender cord for him to sever his connections with such a fine company of men.

He would have remembered the city of Peterborough because of the way the employes treated him if they had let him depart quietly, but this protestation of esteem and friendship would make an indelible mark for them that could never be erased. In conclusion he assured them that if ever he could have them with him on any work, he would, no matter how many rounds it would put him to.

The remainder of the evening was spent in a sociable manner, and about 11 o'clock the gathering dispersed. Those present were: Messrs. Fawcett, Cooke, R. Dobbin, the new superintendent, J. Meharry, E. Park, B. Robertson, G. Grist, W. Hunt, and representatives of the press.

WASHBURN'S BIG SHOWS PROVED A RARE TREAT FOR ALL WHO ATTENDED

It is seldom that a travelling carnival organization not only fulfills all its promises as regards a meritorious exhibition, but is absolutely free from undesirable "followers," intoxicated attaches, suggestive shows or rowdyism. The Washburn Carnival, which opened its week's engagement last night at the Exhibition Grounds has placed the "show business' in a new and more favorable light before the citizens of Peterboro, who from past experience with undesirable travelling exhibitions have become, naturally, more or less prejudiced. The Washburn Carnival is absolutely "clean" in every detail; the promises of the advance men were verified by the Rveiew's representative who visited the grounds last night. There are no "tough" looking women; no boisterous men; no profanity; no "dancing" girl shows nor "hootchee kootchie" exhibitions; no rowdyism. Every show visited by our representative gave exactly what it advertised, and some, particularly the Wild Animal Arena and the "motordrome" presented the best entertainment of their kind yet seen in our city.

Of course Mr. Washburn's own show, the Wild Beast Arena, is the central feature about which are grouped the other units of the carnival. Mlle. Flora, the "lion-queen," gave a thrilling exhibition with a group of turbulent Numidian lions; Princess Pauline presented a daring act with a pack of snarling leopards and jaguars; Herbentino and his black-maned African lions, including one big maneless Asiatic lion, and Capt. Vincent with a group of bears of various species, presented an hour's performance of exceptional merit. The two baby lions came in for a full share of attraction, resembling animated Teddy Bears in appearance, and emitting treble roars in ludicrous imitation of their ferocious parents.

The Motordrome, as an exhibition of cool-headed skill and daring, is amply worth seeing. Three motorcyclists drive their machines around a perpendicular-rimmed cup 60 feet across at terrific speed; one of the riders even stands erect on his saddle and the performance is terminated by the three in a race wherein a speed of 80 miles an hour is attained. At their highest speed the machines and riders are absolutely horizontal at right angles to the perpendicular track.

The athletic show, with John Kilomis the Greek champion wrestler and his troupe of athletics; D'Alma's Hippodrome with its trained dogs, ponies and monkeys and comical clown; the "Freak Show" with the ossified man, living skeleton, electric lady, snake charmer, leopard boy and Philippine head-hunter (who is the "real thing," and not a "dressed up negro) the Barrel of Fun, Trip to the Moon and other shows were well attended and pleased. To sum up: Mr. Washburn has by all odds the best, neatest carnival ever in Peterboro. His people are all ladies and gentlemen of refinement; there are absolutely no objectionable features, no drunkenness nor gambling of any sort, and he will undoubtedly be encouraged in his effort to give a clean entertainment by the substantial patronage of the citizens of Peterboro.

Miss Elma Meier, a young lady 17 years of age and a thorough aquatic expert, gave a sensational dive from a 75 foot ladder into a tank containing only 4 feet of water, at 10.30 o'clock. This will be repeated at 4.00 and 11.00 p.m. daily during the week.

BIG TIME AT SANDY POINT

Y. M. C. A. Boys Are Enjoying Life

Sandy Point, July 4.— On Wednesday afternoon the boys, numbering thirty, enjoyed a delightful hike to several points of interest and old familiar haunts. One of the features of the hike was that General Secretary Meserve secured three valuable collie pups as mascots for the camp. Wednesday evening about twenty of the boys' parents visited the camp and enjoyed a few delightful hours of camp life.

On Friday an extensive field day was run off for both senior and junior members of the camp. Reuben Head won first, with A. Pringle second in the senior events. "Busy" Thorndyke captured first in the junior events, with Meserve second. The events were closely contested and keenly enjoyed by the participants.

On Saturday evening Physical Director Carson arrived in the camp and will commence to carry on special life-saving work and give instructions in the art of swimming.

Sunday was one day of rest. Service was held on Sunday morning at Juniper. Mr. Stock towed the large war canoe with the thirty boys to the island for the service, which was enjoyed by the members of the camp and a large number of cottagers was present.

Strolls and rests featured the afternoon's work on Sunday. A most attractive program has been outlined for this week's camp, in which several new features will be introduced for the first time at Y. Camp. The camp will break up on Friday afternoon.

Water melon treats featured the evening entertainment, due to the kindness of Mr. Arthur Johnston, of this city. Mr. Brock, Mr. Stubbs and Mr. Middleton have greatly assisted in making the camp enjoyable with their motor boats and water melons.

REPAIRS TO ORGAN

Successful Meeting at St. John's

The vestry meeting at St. John's school house, last night, was largely attended, when the making of certain improvements was considered. Much interest was displayed in the proceedings. The sense of the meeting was against providing for necessary improvements by mortgage. It was determined to make temporary repairs if possible to the organ and inaugurate a fund for its rebuilding and to secure subscriptions for these and other objects. At the conclusion of the meeting, over $500 was subscribed, three gentlemen each giving $100.

Engineers Urged To Take All Precaution

The Grand Trunk Railway have decided on an extension of their policy of putting the lives of passengers before speed and time. A new set of instructions has been prepared, and will be sent to every man connected with the running of their trains in Canada.

Engineers are urged in the manifesto to live up to the rules of the company. They are prohibited from speeding the train to try to keep it up to time, if for some natural causes it has gone a little behind time. Engineers are also requested to watch and report and defects they notice in passing on tracks, bridges or signal appliances.

CHAMBERLAIN LAID AT REST

Thousands Line Route of Funeral In Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM, July 7. — Joseph Chamberlain, the Unionist leader, who for many years occupied a prominent position in British politics, was buried yesterday in Hockley Cemetery, which is situated in the constituency he represented in the House of Commons for so many years.

Previous to the burial a memorial service was held in the Church of the Messiah, which was attended by the Lord Mayor of Birmingham, the members of the City Council and other civic dignitaries.

Apart from the civic element the mourners at both the church and the cemetery consisted solely of members of the Chamberlain family, as the late statesman had expressed the desire that his funeral should be free from everything of a public nature.

Nothing could, however, prevent a great crowd of the citizens of Birmingham, among whom Joseph Chamberlain was a popular hero, from lining the route along which the funeral passed.

As the procession passed the men reverently uncovered.

Hockley cemetery was thrown open last evening, and for several hours a procession made up of many thousands passed in front of Hon. Joseph Chamberlain's grave, paying reverential tribute. The grave was covered with magnificent wreaths.

Services In London.

LONDON, July 7.—Simultaneously with the burial in Birmingham memorial services for the late Joseph Chamberlain were held in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. Premier Asquith, the members of his Cabinet, many of the late Mr. Chamberlain's colleagues in the House of Commons, members of the House of Lords and of the foreign diplomatic corps, together with a large number of persons prominent in the official and social life of the capital, attended.

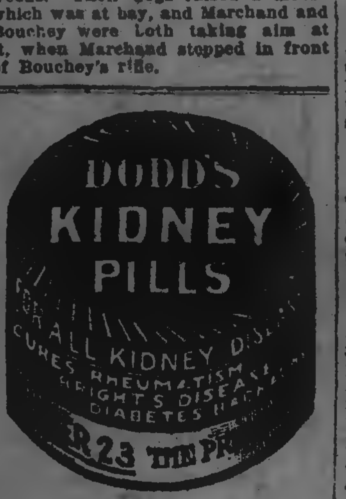
A service also was held in the Church of St. Lawrence, Jewry, which adjoins the Guildhall of the City of London, and in which parish the late statesman's ancestors lived for many years.

Son to Run For Vacant Seat.

LONDON, July 7. — J. Austen Chamberlain has decided to resign his seat in Parliament to-day in order to seek re-election in his late father's Birmingham constituency. Mr. Chamberlain now sits for the Bromsgrove division of Worcestershire.

Shot Man, Not Moose.

NORTH BAY, July 7—Albert Marchand, of Griffith, Ont., was shot dead near Hearst by a companion named Bouchey, of Romford. The two were members of a party of land prospectors, who had been out three weeks. Their dogs raised a moose which was at bay, and Marchand and Bouchey were both taking aim at it, when Marchand stepped in front of Bouchey's rifle.



SUFFRAGETTES

Royalty Bombarded With Literature

EDINBURGH, July 7.—The suffragettes took advantage of the visit of King George and Queen Mary here yesterday to prepare the usual suffragette demonstration, in which the bombardment of the royal couple with suffragette literature was the feature.

Two women obtained possession of a balcony in a house opposite the station, and as the royal carriage emerged they threw down upon it a lot of suffragette appeals. Then two detectives seized them, spoiling their aim. Some of the handbills fluttered into the street and the royal carriage passed over them.

The King, looking up, saw the women struggling in the arms of the officers. They were removed to the police station, the crowd along the way giving them a mixed reception of cheers, mingled with hooting.

The women gave the names of Lock and Owen. Among their missiles was a paper ball containing a message: "To show King George that women are being persecuted for defending their freedom."

Petition Premier.

LONDON, July 7.—Rev. Reginald J. Campbell, pastor of the City Temple; Rev. R. F. Horton, pastor of Lyndhurst Road Church, Hampstead; Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, and several other prominent non-conformist ministers, have sent a letter to Premier Asquith appealing to him to put a stop to the forcible feeding of suffragette prisoners.

The writers declare that the employment of forcible feeding is barbarous, cruel and disgusting and that, regarded as a deterrent, it has proved futile.

HOME RULE FOR FILIPINOS

WASHINGTON, July 7.—President Wilson and House leaders have agreed substantially on a bill granting a larger measure of self-government to the Filipinos. The President told callers yesterday that he approved the bill introduced by Representative Jones of Virginia and modified by the House insular affairs committee, but made it clear that he did not expect the bill to be passed by both Houses during the present session.

Death Due to Reckless Driving.

NORTH BAY, July 7.—A coroner's jury, inquiring into the death of Miss Morrisette of Mattawa, who died of injuries after an auto, owned and driven by David Morland, upset, found that her death was caused by reckless driving. The other occupants of the car were unable to appear, but witnesses told of seeing the car speeding before the accident.

Body Recovered.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., July 7.—The body of William Burtt, who was drowned in the sinking of a big dredge off Dalhousie several days ago, has been recovered.

J. Wallace Nesbitt Dead.

HAMILTON, July 7. — J. Wallace Nesbitt, of the firm of Nesbitt, Gauld, Lange & Cresswaithe, died early yesterday morning after a long illness. He was a brother of Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., of Toronto, and H. W. Nesbitt, M.P., of Woodstock. He was one of the most distinguished barrister in Canada, and in his early days a noted criminal lawyer.

DIAMOND MEN ARE INDICTED

Charged With Smuggling Jewels Into U. S.

NEW YORK, July 7.—Herman J. Dietz, of New York, a diamond merchant, and his son Charles, were indicted yesterday by a Federal grand jury here on 11 counts, as participants in an alleged conspiracy to smuggle diamonds into the United State. Diamonds valued at from $300,000 to $500,000 were smuggled from Canada in 1911 and 1912. Assistant U. S. District Attorney R. A. Wood stated last night. Government customs and secret service agents have been at work on the case for a year.

The indictment charges the accused with smuggling stones worth upwards of $100,000 between Feb. 13, 1911, and April 1, 1912. Attempts of the accused to sell smuggled stones in this city are specified. Bench warrants will be issued for their arrest, it was announced last night. It is understood that they are now in Europe.

Mr. Silliman, who is returning to Saltillo as the representatives of the United States, at the headquarters of Gen. Carranza, made this statement here late yesterday, before continuing his journey.

The Presbyterian Garden Party of Monday evening was held on the church lawn. The weather was ideal and a large crowd took advantage of the good tea and entertainment for one price of admission. The Musical Eckhardts or Bell Ringers gave a high class clean and at times humorous program that was universally admired and complimented. The receipts amounted to about $110.

Early Friday morning of last week death invaded the home of Mr. John McCrea, and called away to rest his beloved wife, Elizabeth Roberts. She had been in delicate health for some time. Her last hours were periods of careful nursing, and of the highest medical attention. The funeral was held on Saturday afternoon and was attended by a large number of friends from Toronto, Cobourg and other parts. The Rev. Robt. McCulloch conducted the service at the house. He was assisted by Rev. Dr. Shorey of Lindsay and Rev. J. W. Down of town. The pall bearers were scions of the most representative families of the town. The floral designs occupied a double carriage and were most beautiful. Interment took place at Emily Cemetery. Sincerest condolences are extended to all the sorrow stricken relatives in their hour of bereavement.

Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Jamieson of Mount Pleasant called on Omemee friends on Friday evening.

Curious Street Names.

Now that the London County Council has sanctioned the transformation of Periwinkle Street into Ratcliffe Cross Street, the inhabitants of some other oddly-named thoroughfares in the metropolis—such as Beer Lane, Pickle Herring Street, Shoulder of Mutton Alley, Hot Water Court, and Tiger Bay — may be encouraged to agitate for a new name.

There was a time when London possessed a far wider collection of cacophonous thoroughfares than is now the case. King Edward Street, the site of the new General Postoffice, was for centuries known as Stinking Lane. Crackbrain Court and Cutthroat Lane were in Whitechapel, Dead Man's Place adjoined Dirty Lane in Southwark. Hangman's Gains stood near the Tower, and there was a Bandyleg Alley off Fleet Street. Breakneck Court, opposite the Old Bailey, where Goldsmith lived when he first settled in London, has also disappeared.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Trick With a Bottle.

This trick seems almost impossible, but you can do it. Tie a piece of twine securely around the neck of a bottle, then lay a match on the cork, hold it firmly, bring the ends of the twine up over it and tie a tight knot, forming a loop.

You may remove the match to show that you have simply tied a loop. Then insert the match through the loop, rest one end on the cork and lay the other on the projecting edge of the table, when the bottle will swing clear of any obstruction.

Conundrums.

What always weighs the same whether it is large or small? A hole.

Which is the only tool that grows sharper with use? The tongue.

Where is the best place to have a boil? On the other fellow.

When is it proper to swear? When you are put under oath.

What workman never gets excited in a political campaign? A carpenter, because he keeps his spirits level.

Barnum was asked what show be thought he had of getting into heaven. He answered, "The greatest show on earth."

BIG BOB WAS IN GOOD FORM

Twirled the Petes to a 5-1 Victory Over Erie--Locals Helped With the Bat and Fast Work On the Paths.

"Admiral Perry must have used better judgment in 1813 than the Erie Sailors did yesterday," remarked one fan. "Nix on it, Cully. Admiral Perry didn't have to face the powder of Bob Sterling," came back a reply from one of the fans.. And although we know little of Admiral Perry and his little flagship, except that he won a two-tub battle in the shallowest lake of the great chain, while his colleagues were being badly beaten on land, we know this much—Bob Sterling was like General Brock, he was sort of unassembled at the start, but after that, well, the Erie Yankees were like kids in his arms. Rightly speaking, Curly Blount's Petes won, 5-1.

Aside from the historical stuff, the battle was one of the finest, if not the best, shown on the local lot this year. The Review wants to see Curly and his men win every game, but even if they had been on the short end yesterday, no one could have said the game was "rotten," an expression used by some strongly when the home club loses. You have got to raise your latest "kelly" to Bob Sterling. The big fellow, outside of the first spasm, worked like a clock.. It was far from the "alarm" variety, as he had the Erie crew tucked under the covers for keeps.. Bob had everything.

That Deceptive Drop.

His drop broke like a glass on a tile floor and he had it breaking for him. He displayed masterly control for a man who uses up so much smoke. In a word, Bob Sterling had it on Erie in eight of the frames, and that is sufficient.

There is a fellow named Welsh who can play ball and can hit the invention if he chooses. Yesterday he had a great day and poked the pill for three timely clouts, one of his hits being accountable for the run that broke the ice. Then there was Frank Kelly. Frank was beaned so viciously on one occasion that it was thought a derrick would be required to raise him, but, like all Irishmen, he came back without the application of water-stimulants. Kelly slapped out a triple, only to fall over the bag and be tagged out, but he came back and slapped a single through short. Outside of that we were all right, as others too numerous to mention poked it, and the team played errorless ball. One of the features of the game was Manager Blount's steal of second, his quick rise off the sack and continued journey to third when the pill went a little wild. That play resulted in a run. Another was Blount's fadeaway to the plate when he and Stewart operated a double theft in the first innings. It was as neat a slide as has been pulled this season.

For the enemy, Morse hurled nice ball and looked good enough to win the majority of games, but a few errors in the battle made it look bad. The score should have been about three to one, but it was a grand game regardless of the Erie boots, one of which counted. Dawson for the visitors had three neat clouts, while Carney behind the pan looked like a good catcher, although two errors are charged against him. On the other hand he is a dangerous man to pitch to.

If the game had been devoid of errors on both sides the Petes would have won, because Sterling had the better of the argument and the Petes sacrificed and swiped a base at the right moment.

How We Got 'Em.

The Petes got one in the first. Blount had three and two on him when he singled. He was sacrificed along by Welsh and then Dolan went out. Stewart worked his way on via the pass route, and he and Curly manipulated a double robbery and Curly scored. In the fifth Kelly doubled and was out trying to stretch it into a triple. "Kell" made it nicely, but slipped off the bag and was out. Blount was safe on an error, and he stole second on the first ball and took third on the bad throw. He scored a moment later when Welsh "expressed" one through second. In the seventh Kelly poked one to right centre and stole second. He scored when Welsh poked out another sizzling safety to right. Stewart singled to start it in the eigthth, and Byrne laid down a sacrifice and was safe on the catcher's wild heave, and "Dad" scored. Frank Fox came through with a Texas leaguer and Joe Byrne slipped over.

In the first Erie got one. Dawson laid one to right for two sacks and went to third on Scott's grounder to first. Dawson scored on Gygli's sacrifice to right. After two were out in the eighth the Sailors got two on by hits, but Colligan was easy.

During the game Colligan displayed a great arm on a throw which got Welsh at the plate. As a matter of fact the duo of Colligan and Dawson are men hard to beat to the plate on a fling in.

FIGHT WAS A SQUARE AFFAIR

So Says Tom Flanagan of Johnson-Moran Battle

"Moran is the greatest glutton for punishment I ever saw. Johnson's best blows failed to make any impression on him, and if there was ever an 'iron man' he is the one," said Tom Flanagan, the Toronto boxing impressario, who returned home this afternoon from Paris, where he was in the champion's corner at the recent fight. Flanagan denounces as utter rot the story that Johnson allowed Moran to stay the limit because of the moving pictures. "Johnson fought a marvelous fight. He had Moran virtually out in the fourth, eighth and eleventh rounds, but he recuperated wonderfully between rounds, and always came back for more. His defence was good, and Johnson all but broke his hands on him, but he could not land the finishing punch. Johnson was in great shape, and excepting in the first round, when Moran put over a right hand swing on his jaw, was never in trouble."—Toronto News.

COMMENT

As You Like It

THE GAME between Erie and Peterboro on Wednesday will commence at 2 o'clock. The last time Erie was here the game was called at the same time in order that the Sailors could hit their home town in ample time for Thursday's game. The same concession has been granted again Strictly abiding by the rules the Peterboro directors could call the game at 3.45 but they are willing to sacrifice money for the sake of sport. If the game was called late, the Erie team would land home in time to change and romp on the field. Erie knockers fo Canadian League methods kindly take notice. One paper that must be congratulated for its unbiased and sportsmanlike stand in the matter so far as Erie is concerned is the Erie Dispatch. The paper, regardless of its sporting columns, looks like a live ace to us. The Dispatch may be called the counsel for the "defense" and a darn good defense it is at that.

St. Thomas Times: Much comment is being made about the transfer of Joe Dunn from the Erie club to the London team. Dunn is too good a player for Erie to let go so easily without some good reason, and many consider the reason is here: Both Erie and London teams are owned by Londoners. It looks very frisky and many are remarking on it.

Not only about this transfer, but also about London winning so easily from Erie, by Erie's errors, while Erie, as a rule, against other teams, plays the best of ball. It certainly looks bad, and many consider that if Erie finds they have no chance of winning the pennant themselves they will lay down to London and lose to them, and may also transfer other players as they did Dunn.

The above charges although serious if true, can hardly be true, in the opinion of the Review. It is very hard to even imagine that such a good sport as George O'Neil would bo a member of such a compact as the St. Thomas Times says exists. Joe Dunn was sold or given to London. Of that there is no doubt. But look at the case fairly. With Colligan, who has a magnificent arm, Dawson, who is a fine player, and Kelly Harris, the league's leading slugger, Erie had no room for Joe Dunn in its outfield. And then Jawn Shaeffer, the league's leading hitter last year, will be back in the game soon, and Jawn will crowd one of the present outfield off the line up. If Shaeffer had Colligan's whip, he would be in the International League. With Carney and McNeil as catchers, Joe Dunn was not missed, and in our opinion the St. Thomas Times is suffering from a bad attack of too much stogie.

Hamilton Herald: Those are rather nasty charges being hurled against the Erie club and its relation to London. The St. Thomas Times sport writer hints that public opinion is that Erie is helping the Cockneys to a pennant. Probably while Joe Dunn is one of the best outfielders in the Canadian League, he was not looked upon with favor by the "educated" Erie fans, who do not take kindly to the Canadian league or anything Canadian.

The Petes displayed all sorts of baseball yesterday. The game was snappy all the way, and only one bad innings on the part of Erie partially marred the day. Chester King had a great day at second, and there are none better in the league than the local man. Joe Byrne also displayed pep, while Frank Fox had only one chance and handled it perfectly. Dolan at first loomed up as a nice player with a noodle. Kelly had a big day behind the pan, and although he was beaned he came right back and smote the leather with a vengeance. Welsh is keeping up his hitting and proved himself a valuable man. Blount's work was very telling, and he proved himself one of the best run getters in the league. When Curley gets on it takes a whole lot to stop him. Above all, Bob Sterling twirled a grand game and the fans were tickled to see the big fellow win, as he has been running into some tough luck this year.

Hamilton is going great. Jack White has his boys playing ball, and if that crew of Hams wants to play ball watch out for them. They looked good down here, but did not seem to take the games seriously enough. Fight is more than seventy-five per cent. of any game, even the game of life. We still contend that the box of smokes which was wagered on the chance of the Petes finishing higher up than the Hams will be puffed in Peterboro.

"You need a whole new team, Shag" shouted Bobby Heck from the London dressing room.

"Four pitchers, a first baseman, a second baseman and a catcher, put in Cy Reidy, "You might have a chance to catch us then Frank."

"And a little more brain food," shot in Louie Bierbauer. "Too much ivory Shag."

"Well, I guess we can get them all right," shot back the Ottawa manager. "We landed them last year in time to beat you out."

"Get a new manager while you're at it," interrupted a voice from the shower bath.

"This manager will stick," retorted Shaughnessy. "I guess he will be ahead of you again when the season ends. Don't blow about your work in the last couple of games. Freeman handed you one and we made you presents of the other two."—Ottawa Citizen.

ALL SAINTS' CHOIR HAD FINE MOONLIGHT

The first annual moonlight under the auspices of All Saints' Church Choir was held last evening per steamer Stoney Lake, and was patronized by a large number of the congregation and their friends. The boat left the Wharf just after 8 p.m. and proceeded slowly across the lake in the twilight of a most glorious evening. The Maple Leaf Band had been engaged and discoursed sweet music to the pleasure of all on board. Then the moon came out in all its glory, and with the searchlight playing on the smaller craft dotted here and there, presented a view of the river in all its beauty. Dancing was indulged in by the young people and songs and choruses sung by lusty voices and appreciated by a number who had gathered below. Refreshments were served and the return journey was made about 11 p.m., all being well satisfied with their delightful trip. The Captain and his crew left nothing to be desired in their courtesy to all on board.

Some cooks always add a piece of bread crust tied in cheesecloth to the kettle when cabbage or cauliflower is boiled. This, they say, will absorb the odor.

MORGANATIC

From the Buffalo News.

All the accounts of the Archduke Ferdinand, who has just been murdered in Bosnia, speaks of his wife as his "morganatic" consort, and the term is regarded in this country usually as indicating an irregular marriage connection, but that is because in America a marriage is regarded as a marriage without any limitation, whereas in parts of Europe there are distinctions.

The morganatic marriage merely bars the wife from precedence that would be due her husband according to his rank, and it debars the children from succession to political honors. That is about all.

Ferdinand married the woman of his choice and his devotion to her has been the talk of Europe ever since the wedding occurred. She was recognized as a member of one of the foremost families in Hungary and under the dual arrangement of the monarchy would be entitled to assume the position and function of queen of Hungary when her husband succeeded to the throne as king on the death of the present king, Francis Joseph, for the Austrian emperor is king in Hungary and not emperor.

In many an instance, since an heir to a throne is unable to marry in accordance with his own wishes, because of subjection under the law to the will of the monarch of the country, it often happens that one marries morganatically in order to marry at all in accordance with the dictates of his heart, and that is really all that is meant by the term "morganatic wife." She can no more be divorced than any other wife can. She is entitled in the eye of the law and of the church to every consideration as a wife except certain social ones and right of inheritance for her children.

This explanation is due, so that there may be a better understanding in this country of ours, where women are so profoundly respected, of her situation in Europe owing to dynastic conventions that have grown up in the course of centuries and are clung to with the tenacity of those who are devoted to that system of government.

AUTHORITIES ARE UPHELD

Order Excluding the Hindus Is Valid

VANCOUNVER, July 7.—The immigration authorities won before the Court of Appeal on the Hunai Singh test case, covering the Komagata Maru passengers.

The court yesterday unanimously upheld the validity of the Dominion order-in-council respecting the prohibition of the entry of an alien not direct from land of birth, not having $200 and being a laborer. The officials acted under these orders-in-council and can, therefore, proceed to deport all the rest of the Komagata Maru passengers who fall in the same category. It is not known yet if the Hindus will appeal.

The Komagata Maru gang will not permit the five marooned Hindus to get back on the vessel. The Japanese captain took up the Japanese consul on a rope ladder yesterday, and the consul gave an ultimatum to two o'clock. It is proposed to play a steam jet on the Hindus from a neighboring vessel if they resist efforts to place the five back on the boat.

WILL OBSERVE SUN'S ECLIPSE AT KIEV, RUSSIA

San Francisco, July 7.—In a few days the Crocker Eclipse Expedition will set off for Russia, from the Lick Observatory of the University of California. This well-equipped expedition which is to observe, near Kiev, Russia, on August 21, the total eclipse of the sun, has been provided for by a gift of $5,800 by Mr. William H. Crocker, of San Francisco, a regent of the University of California. The Crocker Eclipse Expedition will be in charge of Director W. W. Campbell, of the Lick Observatory, and Astronomer Heber D. Curtis will be his associate. The instruments and supplies will be shipped from Mount Hamilton about June 12 and the observers will start about June 10.

The eclipse occurs on the afternoon of August 21. The noon, passing between the sun and the earth, will cast a shadow upon the earth some eighty miles in diameter, which will advance continuously across the hemisphere of the earth, turned toward the sun. The shadow path will begin at sunrise in the Arctic Ocean, just off the northern coastline of British Columbia, in longitude 121 deg. It will pass easterly across Greenland and thence southerly over Norway, Sweden, Russia, the Black Sea, and Persia, ending at sunset in northwestern India. Theoretically, the observer could station himself at any point on this line. Practically, he selects a point where the sun has a high altitude at the instant of eclipse, where the weather conditions, as indicated by observations in preceding years, are promising, and where the instruments and observers can be transported with reasonable economy. The factor of high solar altitude limits the choice in the present case to Norway, Sweden, and Russia. The weather observations of the past indicate definitely that the chances for clear sky improve as one passes from Norway to the Black Sea. The conditions are rather unpromising in Norway and Sweden and very favorable in the southern half of Russia.

ESTABLISHED 1879. PETERBOROUGH, ONT., THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1914 PRICE 2 CENTS

"DAVID S. K. BYRNE" IS HEARD FROM AGAIN

Has Procured Proof Necessary to Identify Him as Person Named In Will.

Montreal, July 9.—The heir to two and a half million dollars left to him in gratitude for rescuing the daughter of a millionaire from a Chicago dive six years ago, David S. K. Bryne, formerly David S. Kidd, of 355 Bloomfield avenue, has now procured the proofs necessary to identify him as the person named in the late Mr. Byrne's will. Mr. Kidd was left the fortune on condition that he should change his name to that of the testator.

The will must be proved in 34 months, this time being allowed in order that a sworn list of the estate, which is valued at nine million dollars may be compiled, but Mr. D. S. Bryne has had a difficult task in establishing his identity to the satisfaction of the law, which requires proofs of his parents' marriage and his birth. No records being available, proof of the marriage was obtained from one of the bridesmaids living at Cobourg; a hundred signatures from persons who knew Mr. Byrne in his childhood were also necessary.

The establishing of the identity of the many beneficiaries has been a difficult task. Mr. Byrne, of this city, in order to prove his identity had to gather together proof of his parents' marriage and his birth. This was exceedingly difficult, owing to the fact that no records were kept in Ontario prior to 1869.

He got proof of the marriage and his birth from one of the bridesmaids, who resides in Cobourg. He had to get 100 signatures from the towns of Hamilton, Hope and Port, from persons who knew him in his childhood and proof of his past life and references from all his employers to prove that he was capable of managing a large institution. He also had to get, under the terms of the will, two photographs of the dive from where he rescued the daughter of Mr. Byrne in Chicago.

"Everything is now settled," said Mr. David S. K. Byrne, "and very soon I hope to hear of everything being settled in Australia."

Byrne is the man who was in Peterboro for some time. He told the story of his rescue of the girl at the Royal Theatre.

J. M. MUNYON IS GRANTED DIVORCE

Philadelphia, July 9.—James M. Munyon, of patent medicine fame, was granted a divorce from his wife, who before her marriage was known as Pauline Neff, a popular vaudeville comedienne. The action was started over a year ago on the ground of desertion.

At the time of their marriage in 1908 Munyon was about sixty and his bride twenty-four years old. Mrs. Munyon sued for divorce, charging cruelty and barbarous treatment in June, 1909. [illegible] months later a reconciliation was effected and Mrs. Munyon returned to her husband's home, and it was said that all was peace and happiness.

Later Mrs. Munyon returned to the stage and appeared in vaudeville. She is now engaged in moving-picture work in New York.

ABOLITION OF DEATH PENALTY

New Labor Parliament For Women Suffrage

London, July 9.—The Governor's speech at the opening of the New South Wales Parliament, says the Sydney correspondent of the Telegraph, contained the most comprehensive list of subjects ever presented to any Australian state parliament in recent years.

Two interesting proposals are for the abolition of the death penalty and the removal of the sex disability for representative institutions, including Parliament and the municipal governing boards. One notable feature is the absence of prominent planks in the Labor Party's platform, such as the abolition of the Legislative Council. The Government has a substantial majority in the assembly, although it is outnumbered in the Council. It is not believed that the Upper House will resist the vast majority of the measures.

KRAFCHENKO IS HANGED

Murderer of Bank Manager Pays Extreme Penalty

Canadian Press Despatch.

Winnipeg, July 9.—John Krafchenko was hanged at six minutes past seven this morning for the murder on December third last of H. M. Arnold, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Plum Coulee, Man. Incidents occurring since the commission of the crime which was sensational enough in itself, has combined to make Krafchenko's case, perhaps the most notorious in the criminal annals of Western Canada.

The Krafchenko case is one of the most sensational criminal cases in recent Canadian history. On December 3, 1913, in the middle of the day, Mr. H. M. Arnold, manager of the Plum Coulee branch of the Bank of Montreal, was murdered by a hold-up man robbing the bank. The murderer, disguised at the time, fled, and the evidence pointed to Krafchenko, who was found guilty by Chief Justice Mathers of Manitoba. Robert Reid, formerly of the Toronto Police Force, was sentenced to three years in penitentiary for conspiracy in attempting to bring about Krafchenko's escape. The prisoner's lawyer, Percy E. Hagel, was also convicted of conspiracy and received three years in Stony Mountain Penitentiary.

NOT AWARE OF FATE OF MEN

Commander of the Karluk Knows Nothing of Report

Canadian Press Despatch.

Nome, Alaska, July 9.—Captain Robert Bartlett, commander of Stefansson's ship Karluk, which was crushed in the ice and who is here waiting for an American revenue cutter to take him to Wrangel Island says he knows nothing of a report given out by the Government at Ottawa yesterday that eight members of the Karluk's crew had been lost attempting to cross on the ice to the mainland.

OTTAWA, July 9.—That at least eight officers and men of Stefansson's ship, the Karluk, who were along with the crew when they got safely on to the ice before she went down on Jan. 11 last had not reached Wrangel Island with the rest of the ship's company is revealed in a further report to the Department of Naval Service, received from Captain Robert Bartlett yesterday. The fate of these men, divided into two parties, was not known when Captain Bartlett left Wrangel Island for the Siberian coast in search of help for his marooned crew, but as they were well equipped, it was hoped they had succeeded in effecting a landing on Herald Island and would be picked up by the relief expedition this summer. He ordered a search party sent out for them.

The missing men are: First Officer Anderson, Second Officer Baker, Mackay, Murray and Benchot of the scientific staff, and Sailors Brady, King and Morris.

A letter from Captain Peterson gives a statement of the condition of Captain Bartlett, which that hardy mariner did not think it worth while to mention. Captain Peterson says that Captain Bartlett was in bad shape. On the long sledge journeys his hands and feet had been badly frozen, and he was suffering greatly. However, Bartlett has apparently recovered, for he is at Nome waiting for the American revenue cutter Bear to take him with supplies to Wrangel Island. When Captain Bartlett left Wrangel Island the thirteen men who remained were apparently in good shape. The fate of the others cannot be known until next autumn, as navigation will not open until August, and under the most favorable conditions word of the men will not reach civilization until September.

WIFE OF DOCTOR IS CHARGED WITH THE MURDER OF PATIENT

After Sensational Disclosures Regarding Secret 'Phone Which Mrs. Carman, of Freeport, N.Y., Put In Husband's Office to Hear Conversations, She Is Charged With Murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey.

FREEPORT, N.Y., July 9.—Florence Conklin Carman, wife of Dr. Edwin Carman, was arrested yesterday, accused as the mysterious assassin who a week ago Tuesday night, murdered Mrs. Louise Bailey, wife of a Hampstead manufacturer, by firing a bullet through her heart while she was standing in the physician's office. Last night Mrs. Carman, at whom the finger of suspicion has been pointing since the discovery was made that she had installed a telephonic instrument in her husband's office so that seh might hear what went on between him and his women patients, is locked up in Nassau County Jail at Mineola. There she will remain until Monday, when she will be taken out again and examined by the coroner, before whom she pleaded not guilty when arraigned yesterday, after her arrest in the room where Mrs. Bailey died.

Mrs. Carman's iron nerve is shattered, for as the steel-barred door of the Mineola Jail closed behind her she pulled her heavy veil from her face and broke down. Her husband and the sheriff, who took her in an automobile from her home here to the jail, assisted her to the top floor of the building.

The immediate cause of the arrest was the testimony given yesterday by Ellwood T. Hardes, an insurance agent, whom the authorities called the single reliable eye-witness to the crime. Bardes is under lock and key also. He is being detained as a material witness, for his story is of so great importance that the authorities said they feared an attempt might be made to get him out of the jurisdiction of the New York courts.

Bardes' story, briefly told, is this:

At seven o'clock on the night of the murder, Bardes said, he determined to pay a professional visit to Dr. Carman and allow him to dress a minor injury to one of his heels. He left his home and walked to the physician's house. Arriving, he decided he could dress the injury himself and thereby save a doctor's fee. So he walked past the house and then turned around to begin his journey home. At that instant he heard an explosion. He thought it was caused by an automobile tire, but when he looked for the machine, he could not find it. He turned his eyes toward the lawn at the side of Dr. Carman's home. A woman, tall, well built, hatless, wearing a light shirtwaist and a dark skirt, was moving away from one of the windows at the side of the physician's office toward the rear of the house. She was not running, not casually strolling around the lawn; she was walking "in a hurry," the witness said.

GREAT COMBINE FOR UNSKILLED LABOR IN ENGLAND

London, July 9.—The second of England's great labor combines came into existence today at Caxton Hall, Westminster, when a conference of representatives from the organization of unskilled workers approved a scheme whereby the General Laborer National Council and the National Transport Workers Federation, becomes closely joined in one great National Union.

The former body represents eight unions whose membership is made up from unskilled laborers, while the National Transport Workers' Federation has just completed an affiliation with the Coal Miners and Railwaymen's National Unions, greatly strengthening their prestige.

The purposes of the new amalgamation are set forth as increased co-operation on the part of the workers and a better mutual understanding between labor and capital. It is proposed to avoid by every possible means the conflicts between the two classes which have been in increasing frequency in late years.

Another point of vital importance to the Unions is that they now have a general membership of 400,000 members, and it is understood that a two shilling levy will soon be made, thus creating a fund of £40,000 for immediate and future liabilities. A minimum subscription of three pence per week is to furnish an annual income of over £250,000, and the establishment of a central fighting fund of £100,000 is in prospect. The Union also hopes to increase its memberships very largely.

JUDGMENT FOR $125 AND COSTS

R. J. Kidd Wins Action To Recover Commission

At a special sitting of the County Court today his Honor Judge Huycke gave judgment in the recent case of R. J. Kidd vs. Dr. Amys to recover the sum of $125 claimed to be due him on a real estate deal which embraced $5,000.00. It will be remembered Mr. Kidd claimed that he was to get a commission of 2½ per cent., which the defendant refused to pay on the grounds that he did not employ the plaintiff. Judge Huycke gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, allowing him $125 and costs.

O'Connell, counsel for the defendant is considering the advisability of appealing the case. G. N. Gordon acted for Mr. Kidd.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson Dies After Long Illness.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Dorchester, N.B., July 9.—Hon. H. R. Emmerson, premier of New Brunswick from 1898 until 1903 and Minister of Railways in the Laurier Cabinet from 1903 to 1907, died today after an illness of several weeks.

Hon. Henry Robert Emmerson, Barrister and Legislator, was the son of the Reverend R. H. Emmerson, a Baptist minister. He was born at Maugerville, N.B., on September 25th, 1853, and educated at Amherst Academy, Mount Allison Academy, St. Joseph's College, Memramcook, and at Acadia College.

He subsequently attended Boston University Law School, where he was Prize Essayist in 1866-67, and took the degree of LL.B. In 1877 he was admitted as an Attorney, was called to the bar the following year, and practised at Dorchester, N.B.

Mr. Emmerson was for some time Vice-President for New Brunswick of the Maritime Liberal Association.

In 1888 he entered public life as one of the representatives of Albert in the Provincial Assembly.

In March, 1891, he was appointed to the Legislative Council. He became a member of the Blair Administrative as President of the Executive Council, and in charge of Government business in the Legislative Council (March, 1892). On the abolition of the Legislative Council, the same year, he was appointed Chief Commissioner of Public Works, retaining also the position of President of the Executive Council, and obtained a seat in the Assembly by contesting the County of Albert. He unsuccessfully contested Westmoreland for the House of Commons in the general elections of 1887, and Albert in the elections of 1891. Just previous to the election of 1892 he was sworn in a member of the Cabinet, with the office of Minister of Public Works.

On the death of Mr. Mitchell he became Premier of New Brunswick (December, 1897), retaining the portfolio of Public Works.

He was elected for Albert County to the House of Assembly at the general elections of 1892, and re-elected at the general elections of 1895 and 1899. He resigned the Premiership on August 31st, 1900, and was elected to the House of Commons for Westmoreland at the general elections of 1900, and became Minister of Railways and Canals. In religion he was a Baptist, and was a Senator of Acadia University. In June, 1878, Mr. Emmerson married Miss Emily C., daughter of Mr. C. B. Record, iron-founder, of Moncton, N.B., who died a few years ago.

BOARD GRANTS THE REQUEST OF BARRIES LIMITED

When the Board of Works granted Barries Ltd. permission to erect an elevator on the street in front of his new store now being built on George Street, as he had no means of getting his goods in and out of the rear, Mr. Barrie assured them that if he could in any way secure a right of way at the back, he would not erect it. That right of way has been secured, and true to his word, Mr. Barrie abandoned the idea of the elevator on the main street, but he had a communication before the Board last night asking permission to insert six, four feet square, prism lights, in the pavement in front of the store, thus enabling him to light the basement, particularly that section which will be under the sidewalk.

Naturally considerable discussion arose during which it was pointed out that as the sidewalk was eleven feet wide, there would be seven feet left for persons who disliked walking on the glass, which is some times marked by possessing a quality decidedly opposite to adhesiveness in the winter season.

On motion of Ald. Johnston and Ald. Saunders, Mr. Barrie was given permission to install the lights, provided that the elevator be not erected at the front, and that the lights be placed next to the building. The motion carried.

QUEBEC BANDIT KILLS ANOTHER

Shot Cabman Who Drove Him Into Country.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Quebec, July 9.—Moraud, the bandit who killed a trainman and wounded a station agent, Saturday and later slightly wounded a constable, sent to arrest him has another murder to answer for. Last night dressed as a common laborer he engaged a cabman at Levis named Odinat Guay to drive him into the country. When a few miles out, Moraud fired four bullets into the body of Guay who fell from the wagon into the road and was picked up by labborers going to work several hours later. He died soon afterwards. An empty cab was picked up thirty miles distant in Dorchester County but there is no trace of Moraud.

LORDS VOTE TO LEAVE ULSTER OUT OF HOME RULE BILL ENTIRELY

Session In Committee Results In Proposal of Many Amendments—Marquis of Crewe Makes An Important Concession Regarding Official Detail of Dealing With Excluded Area.

LONDON, July 9.—The House of Lords on the first night in committee on the Government of Ireland (amending) bill made large changes in the measure, eliminating the time limit and providing that exclusion shall apply to Ulster as a province. The first alteration was adopted by a vote of 158 to 35.

An important concession was made by the Marquis of Crewe on the amendment moved by Viscount Middleton to the sub-section which provides that the power of the King in the excluded area shall be exercised by the Lord Lieutenant through such officers and departments as may be directed by orders in Council. Lord Middleton, having regard to the close relations which under Home Rule the Lord Lieutenant will have with the Dublin Parliament and Executive, proposed to substitute a Secretary of State for "the Lord Lieutenant" for the purposes of the sub-section. This in substance the Government accepted. It follows that so far as the excluded area is concerned the relations between Ulster and the Government in London will be of a direct character, and not via Dublin.

In accepting this on behalf of the Government the Marquis of Crewe said that whatever force there might be in the objection to the Lord Lieutenant exercising the dual function he did not think it would be wise to insist that the Minister responsible for the administration of Ulster should be a Secretary, which in place would mean the Home Secretary. He would not oppose the amendment. Other amendments were agreed to providing that the officers and departments through whom the civil government is administered in the excluded areas shall not be officers or departments exercising executive power under the Irish Government, and that all orders in Council relating to the excluded areas shall not have effect without the sanction of both Houses of Parliament in this country.

A number of consequential amendments were agreed to, including one reducing the number of Irish members at Westminster from the Home Rule area from 42 to 27.

The most animated discussion of the evening took place on Lord Macdonnell's scheme of "Home Rule within Home Rule." The proposal he put before the House was shortly stated that an Ulster Council should be constituted with administrative control within the province of education, local government, agriculture and technical education, and at the same time Ulster should be represented in the Dublin Parliament. Lord Crewe objected to this scheme as one which did not appeal to Ulstermen themselves. It was approved by Lord Loreburn and also by Lord Courtney. The latter made an impassioned appeal to Unionists to accept it. "We are in rather a mess now," he admitted, "owing to miscalculation on the part of the Government. They miscalculated the strength of the opposition that prevailed in Ulster."

LORD LANSDOWNE.

An amendment moved by Lord Lansdowne providing for the total exclusion of Ulster from Home Rule without time limit was next adopted by 138 to 39.

Lord Lansdowne, referring to the Marquis of Crewe's challenge Monday, said that the opposition would not guarantee that Ulster's exclusion would prevent civil war. Things had come to such a pass in Ireland that it was impossible for anyone to guarantee what might happen there in the next few weeks, even days.

"But on the whole," he continued, "we are inclined to believe that this arrangement is more likely than any other to provide relief from the present anxieties."

The Daily Telegraph yesterday asserts, on high authority, that the Government eventually will accept the bill as amended by the House of Lord. It adds that there will be no difficulty regarding the abolition of the time limit, but that the Redmondites will stoutly oppose the exclusion of the whole of Ulster. They will, however, The Telegraph declares, be out-voted on this point in the House of Commons by a combination of Liberals and Unionists.

CONDEMNS TEACHING OF SEX HYGIENE IN SCHOOLS

Standard of Morality Would Be Lowered, Supervisor Declares.

St. Paul, Minn., July 9.—The teaching of sex hygiene will never be delegated to the American teacher if it can be prevented by the National Education Association. This was evidenced at yesterday's session when speaker after speaker denounced such a course and found themselves greeted with ringing applause.

"We should have nothing but the strongest condemnation for the wealth, club-going woman who has not time to teach her child the fundamental truths of life, and would throw the responsibility upon a teacher or a football coach," shouted Dr. Chas. H. Kean, of Minneapolis, supervisor of hygiene and physical training. "Such shiftlessness is outrageous."

When the tumultuous cheering had subsided, he went on:

"Sex instruction placed on the same plane with spelling and arithmetic will rob it of all its sacredness.

"We talk about the inability of poorer mothers to teach their children personal hygiene, but it is not for these children that we need to have all the fear.

"Knowledge never will compel purity. Sex instruction in schools will but tend to lower the standard of morality.

"If we take up sex hygiene in our schools the homes of America will continue to lose ground, and will give up the few privileges they now have to train the children."

TWO YOUNGSTERS ARE SAVED FROM THE WATER

E. B. Boswell Answers Cries For Assistance and Lands Both Boys

Action by E. B. Boswell of the Travellers Insurance Company, Water Street, was the means of saving the lives of two youngsters, residing on Sherbrooke Street yesterday afternoon from a watery grave in the Otonabee at the foot of Sherbrooke Street, which at this particular point is fully twenty feet deep. Mr. Boswell, who happened to be in this vicinity, heard the screams of the two youngsters. He found them clinging together, struggling in the water about twenty-five feet from shore. He plunged in and after a hard battle with the two, who fought desperately, he managed to swim ashore with his heavy burden. Both boys, after a few minutes were able to be taken to their homes, where anxious mothers soon attended to their exhausted condition. Evidently the youngsters had been fishing from a punt and had fallen into the water. Eye witnesses of the affair claim that had it not been for the quick action of Mr. Boswell, who is an active boatman and a member of the Belmont Club, both boys would have probably lost their lives, owing to the depth of the water.

This is not the first time Mr. Boswell has helped in life saving, having been the means of saving two or three lives during the past couple of years at Chemong, where he generally spends his summer months.

WHY NOT FACE THE PROBLEM?

THERE ARE a good many peculiar stories going around about plumbing inspection in this city. Some say that the plumbing in this city is a joke, that there is no proper inspection, and yet it would appear the aldermen who were elected to look after the city's business have not given this matter, nor the rumors afloat, proper consideration.

The Property Committee, the other night, recommended that Mr. Peter Thompson, at present assistant plumbing inspector, be appointed inspector. Under the old arrangement, the City Engineer had jurisdiction over plumbing, but now it is claimed that the City Engineer has enough to do without overseeing plumbing, and so, while there has not been any plumbing inspector the assistant inspector has done the work. But, when the recommendation came up in the Council, they referred it back to the Property Committee, both dodging the matter. Alderman Duncan took strong objection to the appointment, and Ald. McIntyre and Ald. Stratton objected to adding the work to the present duties of the City Engineer. Why all this log-rolling, all this footballing back and forth? Are the aldermen playing a game of ping pong in the Council Chamber? As long as they ping-pong a question like this they are adding weight to the rumors afloat, and if the plumbing inspection is not right, the Council should say so. That is what they are there for.

On the other hand, Peterborough has a Medical Officer of Health whose duty, it seems to us, is to protect the health of the citizens. If plumbing is being badly installed, why has he not been heard from? We have not heard a squeak from this source, and yet we know of few things more harmful to public health than insanitary or defective plumbing. Moreover, the fact that the chairman of the Board of Health has taken no action would seem also to contradict the rumors afloat and to put the objecting aldermen in a very compromising position. At any rate another Council meeting should not pass without some definite action being taken.

THE SCRAMBLE FOR CALGARY OIL.

WESTERN OPTIMISM has reached a record mark in the Calgary oil strike. In spite of the well-known highly speculative feature of oil properties, confidence in the oil-producing possibilities of the field remains unabated. It seems that the larger the margin of uncertainty the greater is the tendency to throw savings into the general gamble.

Already stories of the stampede for oil shares are getting into the press and illustrate the senseless frenzy to squander, or at best, risk money in an undertaking that has no guarantee of ever being a productive enterprise. Thus, crowds of brokers and speculators in the rotunda of the new million-dollar Canadian Pacific Railroad hotel suddenly stopped roaring when a man, hatless and perspiring, rushed up to the desk and demanded vociferously immediate possession of the building, tendering a cheque for $1,000,000. He was removed to the asylum in Ponoka, where he is now violently insane. He had just turned over for about $40,000 a batch of shares which cost him $500. He couldn't stand it.

Everybody's nerves are tense. Every pulse beat of the Discovery well is carefully measured. When the oil "gushes," a responsive throb is felt all down the line. The bootblack sleeps with his ten-cent certificate under his pillow, and Mr. Wallingford smokes longer and blacker cigars.

And everybody dreams of an estate like Rockefeller's, with a standing army to repel the I. W. W.!!

A PRINCE OF ADVERTISERS.

THERE DIED recently in England, says the Ottawa Journal, the man who, if he was not exactly the father of modern advertising, had probably a nearer claim to that repute than any other man. Probably no reader of this paper ever heard of Mr. Barratt, the head of the firm of A. & T. Pears, the manufacturers of Pears' soap. Mr. Barratt was the man who made the fame of that article. He reaped a fortune out of it.

The Pears' story is rather an illustrative one, as regards the effect of good advertising. Before Barratt was taken into the firm the concern had been in existence eighty years, conducted on good staid retail lines, spending latterly as much as $400 a year in advertising, and making an ordinary limited business profit. Before Barratt was done with it the firm was spending $600,000 a year in advertising, and its annual profit was about as great.

Like poets, great advertisers are probably born, not made. "I began by advertising apples, and I've ended by advertising Pears," Mr. Barratt said, telling the story of his first venture. This London-born boy was coming home from school when he saw a little card in a greengrocer's shop window bearing an unconvincing announcement of the price of apples. He thought he could do better, and went home and painted a card which he exchanged for the shopkeeper's apples.

Later he got work with the Pears firm. By and by, he got the firm to do more advertising, with steady success. In 1865 he was taken into partnership, and in 1892 the business was converted into a company with $4,000,000 capital, Barratt becoming managing director, a position which he retained up to the time of his death.

"Good morning! Have you used Pears' Soap?" has become immortal in the literature of advertising. He got the idea of a[illegible]ng his staff to write down expressions used most often during the day, and "Good morning" was sent in by every one of them. All the London morning papers after that carried a double-column advertisement, putting the simple question. It could not be avoided; it cried out everywhere.

Mr. Barratt invented many other catch-words, which with his lavish expediture gave him an uncontested position as the greatest of English advertisers, possibly of all advertisers. The principle to which he attached most importance was this: "Advertising does not jerk, but pulls." Its effect is cumulative. Its value cannot often be guaged unless it is steady and continuous.

Newspapers like, of course, to hear of a career like that. But let us be frank. Another of Mr. Barratt's principles was one that every business man needs to heed, namely, that advertising is a waste of money unless two things are right: first, the goods; secondly, the advertising. Usually, goods that get advertising are all right, but very often the character of the advertising is neglected; it is not clear; it is not attractive; it is not varied, or it is not catchy. "Advertising needs to be done with some brains," said Mr. Barratt.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

CONSERVATIVES of the riding of West Peterborough owe a great deal of thanks to Mr. E. A. Peck for his efforts to strengthen and unify this riding. It was at his instance that the Executive meeting was called which drafted the resolution recently published in the local press, and which Mr. Peck signed in the interests of the Conservative party. In order to clear away any misunderstanding that might arise from a comment on that executive meeting to the effect that a member should not assume that he will be unopposed at a convention, there was no intention to refer to Mr. Peck. The meeting, we understand, was unanimous in agreeing to let differences drop, and we trust that all desiring the welfare of the Conservative party in this riding will recognize the necessity of doing so.

A TORONTO confrere going by the name of "On the Side" does not appear to be fascinated with the physiognomy of President Huerta or of General Villa. We observe that this eminent authority on abbreviated pithyness has not passed an opinion on Mrs. Huerta or Mrs. Villa.

IN SOME RESPECTS Sir Rodmond Roblin is at a disadvantage as a political leader. Some of his glorious supporters have at times difficulty with his name. They talk of Sir Roblin Rodmon, Sir Rodden Robmon, Shir Roddy Roblin, and various other entanglements that are always dead give-aways.

THERE SEEMS to be plenty of fruit ahead of the fruit growers around Hamilton. Prosperity will be general in that district now, everybody will be happy, and the aldermen will be able to go off on strawberry festivals and peaches and cream socials.

THE TORONTO City Council won't do a thing to that new assessment revenue.

The Stamp of a Reporter.

Ottawa Citizen.

Hard working reporter, lounging in an easy chair in a local hotel, discovered a one cent stamp stuck to the ceiling. A fellow who works that hard deserves to have the stamp flutter down into his very lap.

Is This a Confession?

Kingston Whig.

Were any of the Ad. Club men in Canada during the recent election? If so they must have heard many things that did not seem to harmonise with their new code of honour and their motto, "Truth." The imperial virtue stands high and can be emblazoned on the banner of any party—when an election is over.

Mind Our Own Business.

Ottawa Journal.

The best way for the other portions of the Empire, including Canada, to act in respect to Irish Home Rule, and Ulster, is to mind their own business. We would be the first to complain if the people of Great Britain offered the slightest interference in our domestic affairs. Perhaps, too, it would be better if some of us who are giving such a lot of attention to the "Government of Ireland" would give a little more attention to the Government of Canada.

Capital Punishment.

Washington Post.

Is capital punishment a deterrent to crime? Is it civilised or human? Once in the history of war the conquered were slaughtered wholesale. They still shoot the surviving officers in Mexico, but the custom has fallen into praiseworthy desuetude elsewhere. Barring unusually depraved forms of crime, would it not be better to make the offender work out a living penance for his deed? If not, it is doubtful whether a study of execution will do other than present a series of phenomena which, while differing in their outward manifestations, present nothing on which to base any definite conclusions as to their relative desirability in the matter of a "painless" death.

To Card-Index the Nation.

London Express.

It has remained for Mr. Walter Hazell, at a meeting of the Royal Statistical Society yesterday, to make the flesh creep even in those who are inured to the officialdom and valuations of Radical legislation. He proposes to card-index the nation at Somerset House—and its inevitable annexes. Just as an advertisement manager may turn up a card in a box and read that "A. & Co." have been written to three times and called on twice, and that as yet there is "nothing doing," so Sub-Sub-Commissioner of National Index Jones would, under this appalling scheme, turn up the card of Alfred Postbrugger on demand and learn that the said Alfred was born, married, had two children, scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria (twice), was made bankrupt, belonged (formerly) to four clubs, and—and so were his cousins and his sisters and his aunts. Only Gilbert could have dealt adequately with such a theme. Even Mr. Wells has not imagined a more forlornly socialised State.

OLD AND YOUNG

By Walt Mason

"If I could be that little boy," the weary grown-up sighed, "my jaded heart would swell with joy, and I'd be satisfied. For when all things are said and done youth has the right of way; it has monopoly of fun, of gladness, mirth and play. Boys have no problems dark and deep, to make the spirit sore, to rouse them from the midnight sleep and make them walk the floor. The world's a playground for the kid, grief threatens him in vain; he does not bear beneath his lid the cares that gnaw the brain. Oh, youth," the grown-up sighed, "could I but have it back again! Could I but say a long good-bye to woes of toiling men!" The lad whose lot is envied thus, is not swelled up with joy; in fact, he makes a daily fuss because he is a boy. "They grind me with the iron heel," he says, "against my wish, and turnips I must stay and peel, when I would like to fish. I have to hoe the beans and spuds a long and weary while, when I would like to shed my duds and swim about a mile. My dad, he tells me he will tan my jacket if I shirk; oh, chee, I wisht I was a man—then none could make me work!" Alas, no perfect bliss on earth has ever yet been sprung; but let's pretend we're full of mirth, though we be old—or young!

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP

A flyin'-squirrel is about the most ordinary lookin' creature of the woods but thar's one thing about him thet desarves commendation. He's accurate; he allars looks before he leaps. When a flyin'-squirrel wants ter pay a visit to the tree home of a neebor he climbs up inter the top branches of his own tree, stretches the skin sails between his front and hind legs, aims at a nice lightin' place and volplanes across. I've seen a lot of 'em make the swoop and I've never seen one miss the mark he jumped fer. And it's easy to reason out why thet squirrel makes plum sure of his lightin' spot. If he missed it he'd never make another glide. He knows this and he takes good keer to make sure. He looks before he leaps.

FOOD CAUSED DEATH.

Roumanian Had Starved a Week and Friends Fed Him Too Much.

ST. CATHARINES, July 9. — A coroner's jury found that Fontu Toderaro, Roumanian, who mortgaged his home in the old land to raise funds to bring him to Canada, died at Thorold in a rude shack built by his own hands, from acute indigestion, when friends prevailed upon him to take some mush and milk after he had been without food for more than a week. Toderaro found but six days' work since April 5, although he had expected to find riches in the construction of the Welland Ship Canal.

As soon as he arrived he sent home the remaining $26 of the amount raised on the mortgage for his trip.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

Good Form

Intrusive People.

From a spirit of idle curiosity there are many who, perhaps unconsciously, intrude without scruple where they are not wanted. To show such by a distant manner that they are intruding might be considered a breach of politeness, so too often they are endured with as much patience as possible.

As an example, in public eating rooms a party has secured a table or two as retired as possible, are entirely interested in themselves, and the affair may be intended to be as private as it can be made under such circumstances. Those who enter and pass the party to reach other tables should, in order to be considered entirely correct in deportment, neither call attention in any way, look too intently nor show any interest whatsoever in the presence of what is evidently an entirely private affair.

Yet how often may it be noted that an opposite course obtains. Newcomers deliberately look, most likely criticise audibly, make no effort to avoid being intrusive, but the contrary. This may be called the epitome of bad manners, impertinence, lack of politeness and also showing an excess of curiosity, in itself the height of ill breeding.

Oriental Favors.

A few of the really useful favors which may be provided for a small party are well worth considering.

For the girls there are the daintiest possible cardcases of pasteboard covered with pale toned Japanese crape and decorated with a hand painted flower design that cost very little, whether made at home or made to order.

Then there are the workbags in Bulgarian colors that can be made of the blue and red wide ribbons which have recently gone out of fashion for sashes and girdles, but which are the prettiest materials imaginable for "fancy" things.

Any girl will gladly welcome a favor in the shape of a narrow stemmed, tall Chinese vase in blue and white or blue, red, green and black, for it makes an ideal receptacle for hatpins when not needed for the single fresh flower which should be on every daintily equipped dressing table.

It is also a good idea to give single teacups and saucers in oriental ware, because nearly every girl is now collecting a harlequin set.

Brown flour to thicken brown gravies can be made by putting a pint of flour in a Dutch oven with some coals under, and keep stirring constantly until it is dark brown, but not burnt.

Cook's Cotton Root Compound.

A safe, reliable regulating medicine. Sold in three degrees of strength—No. 1, $1; No. 2, $3; No. 3, $5 per box. Sold by all druggists, or sent prepaid on receipt of price. Free pamphlet. Address: THE COOK MEDICINE CO., TORONTO, ONT. (Formerly Windsor.)

HELPFUL FOR HOUSEWIVES.

Keep a pair of ordinary pliers in the kitchen for lifting intensely hot pans.

Keep an egg timer near the telephone to gauge your long distance calls.

It is a good idea to buy a supply of extra bobbins for the sewing machine.

Dip matches in hot melted paraffin if you wish to make them waterproof.

Cut the invalid's toast into inch squares. It can be eaten much more easily.

Good nets for dresses can frequently be bought in the upholstery stores.

In planning summer menus get as far as possible away from winter dishes.

A good way to clean mirrors is to wipe them with a pad dipped in whiting and warm water. Then dry with a soft cloth and polish with a piece of chamois skin.

Waxed paper is a good thing to wrap about articles of food before placing them in the refrigerator. It should also be wrapped about cheese and like edibles that must be kept in a dry place.

WILD FLOWERS.

Old Fashioned Posies Are Popular Hat Trimmings.

Wild flowers, such as ragged robins, speedwell and bachelor's buttons, so delightfully made that they might have been executed by "nature's own sweet and cunning hand," are prepared for garlanding summer hats and for wearing as posies; also old fashioned garden flowers, stocks, wallflowers and sweet peas. Cornflowers and hyacinths of the most vivid blue are already appearing on hats; also roses of every kind, from tiny rambler and button blossoms to huge roses of velvet and silk.

Tulle is usually considered the most perishable of fabrics, but a variety which, though it appears just like all other tulle, is far more durable is the beautiful rainproof tulle, made by a special process—that is to say, it will not spoil when subjected to damp or become raggy in moist, heated atmosphere. Another exquisite fabric for evening wear emanating from the same manufactory is a fine silk gauze, woven in the fashionable metallic effects—gold, aluminium, copper shot with silver and radium blue. It is charmingly effective for tunics and draperies.

Novel Way With Fish.

For this you take a cupful of codfish, two cupfuls of sliced raw potatoes, a large onion, a cracker rolled fine, a pint of milk and salt to taste. Pick the codfish and soak it over night. Change the water several times in the morning. When ready to use, pare and thinly slice the potatoes and onion. Heat a dish, butter it well and put in alternate layers of fish, potatoes, onions and one cracker rolled fine. Cover with hot water and boil twenty minutes, then add salt, milk and, if possible, a little cream. Serve very hot.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

If a man minds a baby long enough he will eventually work out a correct answer to the superior inquiry, Why do women talk baby talk?

Corns were invented as a punishment especially suited to one of the ordinary crimes against common sense.

The man who lends has lots of friends, who stick as long as he has anything to lend.

A quiet conscience is often placid and comfortable because it has been through the sandbagging process.

It is necessary to first supply the mind in order to make the mind cure effective in some cases.

Don't worry about the next world or you may worry yourself into it.

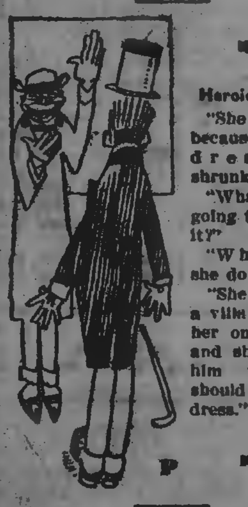
The especial dope favored by each one of us isn't really dope, don't you know, but something quite beneficial if you look at it right.

Safety In Flight.

I almost cough
My cocoa off,
Hold to my aching head,
Achoo and wheeze
And snuff and sneeze
And shuffle off to bed.

And there I shake
And chill and quake
With pain that's hard to stand,
But, oh, the door
Is locked before
My friends can take a hand.

And so in peace
I seek release
From grip's detested hold.
No crank can come
To bring me some
Dead certain cure for cold.



Heroic Remedy.

"She is in tears because her new dress has shrunk."

"What is she going to do about it?"

"What can she do?"

"She might hire a villain to meet her on the road and shrink from him until she should fit the dress."

His Place.

"Do you think I would make a good halfback?" asked the anxious candidate for the football team.

"Not exactly," replied the heartless athletic director.

"A quarterback, then?"

"Hardly."

"What position can I make?"

"A way back, I'm afraid is all."

Job Not In It.

"That man has the patience of Job."

"What man?"

"The one with the baby."

"Job nothing! He exhausted Job's supply hours ago and now has begun on a supply equal to that of a suffragette."

Knew Better.

"I hear you had an affair of the heart this summer."

"I thought so at first."

"Didn't it prove to be?"

"The lady assured me it was only an affair of the gall."

Just the Excuse.

"How did you like the eclipse?"

"I didn't see it."

"But I thought you sat up just for that?"

"Oh, no! I sat up to give John a chance to propose."

Had Found It So.

He dropped from an airship, and, falling,
He lit with a terrible thud.
He broke several bones in the mixup
And spilled several gallons of blood.
While doctors were stitching and cutting
And trying to get him in trim
He said from some close observation
It seemed like a hard world to him.

Probably Were.

"She is eternally bragging on her husband."

"She says he is too good to be true."

"Maybe she is referring to the stories he tells her when he comes home late at night."

Soft Snap.

"Johnny, what are you going to be when you grow up?"

"Driver of a coal wagon."

"So you can handle horses?"

"No; so I won't never have to wash my face."

Getting It All.

"What is keeping that woman at the phone so long?"

"She had to drop a nickel in the slot, and she wants to get her full money's worth."

Stranger to Him.

"Do you believe in luck?"

"I do not."

"Why not?"

"How could I believe in something I never saw?"

We must sow good deeds to-day to reap happiness to-morrow.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson II.—Third Quarter, For July 12, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Mark x, 32-45. Memory Verses, 43-45—Golden Text, Mark x, 45—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The first part of this lesson concerning His death and resurrection is recorded in Matthew, Mark and Luke, but the second part, concerning the request of James and John and their mother, in Matthew and Mark only. The words "in the way" of verses 17, 32, 52; xi, 8; Acts ix, 2, 17, 27, and elsewhere, while they may generally mean nothing more than on the road, are suggestive of Ps. i, 6; cxix, 1; John xiv, 6, and make one think of the way of peace, the way of the Lord (Luke i, 79; iii, 4), and of what it really means, to follow Him in the way.

This is the third time that He spoke plainly of His sufferings and death and resurrection; but, although His words seem so plain to us, they understood none of these things (Luke xviii, 34), because they knew not the Scriptures concerning His death and resurrection (John xx, 9), having their own thoughts about the kingdom, just as many today know nothing of the second coming of Christ, the distinction between the church of the present age and the kingdom of the next age and the ages to come, because they will not take heed to what is written in the prophets concerning the Son of Man and the kingdom to be set up at His coming in glory to judge the nations and to reign in righteousness (Isa. xxxii, 1, 17; xxxiv, 8; xxxv, 4, 10), but persist in thinking that the kingdom is within us and that all that the great work of redemption is for is to deliver people from hell and get them to heaven.

This is the age of a kingdom postponed because of a rejected Christ and of gathering out from all nations a people to reign with Him, but who must be content now to suffer with Him, live separate from this present evil age, not conformed to it, but so manifesting in it the meekness, lowliness and love of Christ that we shall show something of His life in these mortal bodies and win people to Him. The Holy Spirit has been given especially in this age to testify of a crucified, risen and ascended Christ, who is waiting at the Father's right hand until the number of His elect, waiting, suffering ones, shall have been completed, when He will take us to Himself, reward us for service, appoint our places in His kingdom and bring us back with Him to reign (Acts xvi, 13-18; Thess. iv, 16-18; Col. iii, 4; Rev. v, 9, 10). This is no time for a believer to be seeking great things for himself or his church or his denomination or society or in any way to make himself a name, but with all lowliness and meekness and long suffering and patience walk worthy of Him who has called us unto His kingdom and glory (Eph. iv, 1, 2; Col. i, 10, 11; I Thess. ii, 12), who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many (verse 45).

Even Jeremiah in his day said to his scribe Baruch, "Seekest thou great things for thyself, seek them not" (Jer. xlv, 5). As it is a case of self or the Lord and cannot be both, we must persist in attaining to the fullness of the experience of "Not I, but Christ who liveth in me;" "Not I, but the grace of God;" "In newness of life, dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord;" "Delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh;" "Risen with Christ and setting our affection on things above" (Gal. ii, 20; Cor. xv, 10; Rom. vi, 4, 11; II Cor. iv, 10, 11; Col. iii, 1-4).

Neither James nor John nor their mother seemed to understand when they came seeking preferment in the kingdom, and it did seem so out of place when He had just been speaking of His own sufferings and death. Even on the last night, at the passover, as he spoke of one of them betraying Him, they were striving as to which of them should be the greatest, giving Him occasion to say, "I am among you as he that serveth" (Luke xxii, 21-27). No teacher of man was ever so lonely, misunderstood or unappreciated. There is such a depth of meaning in His words, "No man knoweth the Son but the Father" (Matt. xi, 27); "I live by the Father" (John vi, 57). He spoke of the cup given Him to drink and the baptism of suffering which awaited Him and asked if they could share it, and they thought that their devotion to Him was such that they could share anything with Him, even, to dying with Him, as Peter said (John xiii, 37).

They did not understand. How could they when they were so dull as not to receive His plain words about His own dying? And when he was arrested that last night and was about to be bound and led away as a prisoner Peter would have delivered Him by his sword if he could.

Oh, how little we understand of what it means to follow Him, to manifest His life, to bear the burden of the meek and lowly One, who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered He threatened not, leaving us an example that we should follow His steps (I Pet. ii, 21-23). When people sing, "Surely the captain may depend on me," "Fade, each earthly joy," "Thou, O Christ, art all I want," and other similar words they do not often consider what they are saying nor to whom they are saying these words, nor how it would be if the test came.

TUMOR IN THE STOMACH

Completely Removed When She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

NEWBURY, ONT., April 4th, 1913.

"Some years ago, I was sick in bed, and thought I was going to die. I had a growth in my stomach, which the doctors said was a Tumor and they said that the only thing to do was to go to the hospital and have the tumor cut out. I dreaded an operation although both doctors said it was the only cure. I said I would die before being operated on.

At this time, my mother in Alvinston sent me some "Fruit-a-tives" and induced me to try them as she had heard of another woman who had been cured of a similar growth in the stomach by taking "Fruit-a-tives".

To please my mother, I began to take "Fruit-a-tives" with the happy result that they cured me. I have not been to see a doctor since and my health is first class.

I recommend "Fruit-a-tives" every time I get a chance and I will be glad to have you publish this letter as some other woman may now be a sufferer from the same trouble and "Fruit-a-tives" will cure her" MRS. A. McDONALD.

Cod In Hudson Bay.

Cod are known to exist in Hudson Bay, having been taken at Cape Smith and at Comb Hills in James Bay. The Eskimos also catch them in Nastapoka Sound and at the Belcher Islands; at a number of places in James Bay they are also taken by the Indians.

Food for these fish is abundant in Hudson Bay and there is no reason why extensive fisheries in this Canadian inland sea should not exist. The undoubted presence of cod in Hudson Bay deserves investigation, as a very valuable and exclusive Canadian fishery my be found there. The presence of cod points to that of halibut in the deeper waters of the bay.

The only other salt water food fishes as yet known in Hudson Bay are a couple of species of sculpin which are eaten extensively by the Eskimos. Sturgeon are caught in the lower parts of the southern rivers to the East Main river and lower reaches of the northern rivers. The Atlantic salmon does not appear to enter Hudson Bay, at least no record has been obtained of its doing so from the Eskimos. Its range in the Arctic waters of Hudson straits seems to limit it to the rivers of the west side of Ungava Bay.

Rain as a Fertilizer.

Rain, especially when accompanied by thunder and lightning, has a fertilizing effect upon the soil. There is almost always ammonia in the air, and this is carried by the rain into the earth. It has been calculated that a quart of rainwater may contain about one-eightieth of a grain of ammonia.

The Woodpecker's Tattoo.

Heard a woodpecker tapping the trees in the high woods. How strangely he is constructed! If we chopped our teeth on a stick loud enough to be heard a hundred feet off, at the end of an hour our jaws and gums would be so sore we could not bear it. But the woodpecker seems to suffer no inconvenience.

The Problem.

When foodstuff on a rampage goes
And up the ladder chases
And when the prices higher get
How will we feed our faces?
Or will our stomachs have to go
On an enforced vacation
Or, if it doesn't come to that,
Pull through on half a ration?

"Fierce" is the only word that can
Do justice to the matter.
It almost takes its weight in gold
To fill the family platter.
You go out with a pocket full
Of bills, and after paying
The score, if there is any left,
In splendid luck you're playing.

It used to be a man could save
A portion of his earnings
And still have plenty in the house
To satisfy his yearnings.
But now he is a lucky dog
If he can answer, "No, sir;
I do not owe the baker man,
The butcher or the grocer."

But that's the way it is today.
There's no use in denying
That living is so very high
It takes the sting from dying.
You go into the corner store,
And if you can't get trusted
Before you turn three times around
You find that you are busted.

Snow and Timber.

Few would imagine that the absence of snow would double the price of timber. The greater part of the world's supply of common timber comes from the forests of Canada, Scandinavia and Russia. All of these countries have a greater or less fall of snow. Snow is one of the best non-conductors of heat or cold in the world, and when the fall is a foot deep a thermometer showing 60 degrees on its surface will, if buried beneath the snow, rise to about 30 degrees. The snow, therefore, is an enormous blanket protecting the roots of the trees from the intense cold, besides covering the warmth of the soil. A full-grown pine can stand almost any degree of cold, but a young tree cannot do so. It might sprout during summer, but a snowless winter would infallibly kill it. If, therefore, snow ceased, the enormous timber supplies of Northern Europe, Asia and America would disappear.

CIVIC HELP MUST AVOID BAR ROOMS

Mayor McVeity Gives Strict Orders at Ottawa

Ottawa, July 9.—A strict order was issued by Mayor McVeity that no official of the corporation shall enter a bar-room either during or after business hours. Each department head at the city hall was sent a brief warning that he or any of his subordinates must not patronise public drinking places, and if he did would be penalized.

The mayor's drastic action follows the city council's movement in re-instating George Erskine, caretaker of the city hall after the chief magistrate had dismissed him on the grounds of drunkenness and neglect of duty. There was much comment among the officials when they received the little typewritten notes from the mayor's office. Like the minister of militia the mayor apparently believes in a dry canteen.

The order is understood to apply particularly to employes at the city hall. There are already strict regulations against the use of intoxicants by firemen and members of the police force.

The mayor's order was as follows:

"To The Heads of Departments.

"The Mayor desires it to be understood that all officials of the Corporation, no matter in what capacity employed, whether heads of departments or subordinates, are to avoid bar-rooms and public drinking places, as well as when off duty as on duty.

"A copy of this order is to be furnished by the head of each department to each of his subordinates and any violation of the same brought to the notice of the Mayor will be visited with the appropriate penalty.

(Sgd.) TAYLOR McVEITY,
Mayor."

LIGHT THOUGHT TO BE BREAKING ON MURDER CASE

Freeport, N. Y., July 9.—That the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey on Tuesday of last week in the office of Dr. Edwin Carman is no longer a mystery is the belief of Lewis J. Smith, district attorney of Nassau county. Mr. Smith will appear before the grand jury and will ask that an indictment be returned. Smith and Sheriff Pettitt have eliminated Coroner Norton as a co-worker in the case, it is said.

Just before the inquest was resumed yesterday, the district attorney announced that he had discovered an insurance agent who has said he was passing the Carman home about 8 o'clock when he heard a crash of glass, and, turning, saw a woman dressed in white looking into a window of the physician's office. Then he heard the report of a revolver and saw the woman disappear toward the rear of the house.

A Sensational Story.

Detectives were running down a story that a New York gunman brought the murder weapon from New York, broke the glass of the window looking upon Carman's office, handed the gun to the slayer, took it back after the shooting, and then escaped with it. A man who gave the gunman's name and said an elopement was mixed up in the plot, gave the details which seemed to be regarded by both official and unofficial investigators as more worthy of credence than many of the other wild stories which have been drifting about Freeport.

Several subpoenas have been issued ordering witnesses to appear before the grand jury. Among them is Miss Hazel Coombes, the young girl who testified at the inquest that Mrs. Carman was downstairs fully dressed, about half an hour before the shooting.

Burns Is Melodramatic.

William J. Burns and his detectives made a dramatic entry into the case. At 8 o'clock at night Burns and his men marched up to the Carman home. By his orders the house was brilliantly lighted up and the shooting was re-enacted in every detail. Dr. Carman pointed out the exact positions of the actors.

The curtains were drawn on the office windows. Two detectives, impersonating Carman and Mrs. Bailey, took their seats where they had sat last Tuesday night. Two detectives sat in the waiting room in the roles of Golder and Archie Post. Still two more represented the women who mysterious disappearance after the shooting is now being investigattd.

Mrs. Carman Takes Role.

Mrs. Carman was upstairs in her room; so was her sister, Mrs. Powell. Even Mrs. Conklin, still ill, was where testimony placed her at the time the shot was fired. Celia Coleman, the negro maid, was in the kitchen, and Platt Conklin, Mrs. Carman's father, was temporarily banished.

Burns quietly stole up to the window just at the minute the real murderer had done so a week ago. He drew a 38-calibre revolver from his coat pocket. In a second he had the screen curtain propped open with a four-inch piece of shingle.

Pretended to Shoot.

In another the muzzle of his pistol was pointing through the open window, showing the curtain [illegible] back and then settling to [illegible]. In another second the trigger clicked and as it did the detective impersonating Carman dived headlong under the operating chair, while the one taking the part of Mrs. Bailey reeled and fell. Mrs. Powell ducked down the front stairway, ran out upon the porch and around the house to the door leading into Carman's waiting room, carrying out all details, even to the placing of the body of the supposed Mrs. Bailey upon the couch.

Why She Wantd Dictograph.

Gaston Boisonault, manager of the detective division of a company which manufactures telephone devices to record conversations, was the first witness called today. He told of the first call of Mrs. Carman at his office. She first said she was a dressmaker, then admitted her identity, adding that she had many domestic troubles and wanted to hear what went on in her husband's office. This was on May 19. On the same day Mrs. Carman made plans to take her husband away for two days while the instrument was being installed. She had told him about seeing a nurse kiss Dr. Carman. "She said she was so mad," he went on, "when she saw that kiss that she almost broke the window by knocking on it."

Daughter's Evidence.

Elizabeth Carman, the 12-year-old daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Carman, said that after dinner her mother told her to stop running around the house and to sit down and be quiet. She went into the diningroom and sat down. The room was dark and the curtains between it and her father's waiting-room were pulled aside. She saw two persons, a man and a woman, in the waiting-room ten minutes before the murder. She saw no one in the hall. Directly after the shot was fired she ran upstairs and saw her mother, her aunt and her grandmother there. Her mother, she said, was in a kimono.

DR. COLERIDGE DEAD

WOODSTOCK, July 9.—The death took place here yesterday morning at eight o'clock of Dr. James Bruce, Coleridge, former Mayor of Ingersoll, and a life-long resident of Oxford County. Dr. Coleridge had been ailing for some weeks and his death has been expected for some time. He was in his 36th year and is survived by a wife, a ten-year-old son and a sister, Mrs. J. W. McDonald, of Ingersoll, and one brother, Dr. J. G. Coleridge, of Detroit.

DIRT AND DISEASE

Statistics From Port Hope Are Given

St. John, N.B., July 9.—A bombshell was thrown in the meeting of the public health section of the Canadian Medical Association at their opening session when a paper prepared by Dr. W. H. Hill, of London, Ont., promulgated the doctrine that dirt had little to do with disease.

Dr. Hill contended that much of the activity of the boards of health and medical men was beside the mark, and they might be much better occupied promoting conditions enabling men to live a more natural life than is possible for many city dwellers at present, than giving so much attention to dirt and other unaesthetic things. He said that statistics from Port Hope showed that the breakers of sanitary laws had one-third less deaths and only half as many cases of infection as the law-keeper.

Dr. Hill's views called forth strong protests from Dr. C. A. Hodgetts, medical adviser to the Conservative Commission and other prominent doctors.

$100 FEE FOR SALE OF CIGARETTES

Fine For Violation From $1 to $50

Blenheim, July 9. — Blenheim Town Council has had the cigarette evil up for discussion at several meeting this year, and as a result Councillor A. W. Ross saw his cigarette by law finally passed at the monthly meeting.

This by-law provides that any person selling cigarettes, cigarette tobacco or cigarette paper after December 31 next must first have taken out a license so to do and pay a license fee of $100.

A first violation of this by-law means a fine of $1 to $50.

At present there are several who deal in these articles which are alleged to be much sought after by youths below the age limit, who in some way succeed in getting a supply.

It is thought by a license it will be easier to trace the sale.

Paris, July 9.—Abbé Gaffre, one of the best known Roman Catholic Priests in Paris, died in Switzerland, where he had gone on account of ill-health.

GREEN COMPANY GET CONTRACT FOR CASTINGS

Tender Was the Lowest of Three

The first business dealt with by the Board of Works las' night was the awarding of the contract for the supplying of the city's castings for this year. The companies tendering were: Peter Hamilton Co., Wm. Hamilton Co., and the G. Walter Green Co. The castings desired and their weight as demanded by the specifications were, manhole tops 6900 pounds, sidewalk grating 4060, catch basin tops 7500 pounds.

The prices of the three companies were as follows:

Peter Hamilton Co., manhole tops $240.00; sidewalk gratings $300.00; catch basin tops $225.00. Total $7650.00.

Wm. Hamilton Co., manhole tops $240.00, sidewalk gratings $300.00; catch basin tops, $225.00. Total $765.00.

G. W. Green Co., manhole tops, $235.00; sidewalk gratings, $235.00; catch basin tops $225.00. Total $705.00.

After some little discussion during which several of the members remarked that they would rather see the work divided Ald. McIntyre moved that G. W. Green Co., being the lowest tender be given the work. Mayor Buller seconded this motion and it carried.

THE TENDERS FOR PAVING

All Turned Over to City Engineer For Report.

ONE LOCAL TENDER

The Board of Works last night received and opened the tenders for the paving of the following streets: Charlotte from Water to George, Charlotte from Bethune to Park, Simcoe from Water to Aylmer, Brock from Water to Aylmer, Aylmer from Charlotte to McDonnel, Water from Charlotte to Brock. The companies tendering were Foley and Gleeson, Warren Bituminous Paving Co., Canada Creosoting Company and W. Lytle, the local contractor. Mr. Lytle tendered for the grade, base, curb and gutter while the other companies tendered for the complete work. They also quoted their prices for the paving of the wearing surface. Foley and Gleeson's price is 4 cents per square yard more than last year while the Warren Bituminous Co's tender showed a reduction of from $2.46 cents per square yard to $2.34.

The tender of the Canada Creosoting Co. called for $2.88 per square yard on a four inch base and $2.98 on a five inch base. The filling between their bocks is made with sand which City Engineer Parsons stated caused Ottawa considerable trouble. When the slush in winter time works down between the blocks and freezes the blocks are heaved and the road practically spoiled. They sometimes put tar between their blocks but Mayor Buller looked into that kind of filler and he found that in Toronto the warm weather softened the tar and it was carried into houses and hotels, ruining floors and carpets. The Mayor informed the Board that several civil actions were pending in the Queen City as a result of this.

The Board decided that City Engineer Parsons should be given a few days to figure out the total cost of the work and then report. A meeting will be called for Friday evening and if all is in readiness the contracts will be awarded.

PETERBORO LUMBER CO. LOGS ARRIVE

The immense drive, being brought down by the Peterboro Lumber Co. is now silently floating into the Little Lake. The wind this morning was a trifle unfavorable and drifted the logs to the west shore but being in such close quarters it will be a simple matter to swing them around to the jacks. There are four drives, and the number of logs is estimated to be about 200,000. One drive has been on the way since the middle of April, it came from Eel's Lake about 12 miles north of Apsley via Bottle and Ketchecum Lakes to Stoney Lake where it was united with the other drives which came via Massasauga Creek and Gull River. Officers of the company state that the water has been the lowest in history. Their mill has been shut down for about ten days awaiting the arrival of the logs but will re-open tomorrow.

The drive for which McDonald's Mill is waiting is right behind the logs of the Peterboro Lumber Co.

Interment Held Today.

The funeral of the late J. J. English took place this morning from the family residence to the G.T.R. depot and thence to Omemee for interment. Rev. Canon Davidson officiated at the house service held last evening.

LOCAL ORANGEMEN ARE SATISFIED

With Statement of the Minister of Militia

Several local Orangemen, whom The Review interviewed, seem to be quite satisfied with the explanation of the Minister of Militia in regard to the Corpus Christi parade in Montreal, when the 65th Regiment carried rifles as they marched in the procession. The full statement of Col. Hughes is as follows:

"To the Orangemen of Canada:

"The principles of the Orange institution are, without exception, the best yet promulgated for the upbuilding of humanity. Orangemen, as a class, are unsurpassed by the best of any in the world. Their principles are the broadest kind of tolerance, yet, unfortunately, in all organizations, intolerant, fanatical-minded people are found. However, those in the Orange Order are a very small percentage of the great mass of splendid, well-informed men constituting that society.

A Few Intolerant.

"A few of this intolerant class have recently been interesting themselves passing resolutions about the fact that the 65th Regiment of Montreal marched in a Roman Catholic procession a few weeks ago in that city. Resolutions are fulminated without the slightest regard to the facts of the case, and the authors thereof openly and flagrantly violate the first principles of the Orange institution. But this is not the first time I have calmly faced the wrath of a few fanatics. Yet I have lived to be endorsed and justified by very sensible man in the Orange Order.

"In 1896 I had the honor of opposing Laurier's policy and also Tupper's policy re Manitoba schools. Laurier's policy is found in the iniquitous systems prevailing in Manitoba today, while Tupper's was rank coercion. My mandate was for both political parties to let the people of Manitoba alone. Time has vindicated the vision of my policy.

The Facts of It.

"Now, what are the facts of this 65th Regiment affair? The 65th is one of the best regiments in Canada. They marched loyally in the Northwest in 1885 and fought against their compatriots at Frenchmen's Butte, and rendered splendid service everywhere in that campaign. Co. Ostell and others now in the corps served Queen and country on that occasion. How many of those now passing condemnatory resolutions did likewise? The 65th also sent some of its best to South Africa.

"Their custom for more than half a century, it seems, has been to parade on Corpus Christi Sunday, carrying Government rifles. I do not here discuss the character of the procession. My views on that subject may be as strong as any, but the procession comes under the heading 'religions,' and, under the law, soldiers are permitted to march therein, but they are not permitted to carry Government rifles.

Within Their Rights.

"During the last year, owing to irregularities by members of certain cadet corps who had carried rifles in religious processions, I caused notification to be sent to every corps in Canada to the above effect. Therefore, this year, when the religious authorities asked Col. Ostell as usual to march he drew attention to the law and respectfully declined to obey it. Col. Ostell, further, in an interview in the Montreal Gazette, contradicted the rumor that his officers and non-commissioned officers were rebellious over the order and he reiterated the assertion that to a man officers, non-commissioned officers and men would loyally observe the law.

"I was then appealed to, not by the 65th, not by Roman Catholics alone, but by Protestant citizens of Montreal—as good and true as are in Canada—and by several Protestant newspapers — to suspend the law and allow Government rifles to be carried. As every honest Orangeman knows, I refused point blank to allow any change.

The Way Out.

"It was then brought out by a Protestant officer in Montreal that rifles, other than those issued by the Government, could be carried without violating the law. That interpretation was confirmed by the judge advocate general, and no better Protestant or Orangeman than he exists. The prohibition was against the carrying of Government rifles. The Militia Department has no authority to interfere against private rifles. That would come under municipal, provincial or Justice Department control.

"Permit me to say, however, that I am convinced that, on reflection, the religious authorities, on learning that their custom has been in violation of the regulations enforced since Wellington's time, will be the first to desist from the carrying of rifles in religious processions. I am further convinced that the militia and cadets of the country, all high-spirited and proud of their organisations, will not agree, for the future, to even a technical observance of the law by carrying private rifles. They will, I am fully convinced, see the propriety of marching in the usual way — side arms only.

"Rather Amusing"

"It is rather amusing to me to see the attempts to stir up, on the one hand, Protestant fanaticism, and, on the other hand, Roman Catholic. Recently I declined to permit the turning out of troops, or the firing of salutes in honor of a distinguished prelate of the Roman Catholic Church because what would be done for one church must be done for all, and forthwith I am assailed as a fanatic by a few Roman Catholic people. On the other hand I have rigidly adhered to the law regarding the carrying of Government rifles in religious processions and am assailed by a few Protestant fanatics who do not understand the facts at all. These people seem to think it is the function of the Minister of Militia to 'butt in' to everything concerning firearms or fireworks.

"Permit me to say, I endeavor strictly to attend to the business of the Department of Militia and Defence, and it is not my intention to be swayed by any misdirected agitation on the part of misguided persons of any or all religious creeds.

"(Signed) SAM HUGHES.

"6th July, 1914."

IMPROVEMENT AT CORNER OF ROMAINE AND BOUNDARY RD.

That the corner of Romaine Street and Boundary Road where the C.P.R. crosses, will be fully completed before many moons is altogether possible in view of the letter received by the Board of Works last night from Superintendent Uren of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Board, a few weeks ago, requested the City Engineer to write Mr. Uren about this crossing and the reply states that the C.P.R. will fill in Romaine Street on the south side fo the track and leave a width of sixty-six feet from the railway line. The Board authorised the City Engineer to write Mr. Uren again and request that a crib be placed on the inside of the filling, thus the city will be able to construct a sidewalk. In his letter Mr. Parsons will also urge the planking of a little more of the crossing so that vehicles going from Romaine Street north on the Boundary Road may make the turn a little more conveniently. The requests will, it is expected, be granted and then the matter satisfactorily settled.

BEN HOBSON CAN CELEBRATE

But He Must View the Festivities From Water Wagon

"If some of those people would keep their tongues in their head and quit asking me how many Papists I'm going to kill on the 12th, I wouldn't be here so much," remarked Ben Hobson to Magistrate Dumble this morning. Ben was charged with being drunk. He was dismissed, as he had secured a good position with a farmer in Otonabee, and that farmer had informed the Chief that Ben was a good worker when away from the booze.

Ben further enlightened the court to the effect that he had left the farm a few days ago to come to the city to buy a suit of clothes for the glorious 12th.

Magistrate Dumble told Ben that if he got drunk again, they would place him on the blacklist.

SWEENEY GOES BACK TO PRISON

Another Six Months' Term Is Imposed

John Sweeney charged with vagrancy was sentenced to six months in Central Prison this morning by Magistrate Dumble. Sweeney just completed the serving of a six months' term two weeks ago. He pleaded not guilty claiming that he had not sufficient time to get work to support his family. Evidence by Detective Newhall was to the effect that Sweeney was a habitual drinker and would not work.

Magistrate Dumble said that he had no truth, honor or character and that the Central Prison Farm could make good use of him.

OFFICER WENT TO PRISON TO SHIELD WIFE

London, July 9.—The story of a British army officer's determination to undergo penal servitude rather than defend himself at his wife's expense, although she was proved guilty, is told in a document sent to all members of Parliament by Sir Herbert Raphael, M.P., who is trying to secure a rehearing of the case of Lieut. Cecil Aylmer Cameron, of the Royal Artillery, and his wife, who were both convicted in 1911 of fraudulently claiming $32,500 insurance on a pearl necklace which Mrs. Cameron said had been stolen from her, but which she never even possessed.

Lieut. Cameron refused to go into the witness-box at the trial to prove his non-complicity in the fraud of fear of making his wife's case worse. The result was that both were sentenced to three years' penal servitude. The husband served two years of his sentence, but the wife was released after a few weeks owing to a dangerous illness. Mrs. Cameron, fearing that she was about to die, made a complete confession exonerating her husband. She showed that she had duped him, and that up to the very last she had feared to confess her deception lest she should lose his love.

A petition, remarkable for the names of the signatures, has been addressed to his Majesty asking for a rehearing of the case. It contains the confession and other evidence which Mr. Cameron knew, but refused to use at the trial. The Scottish secretary, Mr. McKinnon Wood, has persistently refused to advise his Majesty to grant the petition, which was signed by Cameron of Lochiel, the head of the clan; five dukes, including the Duke of Norfolk, the premier peer of England; Lord Lansdowne and five other marquises; Lord Roberts, Lord Grey, Lord Cromer, and Lord Selborne; 20 members of the Privy Council; 126 generals; nine judges, two archbishops and 17 bishops; a long list of officers, peers, barristers, professors, doctors, and others, numbering more than 4,000.

Lord Middleton and Lord Denbigh are going to bring the matter forward in the House of Lords, and Sir Herbert Raphael in the House of Commons.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

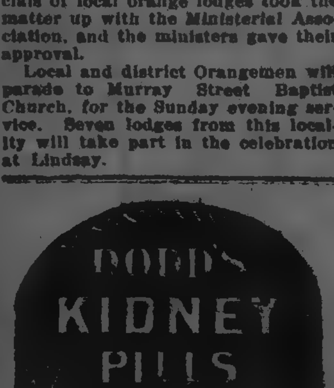
For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

PRAY FOR PEACE IN IRELAND

Special Prayers Next Sunday in City Churches.

Next Sunday, July 12, special prayers will be offered in the local churches, for peace in Ireland. Officials of local orange lodges took the matter up with the Ministerial Association, and the ministers gave their approval.

Local and district Orangemen will parade to Murray Street Baptist Church, for the Sunday evening service. Seven lodges from this locality will take part in the celebration at Lindsay.



RESCUED WIFE FROM DEN OF WHITE SLAVER

Montreal, July 9.—After a battle in which Adolph Zaratan, of Montreal, almost choked the life out of an alleged white slaver, in a den in Toronto, Mrs. Zaratan and her three children were restored to the husband yesterday. They are a Montreal family—Russians. The story of the young foreign woman is one of the most horrible that officers have heard in a long time. The white slaver got away scot free—although the infuriated husband gave him a choking that he will not soon forget.

Zaratan is a tinsmith. He could not get work in Montreal, but found it in Ottawa. He had his wife and children move to Toronto, so they would be nearer to him and so he could reach them on Sunday. On her way to Toronto, the woman met a young man and woman, who claimed to be man and wife, who took a great interest in the stranger and offered to find her rooms in the city. She was taken to West Toronto and her children hidden from her.

Her husband, alarmed at receiving no letters from his wife, hurried to Toronto to see what was wrong. There was a long weary search, ending finally in his discovery of the missing ones in a terrible shack in a side street. When he reached the place, the door was bolted on the inside. Listening, he heard his wife weeping within. He burst in the door and found his wife in tears and a foreigner in the room. He leaped for the throat of the man, securing such a grip that it was with difficulty that he was pulled away. The slavers escaped in the confusion but Zaratan got his wife and children back again.

FORCES OF GOVERNMENT CONFIDENT

Roblin is Expected to Sweep the Country

Winnipeg, July 9.—The provincial election campaign has reached its penultimate stage, but in the city here public meetings will be carried on right up to the eve of the polling. To-night Mrs. Nellie McClung, whose personal campaign has been possibly the most noteworthy feature of the fight the opposition has put up, is to address another meeting here. It is the first time that a woman has made any sort of a mark in Manitoba politics and this fact alone, outside of her strong personality, attracts big mixed audiences wherever she speaks.

Government Confident.

The government forces are as confident as ever that they will sweep the province. One of the most conservative estimates they have yet put forward was when to-day a prominent Conservative said that at the worst they admitted the opposition might carry 17 seats, leaving 32 to the government. These 17 seats include every weak government constituency and allow the Liberals three of the six Winnipeg members. On the other hand the opposition claim they are going to win out. The Government morning paper to-day featured a report that Mr. Norris, the Liberal leader, had privately admitted he stood no chance. Mr. Norris announced this afternoon that this statement is false. On the contrary he believes there is going to be a change—"The Roblin Government is going to be beaten and badly beaten on Friday," he added.

EVERYBODY'S GOT IT!

LONDON, Eng., July 9.—Sir William Osler, regius professor of medicine at Oxford University, yesterday startled the huge audience attending the conference of the Association for the Prevention of Consumption by telling them that they were practically all tuberculous. He said:

"If with the aid of radium and a microscope I could look at the chests of the audience I am addressing, in 90 per cent. of us I should discover a small focus or area of tuberculosis."

Sir William demanded in the interests of the state the establishment of rigid control over consumptives.

OTTAWA, July 9. — A series of Conservative political meetings in the Province of Quebec are proposed to be held this autumn, starting at Louisville on Aug. 9. The Quebec Ministers will participate.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 9. — The Canadian Medical Association last night chose Vancouver, B.C., as its meeting place next year. The date will be selected by the local medical society.

Mexicans Expel Britisher.

EL PASO, Texas, July 9.—George St. Clair Douglas, the British subject who was recently tried before a Constitutionalist court-martial at Zacatecas City on a charge of having assisted the Federals in their defense of the city, has been ordered expelled from Mexico. Manuel Carlos de la Vega, revolutionary governor of Zacatecas, ordered the expulsion. Douglas is expected to arrive here in a few days.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

LIVING in a flat has its advantages when a good old fashioned winter is eating coal and spewing snow and ice.

Keeping the hired girl in good humor is almost as exciting as going to the matinee.

If a man can conserve his pocketbook these days his temper will take care of itself.

Marriages may have been made in heaven, but in placing the output of the factory some curious errors are made.

Of course we all hope to be wealthy and wise, but we must know that our next door neighbor will attain to neither.

Some people think that unfavorable notice is better than none.

Lines to a Charmer.

Here's to the pretty waitress
  Who brings our daily hash
And trades us smiles and doughnuts
  For cold and clammy cash,
Who never keeps us waiting
  For more than half a day
When we are in a hurry
  And long to break away!

With manners as engaging
  As in a court are found
She takes our modest orders
  And brings the fodder round.
If it is not the order
  We gave we dare not frown
Or mention the annoyance
  Lest she should call us down.

She throws in little chitchat
  Between the bill of fare
About the other boarders
  Not at the moment there.
When she is in a hurry
  The dishes fairly bang,
And while she slings the platters
  She slings the latest slang.

With fingers light and nimble
  She shoots the biscuits through,
And not a man she misses,
  Because her aim is true.
Then for the pie or pudding
  She makes a hurried trip
And stands around quite careless
  Lest she should miss a tip.

SMUGGLING CHINAMEN

Sarnia, Windsor and Niagara Falls Are Three Big Centres

SARNIA, July 9.—One of the biggest Chinese smuggling syndicates in the country is reported to have been unearthed at Saginaw Tuesday in a ramshackle laundry building. Sarnia officials say there is no doubt but that such exists and that large motor boats and powerful autos are used to get the Chinamen from Canada to the United States by way of Port Huron.

It is well known here that this city is one of the three shipping points in the Celestial traffic. The other two points are Windsor and Niagara Falls. For instance, Lee Sing will arrive in Sarnia and start a laundry. Inside of a week's time a party of five or six Chinamen will come and visit him. They hang around two or three days and then disappear. Later Lee Sing sells his laundry to another Chinaman, and he, too, disappears. Lee Sing is none other than one of the many Chinese agents of the smuggling syndicate which has its main headquarters in Hong Kong, China.

The Sarnia authorities are more or less familiar with the traffic, but it is not Canada's business to prevent a Chinaman from leaving the country. In fact, it is a source of satisfaction, and, although any number of Chinamen may be under suspicion, the Canadian merely shrugs his shoulders and pays no more attention to the matter. It is alleged that Point Edward, or more particularly Sarnia Bay, is a locality from which more than one Chinaman is taken across to Port Huron in launches.

FATHER ACCUSED BY DAUGHTER

Kingston Constables Capture Him By Ruse

KINGSTON, Ont., July 9.—Charged with crime by one of his daughters, David Green, 60, who lives at Bedford Mills, 30 miles from Kingston, and who is employed as a guide for fishermen and hunters, was arrested at his home yesterday morning by County Constable Robert Smith and City Constable Marshall Armstrong and brought to the police station. The accused was regarded as a desperate character and officers went well armed. Under a ruse they wanted him as a guide. They got Green to row them from his home across Buck Lake, and there they placed handcuffs on him. Although an old man he put up a lively fight and swore that, had he known they were policemen, he would have shot them. It is stated that for nights he has been sleeping near his door with a shotgun and revolver handy, he having got wind that the police were on his trail.

Accused has a family of eleven children and there are four girls.

SCOTTISH SHRINE IS ATTACKED

Militants Endeavor to Blow Up Burns' Birthplace

GLASGOW, Scotland, July 9.—An attempt to destroy the cottage at Ayr, where Robert Burns, the Scottish poet, was born, Jan. 25, 1759, was made just before daylight yesterday, by two members of a militant suffragette "arson squad."

The two women were surprised by a night watchman as they were in the act of placing bombs against the doors and windows of the poet's birthplace, which is venerated as a shrine by the Scottish nation. The man captured one of the militants, but the other escaped.

The women wore stockings over their shoes, in order to deaden the noise and hide their footprints.

The arrested woman gave her name as Janet Arthur. She created a noisy scene when arraigned at the police court, fighting the wardens and shouting quotations from Burns' poems. She was remanded.

FRENCH WORKMEN GET HALF HOLIDAY

PARIS, July 9.—The Senate by a vote of 246 to 20 yesterday adopted a bill providing for a Saturday half-holiday in the state workshops. This bill had already passed the Chamber of Deputies in spite of strong opposition from the finance committee, which took the ground that the granting of a half holiday to state workers would render such action obligatory among private industries.

The Premier Viviani denied. Social reform, he said, could not be imposed by legislation unless already partially adopted by custom.

Roosevelt Still Declines.

NEW YORK, July 9. — For two hours yesterday the Progressive leaders of New York State used every argument at their command to force Col. Roosevelt to agree that he would accept the nomination of governor. After it was all over, Col. Roosevelt said that he had nothing to say at this time and would not change his previous statements declining to run. It was understood that the question was still an open one, with the colonel continuing to stand out against the proposal that he head the state ticket.

A Hindoo child of seven may, it is said, be a skilled workman.

THE MARKETS

CHICAGO, July 8.—Belief that the government crop report would prove bearish acted as a weight today on the wheat market. The report itself, which came after trading was at an end, turned out even more adverse to the bulls than had been expected. Closing prices were heavy, 3-8c to ½c under last night. Corn prices finished 1-4c to 5-8c net higher. Oats 1-8c off to 3-8c up, and provisions varying from unchanged figures to a rise of 12½c.

Choice butchers' steers, $8.25 to $8.45; good, $8 to $8.25; medium, $7.40 to $7.90; common grassers, $6 to $7; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.25 to $6.75; medium, $5.75 to $6; common, $4.75 to $5.25; canners, $3.50 to $3.50; bulls, $6 to $7.

Stockers and Feeders.

Choice feeders were quoted at $6.75 to $7; good at $6.25 to $6.50; medium, $6 to $6.25; stockers, $5.75 to $6.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate supply met an almost indifferent demand and prices ranged from $60 to $85 each, the bulk going at $60 to $70 each.

Veal Calves.

Prices were very firm, as the demand was greater than the supply. Choice calves, $10 to $10.50; choice, extra new milk-fed veals, $11; good, $9 to $9.50; medium, $8 to $8.50; common, $7 to $7.75; inferior, $6.50 to $7.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts of about 2000 sheep and lambs caused prices to decline considerably, especially for lambs, which have been selling at exorbitant values considering the season. Light ewes sold at $5 to $6; heavy ewes and rams, $3.50 to $4.50; culls, $3 to $4; spring lambs, $8.50 to $9.50.

Hogs.

The hog market ruled steady to firm. Selects, fed and watered, $8.40; weighed off cars, $8.65 to $8.65; f.o.b. cars at $8 to $8.10.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Demand for butchers for small lots was fair, choice steers selling at from $8.50 to $8.75, good at $8 to $8.25, fair at $7 to $7.50 and the lower grades at from $5.50 to $6.50 per 100 pounds. The demand for butchers' cows was better than usual, and sales of choice stock were made at $7.50 to $7.75 and the more common grades at from $5.75 to $7, while bulls ranged from $5.50 to $7.75 per 100 pounds.

In sympathy with the decline of 25c per 100 pounds for hogs in the Toronto market, an easier feeling was evident and prices ruled 15c to 25c per hundred lower. Demand was fair, and sales of selected lots were made at $9 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars. The trade in small meats was fairly active, and the tone of the market was steady with no change to note in prices.

Sales of yearling lambs were at $6.75 to $7 and ewe sheep at $5.25 to $5.50 per 100 pounds, while spring lambs sold readily at $6 to $7 each, as to size and quality. The demand for calves was good, with sales of milk fed at 6c to 8c, and good grass fed at 5½c per pound live weight.

At 72 Murdered Husband.

LONDON, July 9.—Jealousy and crime in declining years were described on Tuesday in an extraordinary case at the Chester Assizes, where a woman seventy-two years old was sentenced to death for the murder of her husband. She excused herself by alleging a love affair on the part of her husband with another woman.

The jury strongly recommended the woman to mercy, and it is unlikely that the sentence will be carried into effect.

Carried Nitro in Auto.

FINDLAY, Ohio, July 8.—Charles Armstrong and F. B. Longsbaugh, all well-shooters, were instantly killed yesterday morning by the explosion of several hundred quarts of nitroglycerine which they were taking to Buckland to shoot an oil well. The men were literally blown to atoms. Not a shred of flesh an inch square can be found, and the automobile in which the explosive was being transported, only a small piece of the axle is left.

EIGHT MILES OF NET SEIZED

BROCKVILLE, Ont., July 9.—George Toner, the fishery inspector who watches this district of the St. Lawrence river, had just returned from an official trip. His biggest haul was made near Fiddlers' Elbow where he seized six sets of gill nets and four sets of hopp nets.

So far this season he has captured 63 sets of gill nets, two sets of trap nets and 17 night lines, measuring eight miles.

PADDING REACHES $68,000.

Evidence Shows That Railway Accounts Were Doctored.

FREDERICTON, N.B., July 9.—The amount to be deduced from the reported cost of the Southampton Railway, on which the double subsidy was paid as a result of the inaccurate report of the Federal department's engineer, has reached $68,000, according to the partial evidence of one of the engineers appointed to ascertain the cost of the road.

To this can be added $28,000 on other items on which the commissioner has deducted that excess amounts were reported.

Other items, amounting to almost one-third of the reported cost of the road, are still to be compared.

Evidence was given before Commissioner R. A. Pringle yesterday by Gordon Grant, Claude McDonald, John Murray and Ernest Stairs, all of whom assisted in the work of construction; George Pinder, son of J. K. Pinder, M.P.P., the president of the road; and B. G. Kilburn, an expert engineer, who assisted in the valuation of the road on the instruction of the commissioner.

Mr. Pringle took the work in his own hands and made rapid progress in securing definite evidence. By comparisons between evidence already given and Mr. Johnson's report, startling discrepancies were shown. Some of these counsel for the railway admitted, and others he left with them to find an explanation, if they could. Mr. Kilburn's evidence, a careful comparison of Mr. Johnson's report with the result of the personal investigation made by himself and two other engineers, was clear-cut and unshakable, and in most cases was supported by official documents or the evidence of the contractors.

Commissioner Pringle's estimate of the time required to complete the inquiry is lengthening out, and he now fixes Friday as the day on which he hopes to conclude the hearing.

The Armenian Alphabet.

An Armenian girl goes to school at four or five years old, but before that she has probably learned her "letters," which is almost an education in itself, as the Armenian alphabet contains thirty-nine. She learns these letters from a small slab of wood on which they are printed. This slab is fastened to a handle, making it something like a hairbrush in shape. The Armenians boast that their formidable alphabet is so perfect as to give every sound known to any other nation.

Burn Silk Before Buying.

Why did your last year's silk split and crack?

Because it was adulterated.

You might have tested it easily before purchasing and saved both money and worry.

A piece of silk and a match are all you need for the test. Light the match and apply it to the fabric. If it holds its shape the silk is adulterated with some of the various minerals used. If it runs together in a puffy mass the silk is pure.

A Slight Difference.

The globe trotter was telling about the wonders of India.

"The scenery in some portions of the country," he said, with enthusiasm, "is incomparable. Far, far away, the mountains pile up toward the sky, and stretching off to them are beautiful valleys, while close at hand you can get in sight of a man eating tiger"—

"I beg your pardon," interrupted an eager listener, "but did you say inside of a man eating tiger or in sight of one?"

The Uncertain Sex.

The car was crowded. The lady stood in the aisle—a fate that often attends ladies who board cars late in the afternoon.

The lady stood for some time and a considerable distance. Then a man arose and motioned her to his seat.

"Thank you," said the lady.

"Not at all," said the man.

She didn't like the man's tone. It lacked warmth. It sounded like the voice of a man who had a secret reason for doing a reluctant kindness.

Why did he give up the seat? Did she look haggard, old, decrepit, or was it because she had appealing coquettish and flippant? Oh, if she only knew why the man had broken over the unwritten masculine rule and released his seat to her!

He had given her his seat because he was going to leave the car.

WELSH HAD ONLY HIT FOR PETES IN FINAL CONTEST

WITH everything breaking for him as usual, and Brown pitching a one-hit game, Erie took the third game of the series from the Petes at Riverside yesterday afternoon. The game was played in record time of one hour and seven minutes. Ken Tracey allowed only four hits, and with any kind of a break would have won his game. Three costly errors by the infield resulted in the Sailors coming out on top of Admiral Perry's flag ship.

Erie came through in the fifth for the first tallies, when Gygli walked, McNeal scratched a short hit past Tracey, going to first. Paton sacrificed, and was called out at first on a close decision. Harris was chased from the coaching lines for crabbing. Behan hit through short, scoring Gygli and McNeal. Carney flied to Stewart. Brown drove one to Blount. Two runs.

In the sixth Blount lifted one to Paton. Welsh drove a single across second, securing the first and only hit. Dolan rolled one down in front of the plate and was out at first. Stewart was out, Brown to Gygli. No runs, no hits or errors.

In the ninth Dolan, the big boy on the initial sack made a sensational bare hand grab of Fox's throw from short.

Dawson made a fine running catch of Dolan's long hit to deep centre field in the first, when the big boy smashed the pill almost to the score board.

RUNNER HELD AT THIRD BASE ON WILD PEG

Run Would Have Given De Lavals Win Over Red Caps

PROTEST ENTERED

Theoretically, the atmosphere took on the shade of the sky on a balmy summer's day, as the Mercantile League game between the Red Caps and De Laval came to a conclusion at Riverside Park last evening. There was a whole lot of fun for the small brigade of fans, and the sequel will be another argument at the next meeting of the league. It was four runs to three in favor of the Red Caps, when the De Laval came to bat for the last time. Pete Spratt was on third base and Kenneally at second, the latter having a good lead off the bag, when Fallon hit down third. Spratt beat it for home, and the thirdbaseman fielded the ball to first. Kenneally had almost reached the third bag when the ball was thrown. It was a wild throw, and Kenneally romped home. Manager Jack Pilling made a bee-line to the umpire, demanding that the runner be returned to third, and Umpire Andrews gave this decision. But the De Lavals were "from Missouri." The result was a general howl, but the game was finished with Kenneally being stranded at third and the score standing 4 to 4. The De Laval claim that the run should have scored.

Rule 72, Sec. 2, says: In all cases where there are no spectators on the playing field, and where a thrown ball goes into a stand for spectators, or over or through any fence surrounding the playing field, or into the players' bench (whether the ball rebounds into the field or not), the runner or runners shall be entitled to two bases. The umpire in awarding such bases shall be governed by the position of the runner or runners at the time the throw is made.

GENE HURTUBISE TO TRY JOHN KOLONIS

"Gene" Hurtubise, the local wrestler of a few years back, will meet John Kolonis, the Greek, who is with Washburn's Midway Shows, to-night. The bouts will be five, ten and fifteen minute ones, and if the local "kid" can stay the full thirty minutes he will be given an opportunity for a match to the finish on Saturday evening.

Last night Kolonis threw Ross, one time middleweight champion of Canada, in 47 minutes. There are hundreds of local fans going to be on hand to-night to see the Greek tussle with the Peterboro giant.

A SIX-PASSENGER MOTOR CAR ON TWO WHEELS

This car is creating a sensation on the streets of London. It is successfully balanced on two wheels by the gyroscope. It seats six people and was built by an English firm for the inventor, Dr. Pierre Schilowski, a Russian engineer, who is sitting beside the driver. The car weight three tons, the gyroscope wheel being very heavy.

Ottawa Free Press.
Ottawa, July 6th, 1914.
The Sporting Editor—
Ottawa Free Press.

Dear Sir,—Will yous be good enough to let me know, for the enlightenment of myself and about twenty-five other baseball fans with whom I have discussed the subject, by what species of baseball brains did the manager of the Ottawa baseball team on Saturday last withdraw Shockcor from the box in the third inning of the first game? Shockcor was in a hole due to errors of Nill rather than to any fault in his pitching. Also, why did the same manager leave Peterson in the box in the eighth inning when he was plainly in a worse position than Shockcor was in the third inning?

Will you also please tell me why Dolan was not credited with an error for his dropping of the ball in the second inning, which was plainly responsible for the two runs scored by London in that inning?

I may add that I am an ardent follower of the Ottawa team, but in common with many others I believe in honesty, and it would be much better if the Ottawa team would procure an official scorer who could at least distinguish between an error and a hit, also between an error made by certain favorites and an error made by others who are not favorites. Also, when the manager is roasted, it would be more becoming to him if he kept his cap on. The fans do not care to see if his hair is properly combed or not.

Also please do not praise the manager for every game won and roast someone else for every game lost.

FAN.

(If "Fan" really saw the game, he must suffer from near-sightedness. Nill's boots came long after Shockcor was taken out and it was due to them Peterson grew wild. If Fan showed less animus toward a manager who has given Ottawa two pennants and is doing his utmost toward a third, he would be a better sport. Roasting is a poor way to show one's appreciation).

AN ODD COINCIDENCE in connection with the battle between the British lightweight champion, Freddie Welsh, and the American titleholder, Willie Ritchie, is the fact that yesterday was the birthday of Tom Cribb, one of the greatest English battlers who ever lived.

In the cemetery at Woolwich, England, the "tripper" may see a magnificent monument representing a gigantic British lion grieving over the remains of a dead hero. The colossal memorial, weighing 20 tons, is the most imposing in the cemetery, and the "tripper" would probably conclude that it marked the last resting place of one of England's greatest warriors. A perusal of the inscription would sustain his guess, for it reads:

"Sacred to the memory of Thomas Cribb; born July 8, 1781, died May 11, 1848." A tablet asks the reader to respect the ashes of the brave."

Yesterday marked the 133rd anniversary of the birth at Hanham, in Gloucestershire, of the hero who has thus been honored. Tom Cribb was champion of England for fifteen years, and retired from the ring undefeated—a record that has never been equalled by any other champion before or since. He was the hero of a dozen terrific bare-knuckle battles, and only once tasted defeat, and that when he was a novice at the game. His first victories were scored over George Maddox, Tom Blake and Ikey Pig, the latter a pioneer Jewish boxer. He was defeated by George Nicholls, but in 1807 he whipped Jem Belcher, the old champion, and claimed the title. After defeating George Horton and fighting a draw with Bob Gregson, Cribb again administered a defeat to Belcher. After that he could get no man to meet him, until Tom Molineaux, a big Virginia negro, arrived in London and challenged Cribb to battle for the world's title. The dinge had been a slave, but had won his freedom by whipping another black man in America. Molineaux easily defeated several good English boxers, and the sports of London feared he would make good his boast of being the best fighter in the world. As a matter of fact, he whipped Cribb, but in a row which followed Cribb was permitted to recover and continue the bout. The black was unaccumstomed to cold weather, and in the end he succumbed to the English climate rather than to Cribb. Dissipation ruined the first American contender for the title, and in a second bout Cribb won easily. Cribb held the title eleven years more without having to fight, and retired in 1822. Cribb was the hero of George Borrok's novel, "Lavengro," and of a dramatic sketch, long popular, called "Tom Cribb's Parlor."

He Had Been Looking.

"Mother," said Bobby, after a full week of obedience, "have I been a good boy lately?"

"Yes, dear," replied his mother. "A very, very good boy."

"And do you trust me?" he continued.

"Why, of course, mother trusts her little boy!" she answered.

But the chastened child was not pacified. "I mean really, really trust me, you know," he explained.

"Yes, I really, really trust you," nodded his mother. "Why do you ask?"

"Just because," said Bobby, diving his hands into his pockets and looking her in the face. "If you trust me like you say you do, why do you go on hiding the jam?"—Intermountain Catholic.

ABOUT GROCERS ON THE WEEKLY HALF HOLIDAY

Falling in line with cities where the grocery business is carried on in an up-to-date manner, the local retail grocers, or more correctly speaking, the majority of local retail grocers, have decided to close their doors on every Thursday afternoon and evening during the months of July and August. The step itself is to be commended for grocery clerks' duties are of such duration that a half holiday is quite desirable.

They invariably report in the morning at seven or seven-thirty and, under existing conditions in this city, they labor till late at night. Saturday evening when factory employes are enjoying a few hours of rest, they work the hardest of any night of the week.

All would have been well had every grocer thought himself duty bound to stand by the majority, but this was not the case. A few have practically settled it with "I'm not going to close," while a few more bring out the suggestion of closing from one till five. Granted that the times have been hard and money scarce, how much will it swell the deposits in the cash register by keeping open? The trouble is that a great many dealers cater too much to the convenience of their customers, which is proper to a certain degree, but customers should not run the store. Groceries are a necessity, not a luxury, and if the citizens don't get them on Thursday afternoon, why they'll get them at another time.

If one grocer on a corner stays open, why it's only logical that the man across the road from him will stay open too, hence if all do not close, all will remain open. It may be possible that in the course of another week a few of the hesitating ones will see their folly and fall in line, if they don't, the citizens should have enough consideration to deal with the grocers who use their clerks and employes like human beings, and these grocers are the ones who are observing a holiday on the Thursday afternoons and evenings during the months of July and August.

PUT CARBOLIC IN THE WATER

The Suggestion of the Sanitary Inspector

Alderman Saunders brought up a matter at the meeting of the Board of Works last night which caused more or less discussion. It was the laying of a sidewalk on the east side of George Street from Lake to Perry Streets. It appears that there are but two property owners along that block and one is in favor of the sidewalk but the other is not. The matter was left over till Friday night's meeting.

A request from Mr. Reynolds for sidewalk on Gilchrist Street from London to Dublin gave cause to Alderman Duffus, moving that all sidewalks wanted this year must be applied for before next Wednesday. The motion carried. Notice of this will appear in the advertising columns of the local press.

Use Carbolic.

A letter was received from Sanitary Inspector Spence requesting that carbolic acid be put in the water of the watering carts so as to act as a disinfector. It would, the letter stated, kill many germs now prevalent. No action was taken.

The Board received a communication from E. G. Patterson, asking why something had not been done by the Board when they received a largely signed petition some weeks ago requesting that Hunter Street be paved from Aylmer Street to Belmont Avenue. City Engineer explained to the Board that a great deal of work including surface drains, etc., must be completed on Hunter Street before any pavement could be laid. On motion of Mayor Buller and Alderman Stratton the City Clerk was requested to write Mr. Patterson explaining the situation and assuring him that the request will be considered when the next work along the line of street paving is commenced.

TO DEVELOP POWER ON FRENCH RIVER

Sir Adam Beck Promises Power for the North.

Berlin, Ont., July 9.—The annual banquet of the Board of Trade was held last night at the Bridgeport Casino, and attended by over 100 members. President L. J. Breithaupt presided. Many representatives from neighboring cities and towns were present. Sir Adam Beck was the chief speaker, but owing to the lateness of the hour was brief in his remarks. Speaking of the expansion of the hydro-electric system, he said it was the intention of the commission to develop power along the French River, and they had recently received an order for 10,000 horsepower from the British-American Nickel Mining Corporation, and he felt satisfied that when the waste water of the French River were utilized it would prove a boon to northern Ontario in the way of cheap power.

CAPTAIN LEWIS ON MEXICAN CONDITIONS

Retired U. S. Officer, Author and Motorist Describes Revolution In Mexico

Captain Stanley Lewis, of the Washburn Carnival's managerial force, whose vermillion automobile (the celebrated "Mitchell Range" which carried the U. S. Government's famous transcontinental dispatch from General Leonard Wood at Governor's Island, N.Y., to Gen. John F. Weston, at San Francisco), has attractd much attention on the streets, gave the Review to-day an interesting description of conditions in modern Mexico; a subject which he is eminently qualified to discuss, having held commission for years in the Arizona Rangers, who are similar in scope to our Northwest Mounted Police. The Captain is a veteran of the Spanish-American War, having been a Major in the Cuban Army under Maceo and Gomez before the declaration of war by the United States, and bears several scars sustained in the performance of his duty in Cuba and later along the Arizona border. He is also an honorary member of the 18th Highlanders—(the Galt Kilties), and a well known author of military stories for the Munsey magazines.

"The Mexican people are naturally peaceable," said Capt. Lewis. "When Hernando Cortez landed, he crushed the Aztec civilization, tortured and robbed thousands of the natives, and murdered their king, Yontezuna. A small fraction of the Aztecs escaped to the mountains, amalgamated with the native Indians and produced the present race of 'Yaqui' Indians, who are the only warlike people of Mexico, and who have never been conquered by either American or Spaniard. They number about 50,000, occupy fortified mountain passes, and are taking no part in the present revolution.

"Despot though he was, grafter as he may have been, stern old Porfirio Dias—himself half Indian—knew the nature of his ignorant people (not one in 15,000 of whom can read or write) and ruled them with a necessarily 'mailed fist.' About the court of Dias grew up a feudal baronry, composed of his relatives and political associates, to whom he gave vast tracts of land, and who possessed every right of a lord of the Middle Ages, over their thousands of serfs, including that of imprisonment or death without trial. Most of these immense plantations were devoted to the culture of 'henequen,' the plant from which is made the common grades of rope.

"The price of the raw material having been crowded down to the ultimate notch by the American 'cordage trust,' the planters were compelled to use unpaid labor in order to get a margin of profit. They therefore enslaved whole villages of peaceable 'peons,' rounding them up with the aid of Dias' army (which itself was recruited by conscription from the prisons), and these thousands of peon slaves toiled away the brief remnant of their unfortunate lives under the lash of brutal overseers.

"Fanned to a flame by their wrongs and financed by American sympathizers, the revolt broke; the Dias Government was overthrown; Dias himself fled to Europe with his ill-gotten millions; and the revolutionists placed in power the good-hearted and generous but visionary dreamer, Francesco Madero. Had Madero not been too tender-hearted, he would still have been President and Mexico pacified; but the doctrine of extermination was the only law his opponents could understand. He should have executed Huerta, Felix Diaz and their adherents for treason; a brutal course, but the only justifiable one under the circumstances. But he spared his opponents, and speedily himself fell a victim to the unspeakable Huerta, as did his vice-president, Pino Juarez.

Then arose Zapata in the south, Orosco in the north and Villa and Carranza between; bandits all, whose watchword was loot, and who were responsible to no central government. Orosco was finally eliminated by the more able Villa, who nevertheless cannot write his own name; Carranza, in his dotage, arrogant with conquest, with the querulous persistency of the aged and ignorant, jealous of Villas successes; Villa, a modern Robin Hood, who robs the rich to give to the poor, the idol of the "peons," is the one man who can bring order out of chaos if let alone. His principal drawback, Fierro, the 'Butcher,' has been killed; and if as he says) he will withdraw all claim to the presidency in event of his success, and be content to serve as commander-in-chief of the army under what ever president may be elected by the people, there is a prosperous future in store for Mexico."

A visit to the carnival grounds last night by the Review representative disclosed the fact that the shows are doing an immense business since Tuesday. Nothing but expressions of commendation for the Washburn enterprise are heard upon the streets, the excellence of the various exhibitions, the ladylike and gentlemanly department of the people, and the absence of gambling, intoxication and profanity, has made many friends for Mr. Washburn and his associates in Peterboro.

While in the Review office, Capt. Lewis, who is a clever artist, made a cartoon of Chief Thompson administering chastisement to a delinquent youth, which is on exhibition in the window of the business office.

LIEUT. PORTE GIVES NIXOLA GREELEY-SMITH EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW FOR THE REVIEW ON HOW HE'LL FLY ACROSS THE DARK AND LONESOME OCEAN

Tells Her How They'll Keep House, How They'll Cook, What They'll Eat, How They'll Sleep and What They'll Do If the Flying Boat Goes to the Bottom.

BY NIXOLA GREELEY-SMITH.

(Copyright, 1914, by the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

New York, N.Y., July 10.—If Lieutenant John C. Porte doesn't succeed in crossing the Atlantic ocean in the aeroplane America, then nobody ever will!

This is my opinion after talking with the modest young Irishman who is about to attempt the first over-sea flight from America to Europe, thus returning via aeroplane the first social call made by Christopher Columbus!

He has just given me an exclusive interview. I made a special arrangement with the New York World, to whom Porte is under contract.

One of the first things Lieutenant Porte told me is that he is Irish, not English, as some American papers have assumed just because he holds a commission in the British army.

He Was Born in Cork, a Whole Life Preserver in Itself!

"I was born in Cork. Nothing could be more Irish than that!" he remarked.

And I thought, being frivolous minded, that if any man could float to immortal fame in a flying-boat, it would be a man from Cork! For there's nothing like having a birthplace that's a whole life-preserver in itself!

"There is but one danger in this attempt at crossing the Atlantic in an aeroplane," said the lieutenant. "That's the Atlantic itself! If we should have an accident to the motor and the waves should break our boat, it would be impossible for us to attract the attention of a ship that might rescue us.

"We shall carry rockets in the boat, of course, but you can't send up rockets, you know, when you're swimming around in the Atlantic!"

The young man who will be known to history as the Flying Irishman merely chuckled to himself at the absurdity of expecting a rescue, once his winged boat had crushed its life out in a pounding sea.

Has No Girl to Leave Behind Him.

"You expect to succeed, though," I said. "You don't anticipate failure?"

"I hope to succeed," the young officer replied. (If he does he will win a $50,000 prize offered by the London Daily Mail.)

"Are you married?" I inquired. You see I just had to know about the girl he will leave behind him when he starts on his perilous flight.

"Not so far as I know," replied the aeroplanist, "and I think I would know, don't you? If I succeed, there'll be no woman to share my success. If I fail—well, no one else will be the loser by it."

"The America will be a sort of bachelor's hall during the flight, won't it? Who is doing to do your house-keeping while you're afloat over the Atlantic?" I inquired.

"We'll take turns at that," Lieutenant Porte replied. "They're be two of us, you know, and one man will steer while the other takes a bite of something."

"What will the 'something' be?"

Porte Tells What They'll Have to Eat.

"We'll have hot coffee in thermos bottles and quantities of fresh eggs and some tabloid foods for emergencies—in the event of an accident, you know. I won't say that there may not be a little champagne in the thermos bottles, as well as coffee!"

The lieutenant's clear blue eyes twinkled as he said this, and I gave a sigh of relief! I should hate to think of Secretary Daniels' grape-juice order being enforced in the Aerial Navy!

"We expect to make the flight from St. John's, Newfoundland, to the Azores in 20 hours," he added, "and there we shall take on fresh food supplies and more gasoline. We will carry mattresses so that one of us at a time may rest a bit. From Azores we'll fly towards Spain, stopping at Vigo, near the Portuguese coast, Then, after renewing our supplies, we begin the last flight to Plymouth harbor."

"That will mean victory," I said—"an American victory. Don't you mind winning a victory for another country?"

Porte Explains How Enterprise is International.

"No," said Lieutenant Porte. "You see it's an American aeroplane, steered by an Irishman for an English prize. That makes it international in a way. Besides isn't an Irishman half an American anyway?"

The man who will go along with Lieutenant Porte on his perilous, record-breaking sky journey is George E. A. Hallett, an engine expert and a competent aviator himself.

Hallett is 24 years old, a cool, nervy young fellow who hails from Southern California.

CONTRACT FOR LAST LINK OF TRENT VALLEY CANAL

Section Three of Severn Division Is Awarded to Toronto Firm at $901,141

Ottawa, July 10.—The contract for the final link in the Trent Conal system was let yesterday to the Randolph-Macdonald Company, of Toronto, at $901,141.

This is section three of the Severn River division, and the letting of the contract means that in little more than a year the Trent Canal will be completed from Lake Ontario to the Georgian Bay.

The completion of the canal was delayed by the Laurier Government for political reasons. The Trent Canal will develop a large tourist traffic, besides helping in the grain movement.

LEG FRACTURED IN TWO PLACES

Horses Frightened and Lad Was Thrown Off Rake

Alfred Parker, a twelve-year-old employe of Mr. David McMann, Emily, was very seriously injured yesterday afternoon while driving a horse rake. He was going up a lane leading to McMann's house when the rake struck a stone and jolted, frightening the team. They made a wild dash for liberty and in running swerved in too close to the fence, with the result, the rake struck a post. Parker was thrown out and when picked up a few minutes later his left leg seemed to be fractured.

Dr. Thompson of Omemee, was sent for, and when he arrived, he immediately sent for Comstock's Ambulance, to convey the injured boy to Nicholls Hospital. The lad was found to have his leg fractured in two places, but reports from the hospital this morning state that he is resting very comfortably. Dr. McPherson is attending him.

The horse came through without a scratch, although the rake was demolished.

RESIDENCES ARE ENTERED BY THIEVES

Intruder Made Hasty Retreat From Aylmer Street Home

Housebreaking was committed in the southern section of the city last night resulting in goods including jewelery and valuables to the extent of nearly $100 being stolen by a gang supposed to have come to the city recently.

The houses near the corner of Aylmer and Sherbrooke suffered extensively. The home of B. F. Ackerman was entered and ramsacked but nothing of value was reported missing. The entrance had been obtained by the rear window.

The home of R. Sheehy, Rubidge Street, was entered and two watches taken and other small articles of minor value. The thieves in their haste in this case overlooked a pair of trousers on a chair containing a roll of bills amounting to $100. J. H. Liddell in conversation with the Review stated that the intruders had forced an entrance into his house by the rear door. His son Elmer Liddel who sustained injuries recently in the train accident when Jas. Cowie was instantly killed, was reading and smoking in his bedroom near the top of the stairs. He noticed the intruder who was dressed in a light suit wearing a gray felt hat. He jumped out of bed to chase the man who disappeared down the stairs taking with him an armful of clothes.

He made his exit by the rear entrance of the house. D. Leal who resides on Aylmer Street stated that a party entered his residence by the front door which was unlocked and took clothes and other small articles of value.

Several other residents claim that their houses were entered but nothing was stolen.

NO PLAN FOR PARLIAMENT

Ulster Provincial Government Is Not Meant To Be Permanent

BELFAST, July 10.—The first meeting since it was formed of the Ulster provisional Government has been called for to-day at the request of Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader.

According to Col. James Craig, the result of the meeting will have an improved bearing on the Irish situation, but he declared that there is no intention on the part of the Ulsterites, whatever happens, to set up a Parliament for themselves in Ulster. They claimed the right merely to hold the province in trust for the constitution of the United Kingdom in order that Ulster should continue to be an integral portion of the British Empire.

COL. CRAIG.

Th clauses of the constitution of the provisional government, which until now have not been disclosed, expressly provide that "upon the restoration of the direct Imperial Government, the provisional government shall cease to exist."

TRAFFIC CENSUS TAKERS WILL GO OVER PROVINCE

To Determine Proportion of Cost To Be Borne

BY CITIES AND TOWNS

Highways Commission Program Is Progressing

TORONTO, July 10—The program of the Ontario Highways Commission is rapidly taking shape, and officials expect that by the end of the summer preliminary construction gangs will be sent out on the roads. In two weeks a temporary staff of traffic census-takers will be distributed among the cities of the province to study the demands of the different centres and to determine the share which each city should take in the support of the highways running out into the respective counties.

These men will be especially detailed to settle the size of the suburban areas containing roads which are of unusual importance to city business, and for which the civic councils will be expected to provide maintenance.

The staff of census-takers will be supplemented as occasion demands and a chief officer will be stationed at commission headquarters to tabulate reports for final consideration. The census taken prior to the published plans was designed altogether form a rural standpoint. The idea in view was to gain information as to the needs of the farming community in the getting of their products to the nearest market centres. In the tabulation no notice was taken of automobile traffic. This, however, is increasing daily in Ontario, and is being recognized as one of the most important factors to be dealt with.

As far as actual construction in the province is concerned, activities this summer will be slight, the energy of the regular Government Department and the commission merging towards the one end. A Government demonstration highway is now nearing completion in the vicinity of Aylmer.

FIRE AT BRIDGENORTH.

The village of Bridgenorth was given a little scare yesterday afternoon when the school bell sent out an appeal across the waves of heat, summoning the residents to a fire in Jopling's abattoir. Luckily the flames had made but little headway and were extinguished before any great damage resulted. Residents are very thankful that the fire did not get a start for as things are so dry it might have been very disastrous.

PROTECTION FOR THE SOUTH IRISH UNIONISTS LEFT OVER

Lord Lansdowne Says Majority In Lords Are Concentrating Their Endeavors on Averting Civil Strife in the Northern Counties---Committee Stage of Debate Is Concluded.

LONDON, July 10.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The committee stage of the amended bill closed last night. Nearly all of the most important amendments had been disposed of on Wednesday, and the greater part of last evening's sitting was spent in discussing the proposals which the opposition leaders do not regard as essential for meeting the great need of the moment, the prevention of civil war.

On this point Lord Lansdowne made an important statement. He told the House that he and his friends had considered whether they should put down amendments for safeguarding the interests of the Unionist minority in the south and west. They had come to the conclusion that in view of the present situation in Ireland it was in the public interest that they should concentrate their amendments entirely on the question of avoiding civil strife.

"We should complicate the issue and divert public attention from the main question," he said, "if we made ourselves responsible for a number of other proposals designated to protect the Unionists in the south and west."

He reserved the right of supporting any of the other amendments, but he pointed out that the responsibility of his friends and himself for such other amendment would be wholly different from their responsibility for the amendments that they had themselves put down.

"To the amendments," he said, "we shall certainly adhere as being absolutely vital. With regard to the others we can only give them our general support."

Lord Lansdowne did not say whether he included among the absolutely vital amendments the proposals made by Lord Halsbury the previous night to set aside those provisions of the bill which sanctioned the appointment of judges by the Irish Parliament and the substitution of appeals to the Privy Council for appeals to the House of Lords.

Discussion of this proposal was now resumed.

Lord Middleton expressed the opinion that justice in Ireland would become a sham if the appointment of judges was given to the Irish Parliament. He wanted to know why if Ulster was to e excluded, Ulstermen should not have the same appeal as they have at present to the House of Lords.

Lord Crewe, for the Government, would not hold out any hope that this appeal would prove effectual. He remarked that an Irish executive would be set up to look after peace, order and good government. It would be difficult to persuade Home Rulers that Parliament ought to withdraw from them the appointment of the judiciary. The amendments were carried by 66 to 42. Another amendment carried was that the control of the Royal Irish Constabulary should not pass to the Irish Parliament.

CLAIMS BEFORE LEGAL COMMITTEE

Toronto Free Hospital Asks For $50

The claim of Mrs. Jane Welsh for $50 damages resulting from an accident on Charlotte Street was referred to the City Solicitor at the meeting of the Legal Committee last evening.

A letter was read from Robinette, Godfrey and Phelan of Toronto, claiming $50 for their client, the Toronto Free Hospital for Consumptives, for the maintenance of Bessie Montgomery of this city up to June 30th. A report was also read from the City Solicitor to the effect that from facts given to him he was inclined to think that the city was not liable.

He was instructed to contest any claim in connection with the matter.

A communication was received from the Peterborough Light and Power Company regarding poles they had been required to remove and stating that the matter of the cost would be disposed of later.

No action was taken in regard to the letter of W. J. Stacey of Vancouver, regarding the entertaining of the Australian party who will pass through this city.

A report was received from the City Solicitor regarding the claim for damages of S. J. Hickey, arising out of an accident on George Street. No action was taken.

Messrs. O'Connell and Corkery wrote the Board suggesting that a by-law be passed, apointing a fence viewer and for making fence regulations. The matter was referred to the City Solicitor.

Mr. O. De Laplante, on behalf of his clients, wrote the Comittee claiming damages for $100 for his clients, the Peterborough Hardware Company, for damage to property due to water on June 27 and 28. The City Solicitor was asked to report on the matter.

NEARLY READY

Virtual Completion of Anglo-American Pact

LONDON, July 10—American Ambassador Page, speaking at the Peace Centenary meeting in the Metropolitan Tabernacle last night, made reference to a new treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. Page said it was the policy of the American people to have an alliance with none; where there was perfect friendship alliances were not needed.

AMBASSADOR PAGE.

The old arbitration treaty between the two countries, however, had been renewed for another period, and he was free to announce that a new treaty was being concluded whereby a commission was to be set up, to which either Government could refer any question arising between them. Both Governments, he added, promised not to begin hostilities until this commission had investigated matters and submitted its report.

That treaty the ambassador declared, was now virtually completed. The announcement evoked a great outburst of cheers.

Chief Short has received word from the authorities to this effect as well as a description of the prisoner. Wilson, whose home was in Hamilton, received a six months' sentence from Police Magistrate Jackson.

Wilson and Smith were arrested here.

JURY BLAMES CHAUFFEUR

Miss Waller's Death Due To Negligence

TORONTO, July 10.—"That Miss Ella Waller came to her death from injuries received by being crushed when a train struck a motor car in which she was riding, and that the said injuries were caused by reason of the negligence of the said motor car driver, and that the said Samuel D. Kennedy did in the manner aforesaid unlawfully kill and slay aforesaid Ella Waller, and we, the jury, further state that the crossing where the accident occurred is an exceptionally dangerous one and strongly recommend the city authorities and the Railway Commission to take proper steps at this crossing in order to safeguard the general public."

Such was the verdict returned last night by the jury investigating the McClennan avenue crossing accident. Witnesses varied a good real in regard to the rate of the speed of the train, but all were agreed on the fact that the chauffeur allowed the car to proceed backward down the hill without power till it arrived at the track.

PROTECTION FOR AUTOISTS.

THE ACCIDENT which occurred in North Rosedale the other day, when Miss Ella Waller lost her life, is only one of several caused every year by unprotected railway crossings. Time was when these accidents were frequent in the case of drivers of horses, and while they still occur, yet the majority of late years have been automobile accidents.

With the increasing use of automobiles as a means of travelling, protection to autoists at railway crossings and other dangerous places should receive more attention than it has. The use of the auto is a new factor in the matter of locomotion, and should be recognized as one of increasing importance.

The place where the Rosedale accident occurred had apparently no protection in case of an auto stalling on the hill. Also the oncoming express was not noticed until too late. Had there been an electric alarm announcing the presence of a train within half a mile of the crossing, as on the T., H. & B. line, the chauffeur would not have backed on to the track in order to get a second start on the grade ahead of him. Had the hill or road been cut away so as to make a train visible before it was right at the crossing the accident would likely not have occurred. With the Government proposing a great policy of permanent road-building and recognizing the increasing use of automobiles, protection of the dangerous points should receive serious attention.

THE CRIME OF ARSON.

ARSON is a crime and the person who commits it should be punished just the same as the horse thief and the murderer. The man who fires a building, either his own or his neighbor's, does so without any guarantee that he will not cause loss of life, either in connection with the fire in the building he aims to burn or in an adjoining building. The crime of arson is a difficult one to fasten on a person, no matter how guilty he may be, for the evidence must be largely circumstantial, because no one in his right mind sets fire to property in the presence of witnesses. This fact proves a stumbling block in the way of bringing incendiaries to justice. There is a strong sentiment against the murderer, the horse thief and the violator of the prohibitory law, but the "fire bug" is looked upon as a myth in many quarters, and is regarded too often as a subterfuge manufactured by the insurance company to keep from having to pay the insurance policy. And the incendiary, instead of getting his just dues, gets sympathy in the battle with the company or with the state authority who investigates the fire.

The person who commits arson has many advantages. He usually operates in his own home or place of business, and can choose his own time and place for setting the fire. He can also prepare an alibi in advance, and can prove that he was nowhere near when the fire was discovered. If the fire is successful, from the point of view of the incendiary, the evidence burns up and there is nothing left but suspicious circumstances.

DON'T CROSS BRIDGES.

THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH is taken from La Presse, Montreal:

> "If England has not been able to assimilate the Scotch and the Welsh, which have her language and her religion, how can she hope to unify the citizens of British North America who have not her mentality and who possess also a large variety of social differences? Today we are undoubtedly and unanimously in accord on two things, the glorious presence of the flag and allegiance to the English crown. Nothing that Great Britain does in its domestic policy moves us because we are not concerned; but the day when we were made to enter upon its intimacy and we would be called upon to discuss its acts, that day would see the end of our placid and confident loyalty."

It seems to us that La Presse is rather sweeping in its statement that nothing Great Britain does in its domestic policy moves us because we are not concerned. If the editorial and news space devoted to the Ulster problem alone, is any index of our concern in the domestic affairs of Great Britain, the statement of La Presse is hardly true. The fact is that Canada is very much concerned in many of Great Britain's domestic affairs, because they have a relationship to problems in this country. For example, if Great Britain experiences a period of hard times, her buying power in Canada's market is weakened. Such a condition may be the subject of legislation and Canada is thereby affected. If a serious financial set-back came to England, Canada would feel it as quickly as any country. We are concerned, therefore, in many domestic problems, but not all, that arise in Britain.

As to discussing those problems with a view to settlement, that is another question that has yet to arise, but which may become one of the great problems in the British Empire of the future. Just what relation Canada will bear to the Mother Land under the government of a future day cannot now be foretold, but there is no use crossing bridges before we come to them, by saying that our placid and confident loyalty will end when we are called upon to discuss British domestic policy. La Presse sounds a note of Nationalism, that fears, it would appear, Imperial developments. Up to the present time, Britain's domestic policy has been handled with as much intelligence as those of other countries, and has not required Canada's participation. We are content to allow the same policy to persist as long as it is practical, and not worry about difficulties that may never arise.

AFTER GREAT WORK IS DONE.

IN SUCH ENTERPRISES as the recently-completed Los Angeles aqueduct, the new Catskill water supply of New York City, and the Panama Canal, thousands of men are brought together, organized, trained, and made efficient. When the work is completed this army is disbanded. It must find its way gradually and clumsily into other organizations and other enterprises. The economic loss of an efficient organization alone is great, but the loss of the men themselves may be greater. The period of uncertainty, the lack of employment, and finally the getting of work not well suited to them are demoralizing.

In the past, when great municipal, state, or government enterprises have been completed, the men whose services were no longer needed have had chances of employment in various private enterprises. Railroads, electric lines, water power, drainage, and irrigation projects were under way. But if the government goes on with larger and larger projects, and if private capital is restricted in the fields and in its methods until it will no longer be attracted to new projects, the balance wheel furnished by corporate employment will be crippled when it is most needed.

Thus far the alleviating measures have been confined to labor bureaus by which the man and the job are brought together. That is a phase that needs attention. But unless the general economic situation, the possibility of keeping private capital continously and profitably employed, is taken into account, the fundamental cause of unemployment will escape those who are working for its elimination.

IS AN ACCIDENT NEEDED?

THE CASE of the young man who nearly lost his life the other evening is a pointed argument for the establishment of some place where swimming should be taught. Every year there are numbers of persons, young and grown-up, who lose their lives while bathing, from getting beyond their depth. Swimming is an easy thing to learn and is always a protection in case of danger. The loss of the Empress demonstrated that fact conclusively, yet the City Council has handled the matter so aimlessly that doubtless most people and aldermen have forgotten that the question of a bathing place was ever under consideration. Will it be necessary to wait for a bad local accident before the matter is properly dealt with by the authorities?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

MAYOR McVEITY of Ottawa, who issued the order the other day that officials of the corporation were not to frequent bar-rooms and public drinking places, either on or off duty, has taken a strong stand. If he can carry out his order he is to be commended for his effort to secure efficiency. Too many people regard a job under municipal or other governments as a sinecure wherein the principal duty is to draw breath and salary. A few hard bumps are required in most places to emphasize the fact that these positions are not sinecures, but positions requiring the performance of certain duties, and, it is said Peterborough is not altogether perfect in this regard.

THE INQUEST into the death of the young baronet, Sir Denis Anson, has certainly not improved the respectability of the party. When officers of the launch were asked if any of the party were the worse for drink, they replied: "No, but they were merry." The inference naturally is that they were not very drunk.

The Mysterious Henri.

London Free Press.

The real political aims of Henri Bourassa are hard to discern. He has been a thorn in the side of both political parties; he has built up a third party, and seen it dwindle away apparently without regret. He has puzzled the French and puzzled the English. He has made men cheer and made them swear, and gone on his way unmoved. He is the idol of some of the French and anathema to others. Through it all he continues to build his political fences and bides his time. But it looks as if in the next election he must come to the front or find himself one who waited too long.

QUEER JUSTICE

By Walt Mason

When Bully Boozer beats his wife, we put him in a cell; and there he leads a pleasant life, and likes it passing well. We fill his plate with wholesome fare,, when sounds the dinner gong, and see that while he lingers there his life's a grand sweet song. We hand him magazines and books, and papers day by day, so he can loaf in cozy nooks, and read the hours away. Sweet women call and hand him tracts, and cheer him up so well that he forgets the ugly facts which put him in his cell. Meanwhile his wife, with blackened eye, is toiling o'er a tub; she has to toil, with sob and sigh, to get the children grub. Her husband, sentenced by the court, earns money when he's free, and, though he is a yellow sport, he feeds his family. Because he filled himself with ale, and started household strife, we lock him in our cozy jail, and punish kids and wife. He has the rest he's long desired, with time to read and sleep, the while the woman ,sick and tired, must work and watch and keep. Thus flows our justice in a rill—the kind we keep on tap; the innocent must pay the bill, while sinners have a snap.

ON NATIONALITY

ARTER all, there is only one nationality and that's the one to which you belong, ain't that right? It does me a sight of good ter see a man proud of his nationality, it shows that he believes he is more er less of a unit that goes to make up an impregnable whole. If his belief is strong enough you'll larn that he don't need his nation half as much as his nation needs him and that's all right too because if he didn't think it nobody else would and thinking a thing don't hurt anything or anybody. If ye haven't any nation pick out one ye think ye'd like ter shout fer and start in hollerin', then people will say that your loyal and patriotic. The older ye get the more yer goin' to realise what the people think counts fer a whole lot.

DUFFERIN TERRACE BURNS.

Spectacular Fire Destroys Almost All of Quebec Promenade.

QUEBEC, July 10. — Fire of a spectacular nature yesterday destroyed almost the whole of the Dufferin Terrace west of the bandstand and communicated itself to the house on the cliff above, doing considerable damage to the houses at each of the row, but leaving those in between practically untouched. This is accounted for by the fact that the dwellings on the extreme ends are old, wooden ones, while those in between are of more solid structure.

There was a strong east wind blowing and this kept the flames away from the Chateau Frontenac Hotel, which is situated at the east end of this magnificent promenade. Although the blaze broke out about noon it was not under control until three o'clock. The general alarm was rung in. It is thought that the fire was caused by some lighted cigar or cigarette ends which are thrown away by hundreds of promenaders.

Two firemen were overcome by smoke and had to be taken to the hospital.

A SMOKING CASE

Story of a Woman's Exchange

By EDITH V. ROSS

After Chester Barnes turned his thirtieth birthday, having tired of society, when he came to his room from business in the evening he found it irksome to get into evening dress. So he dined in business clothes, thinking he would dress after dinner for any function to which he might have been invited—for the theater, opera or whatever entertainment was in store for him. But after dinner he found it more difficult to exert himself than before and, sitting down to his evening paper or a book, failed to arise till 10 or 11 o'clock, to get into his pajamas and go to bed. After having done this quite continuously for a few months, one evening he mused thus:

"There's no use denying the fact any longer that I've outgrown social, or, rather, society, life, which is hollow, selfish and altogether unprofitable. I'm getting out of it very fast and will never go back to it. I can't marry because the girls I associate with are all brought up to spend money, and I am not earning enough to supply my own wants. As for marrying a helpmate, I can't do that because I don't know any girls of that kind. Being forced to live in bachelor quarters alone, I'll procure books from the libraries and read. But first I must get the bareness out of this room and make it as homelike as possible."

Mr. Barnes consulted with an elderly lady friend as to how he might get the "bareness" out of his room and was advised to buy a few attractive pictures to cover the walls and knickknacks to adorn his furniture. He bought the pictures, and, as for the knickknacks, he found a profusion of articles that no man would ever have thought of at a woman's exchange. One thing he purchased there which only a woman would have dreamed of (though it was useful to the sterner sex) was a case for smoker's articles made of a woolen fabric bound with silk and decorated with a number of beautiful bowknots.

Barnes laughed at this when he saw it, but bought it because it was so distinctly feminine. When he got it to his room he hung it on the wall, stringing his pipes along the chain of loops, expecting to keep them there till the smoking case became odoriferous. He also dropped a rubber tobacco pouch in a pocket probably intended for it by the fair smoker, then sat down in his easy chair to admire his decorations.

They all looked attractive and were a great improvement to the room. But there was still something wanting. Barnes knew very well what it was. He had got rid of the bareness, but not the loneliness. Going to his smoking case, he selected a pipe and took his tobacco pouch from its pocket. With it out came a bit of paper, which floated down to the floor. He picked it up and read in a feminine hand as follows:

Lonely Bachelor—If this work of my hands falls to such, I sympathize with you in your loneliness. Perhaps when you read this you will be passing an evening by yourself in your room. If so think of the girl who is doing the same after teaching all day, making things like this smoking case to help to keep herself alive. By the bye, don't you think I struck a bright idea when I thought of making it?

Ned thought she struck a brighter idea when she put this missive in it, though at first he was disposed to consider her doing so a trifle—well, a trifle irregular, but it occurred to him that a girl stupid enough to make a smoking case out of wool and silk, adorned with bowknots, might suppose she could put out such a message without her identity being discovered. However, there is something attractive to men in woman's misconception of man's requirements, and vice versa. At any rate, Ned was very much interested in his find.

He was more than interested. He was sensibly, or, rather, sentimentally, affected by the sympathy of this poor girl, who was like himself yearning for something which nature intended for her, but which she was denied. He lighted his pipe and began puffing clouds of smoke, through which he formed conceptions of her. Was she dark? Was she fair? Was she disposed to be merry? How would she look sitting on the other side of the table doing some bit of needlework, not to sell to strangers, but for some one she loved?

This simple picture grew into others, yet all of the same kind. The room became one of a number. There was a faint cry. She arose and went to an adjoining room, from which it had issued. There was a lullaby, which in a few minutes ceased. The dreamer arose and looked into the room where the woman and child were and saw the baby sleeping, the mother bending over it.

Leaving the child, they walked back, hand in hand, and, drawing a sofa before the fireplace, sat together and, whispering, laid plans, in which the little sleeper was the central figure.

The dream changed. He came home after business to meet her at the door, and she gave him a kiss mechanically, for she was troubled. She told him that their oldest child, now a boy of seven, was ill. The doctor had been called for and would soon be there. Going upstairs, the father put his hand on his child's hot brow and spoke tenderly to the little sufferer. Then he turned away, mutely pressing the mother's hand.

The doctor came, and after an examination a serious look settled on his face. Then followed a night of anxious watching and waiting, while the child tossed and moaned, and every moan cut the parents' hearts like a knife. The doctor came again in the morning and looked graver than yesterday. Before he left he told the man and wife to be prepared for the worst.

In the night a change came. Two alternatives arose before the dream, one that the woman came out of the sickroom with a blighted look on her face, saying, "It's all over." He groaned and shut the vision out by closing his eyes. When he opened them the other alternative was before him. "Ned, there is a change. He is sleeping quietly, and his skin is moist." He went to the sickroom and put his hand on the child's cheek, then turned and, clasping the mother in his arms, said fervently, "Thank God!"

Day dreams as well as those that come in sleep shift quickly. Ned saw himself prosperous, rich. He sat at one end of a dining table, his wife at the other, with children of all ages on either hand. The oldest was now a sturdy collegian, who had carried all the honors of his class; the next, a girl of nineteen, just engaged to one of her brother's classmates, while the others, boys and girls, rattled their knives and forks, making a greater clatter by all talking at once.

"Do you remember, dear," he said, "that smoking case you made of some woolen stuff bespattered with bowknots? That was the stupidest thing you ever did in your life. I can't imagine anything more ridiculous. Ha, ha!"

Ned Barnes had gradually been succumbing to the quieting influences of tobacco, and when he spoke these words he was dreaming in slumber. His loud "Ha, ha!" awakened him.

"By Jove," he exclaimed, yawning; "my dream must have been part while awake and part sleeping! I'd like to dream it all over again. No; not that part about the child dying! No, no!"

He shuddered and gave a quick pull at his pipe. But no smoke came. It had gone out. Laying it aside, he arose, undressed and went to bed. But before going to sleep he made a resolution with a view of turning his dream into a reality, and the next day he put it into practice.

"Can you tell me," he said to the manager of the woman's exchange, "who made the smoking case I bought here the other day?"

The woman hesitated, asked why he wished to know, consulted with another woman, then said that the article had been made by a young girl whose necessities were considerable. If giving her address would be of any benefit to her it would be given. Barnes said that it would. He had been so pleased with the article she had made that he would like a dozen of them. To this the lady replied that he could order a dozen through her, but he said in so large an order he would prefer to deal directly with the manufacturer. After much delay he finally got the address.

Ned was tempted to write the girl that he had purchased her smoking case and had received her missive; but, deeming this incautious, he set about finding some one who would give him an introduction to her. He at length succeeded in this and found in the girl he sought one whose family had in former days been prominent, but whose property had melted away. She had never known anything but adversity, though she had inherited from her mother the manner of a lady. She was rather pretty and generally attractive. Barnes, under the influence of the episode of which she was ignorant, took quite a fancy to her. He followed up the acquaintance, and gradually it appeared to him that, though she was stupid on the surface, beneath was a deep current of common sense.

Since she was the only girl he knew with whom he could begin married life on practical principles, he resolved to ask her to marry him. He preceded his proposition by taking from his pocket the missive he had found in the smoking case and handed it to her. She read it and looked up at him with cheeks aflame.

"Where did you get it?" she asked.

"I bought the smoking case you sold through the woman's exchange. You ask in the note if I don't think you struck a bright idea in making the smoking case. I certainly do. I reciprocate all the rest you said and propose to end our mutual loneliness by a union. Will you marry me?"

That was a dozen or fifteen years ago. Mrs. Barnes proved an admirable manager, thus giving her husband a great advantage in making a living as well as laying up a competence. Besides this, as a family man he gained that concentration which he had lacked before his marriage. Thirdly, as soon as he had a wife and children to take care of all his friends were disposed to help him. The consequence is that today the substance of his dream has come to pass—he is prosperous and happy, with a loving family.

The smoking case is treasured in the Barnes family. When the children ask what it is their father facetiously tells them that it is a monument of mamma's genius, but when they ask how it is so and a girl asks the question he tells her that he hopes she will show as much talent for getting a husband as her mother. If one of his sons makes inquiries about it the father simply tells him that it is an evidence of women's understanding of the requirements of men.

HONG KONG, WORLD'S LARGEST PORT

Hong Kong has for long held the position of the world's largest shipping port. In 1913, 490,228 vessels, of tonnage of 37,742,982 tons, entered and cleared from the port. It is understood that a comprehensive system of harbour improvement and reclamation work along the sea front is now being considered by the colonial government. Residents are hoping much also from the opening of the Panama canal. Hong Kong is the most densly populated place on the earth, its area of 31 square miles containing some 600,000 people. The island is also a free port, no custom duties being collected. Most of the revenue is raised by farming out the opium monopoly.—(Canada - West India Magazine.)

HOW TO ACT IN CASES TO SUPPOSED DROWNING

Dr. Hastings of Toronto has issued the following hot weather advice especially bearing on the cases of drowning. He advises the use of the Shaefer method :—

Lose no time in recovering the body. Always try to restore life, for persons have been revived after forty minutes' immersion. Operate immediately ; do not lose time by seeking a place of shelter.

Quickly lay the person prone, face down, with stomach on a barrel or roll of clothing, with the head lower than the rest, and the water will run out of the throat and lungs. Wipe dry mouth and nostrils. Wrap the corner of a handkerchief about the forefinger and clear the mouth of all mucous and slime as far back as the top of the throat. Rip open clothing on chest and back, and keep face exposed to air. Separate the jaws and keep apart with a cork, stone or knot in handkerchief.

Remove roll of cloth from under stomach. Kneel by side of patient or across. Place hands over lowest ribs. Lean forward and put weight over lowest ribs. Exert this pressure for three seconds, counting "one thousand and one, one thousand and two, one thousand and three."

Do not remove hands from ribs, but release pressure from the ribs for two seconds, counting as above.

Again exert pressure straight over the lowest ribs for three seconds, as described in Rule 3 ; then again release pressure for two seconds, as in Rule 4. Alternate this (three seconds pressure and two seconds release) about twelve times a minute, until breathing is restored. This method at once expels water, and produces the identical results of normal breathing.

If another person is present to assist, let him do everything possible to keep the body warm, by sheltering it from the wind, rubbing hands and soles of feet, and making hot applications. Warm the hand nearly as fast as the body, to avoid congestion. Camphor of ammonia may be applied to the nostrils to excite breathing.

Do not give up too soon. Any time within two hours you may be one the point of reviving patient without there being any signs of it. Send for a doctor as soon as possible. Prevent crowding around and exclusion of air.

After Treatment.

Warm bed, stimulants (coffee, etc.) in small doses, not letting patient choke—put large mustard plaster over lungs to prevent congestion.

How to Find the Drowned.

Make a board raft. Cut a hole in the centre, eight or ten inches in diameter. Lie down with face over this hole, covering head with coat, to exclude the light. By this scheme the rays of light are concentrated directly over the raft, and objects of any size can be seen a considerable distance below the surface.

CHARGES DISMISSED

Magistrate Cannot Believe the Evidence

GODERICH, July 10.—Declaring that he could place no confidence in the evidence of J. B. Hunter, the informant, and that he could find nothing to support the charge, Magistrate Kelly yesterday dismissed the charges of conspiracy and bribery against Dr. A. H. Macklin and Rev. Joseph Elliott in connection with the Centre Huron provincial election contest.

M. G. Cameron, K.C, who appeared for Mr. Elliott, first raised the objection that the cases were not properly before the magistrate, as they did not involve an indictable offence.

POOR ACTOR BUT GOOD SWEETHEART

Says Margaret Anglin of Her Hubby

New York, July 9.—Howard Hull, the slendor, boyish-looking actor-husband of Miss Margaret Anglin, was quite correct when he testified that the actress had supported him ever since their marriage three years ago. For Miss Anglin, examined in the bankruptcy proceedings into which her husband has cast himself, said so herself.

And—she said other things, too, one of which was to the effect that, while her husband had proved himself such a poor actor that she found it necessary to discharge him from her company after only one night's work, he had proven himself such a good sweetheart that she married him.

The actress was stunning in a charming gown of blue which intensified her particular type of beauty when she swept into the office of Thomas P. de Graffenried, who had been appointed by the court to find out what she knew about her husband's bankroll.

During the entire hearing Hull sat by her side and the actress sometimes seemed to fear that what she said might injure his feelings, for she several times interlarded her answers with a mellifluous "Howard, dear."

At first the questions concerned only the routine facts in the case, but after a bit they worked round to Hull and the amount of money which he supplied toward keeping the family exchequer in a sturdy condition.

Not Necessary to Work.

"My answer to that," said Miss Anglin, "is that my husband has not found it necessary to earn any money since we have been married. I have supplied all his needs in that direction."

"But has he earned nothing at all" queried Mr. de Graffenried.

"Nothing," replied the actress "Absolutely nothing. "In fact, the only money I ever knew him to earn was $100 that I paid him before we were married."

"Tell us about it, please," ordered Mr. de Graffenried.

"Well, stated the actress, as she settled back in her chair and cast a look at Hull, "it was this way. I engaged Mr. Hull to play a part in my company, but he proved such a poor actor that I discharged him after only one night's work."

As she said this Miss Anglin cast another glance at her husband, and then, leaning toward him, said tenderly :

"Pardon me, Howard, dear, but you know it's the truth."

"Nevertheless, you married him shortly afterward," broke in Mr. de Graffenried.

"Yes, I married him, although I knew he had nothing but his wearing apparel. Being a poor actor and a good sweetheart are two different things, you know," answered the famous star. "He has had nothing since, for that matter, or the jewellery that you have seen him wearing—a watch and a stick-pin—is mine."

"But didn't he have any money when you were married with which to furnish your home ?" the examiner continued.

She Furnished the Home.

"None at all. I furnished our house from cooking utensils to bed clothing. He had no money at the time, and has given me none at any time since. I never knew him to earn any money except the $100 about which I have told you. All the money he has had was what I gave him from the income that I earned."

Futher questioned regarding what she had given him, Miss Anglin said she had purchased him an automobile a year before their marriage just as a "little present." She also paid $1,800 for that out of her own money, she added.

Shortly after they were married, Miss Anglin thought it would be quite proper for her husband to have a bank account, and opened one with an initial deposit of $1,000. Several other deposits were made later, ranging in size from the initial amount to $2,400, until as much as $6,000 was in the bank at one time. The actress said all this money was earned by her, but drawn out by Hull to pay club dues, cab fares and other expenses of both himself and her.

After a long series of questions, in which Miss Anglin repeated over and over that her husband had received no money whatever, except that which came from her since they were married, the hearing was brought to an end, and the stage favorite hurried uptown.

Will Send Hull to Jail.

Attorneys for Mrs. Katherina Cooper, the colored woman who was bit by Hull's automobile, and who secured a judgment for $2,000 against him for injuries as a result, are planning a surprise for Hull if they do not find any property on which they can levy to satisfy the judgment. They are going to try and have the court send him to Ludlow street jail.

The attorneys argue that a judgment for personal injuries cannot be cancelled by the judgment debtor becoming bankrupt, and that if the damages are not paid they will secure a body attachment for his arrest and have him placed in the custody of the sheriff.

THE SUSPECT

Mrs. Carman, wife of Dr. E. Carman, outside whose Freeport, New York, office Mrs. Louise Bailey, a patient, was shot and killed. She is being held as the principal suspect, although after cross-examining her for two hours, the prosecuting attorney declared he was still without a clew in the mysterious murder. She placed a dictograph in her husband's office to learn his conversations with women patients.

DESPERADO FOUND DEAD

Body of Quebec's "Bad Man" Discovered In Woods

QUEBEC, July 10.—Joseph Morsaud, the demented bandit, who since he ran amuck with a gun and shot three men on Thursday, July 2, has terrorized the village and district of Villeroy, in the County of Lotbiniere, was found dead yesterday in a hut in the woods, according to information received here yesterday afternoon by Provincial Police Chief McCarthy.

Meraud's body was found by one of the posses of provincial police, who since the bandit did the shooting last Thursday, have been scouring the woods about Villeroy, armed with Ross rifles, and prepared to take the desperado dead or alive. Whether the fugitive took his own life or whether he died from wounds received in the fusillade which the police poured into a hut in which he was hiding on Tuesday, and from which he wounded Peter Brown, a guide, in the employ of the police, is not yet known.

New Two-Dollar Bills.

OTTAWA, July 10.—A new Dominion $2 bill will be issued to-day, in commemoration of the stay of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught in Canada. It will bear ther portraits on either corner, with the figure 2 in the centre, and the word two on each side of it. The bill will be of a light olive green.

This is the fourth issue of $2 notes. The first bore the picture of Lord Dufferin, the second that of Lord Lansdowne, and the third of King Edward VII., when he was Prince of Wales.

After All.

Most of the things that people think are matters of great moment aren't they?

DEEP MYSTERIES

Careful observation at a matinee brings several problems of importance before us. First, we may consider what is the relation between the drama and the chocolate cream. Why is it that the gastronomic adjunct of a baseball game is the peanut, while the play demands saccharine refreshment ? No normal person would eat candy at the stadium, and who would dream of cracking peanuts in a theatre ? Peanut and candy, ball games and play coincide, as Euclid would say, each to each.

There is a mystic relationship between arts and grafts. The candy game is a graft operated at the expense of good natured young men for the benefit of omnivorous angelic beings in white muslin and good spirits. Yet would the suggestion come from such beings if they did not feel an insistent inner need ? Sugar is a stimulant. So is the drama. Sugar awakens the emotions—of gratitude and love, for instance. Drama plays constantly on the emotions. Sugar is a food. Drama might be a food for the mind, if it were not for the playwrights. Chocolate is a dark mystery. So is the drama. Nobody knows what will succeed, and the play which conforms to every known critical requirement may be a dismal failure. Contrariwise, "Peg o' My Heart" may be a thumping success. It is not surprising that chocolate creams are devoured while the villian is still pursuing her.

There is another problem. Why do the young women devour them in such quantities ? Is there any reason for the disappearance of a whole pound before the curtain drops on the second act ? Perhaps nervousness may have something to do with it. The young woman has no desire to be hampered with a candy-box when she goes home. She does not care to tell "the folks" who paid for it and why he bought so much. She shrinks from the yammering of her little brothers around the fragments that remain. Her economic soul forbids her leaving good candies in the theatre, so she makes up her mind that all must be eaten. Fear that the final curtain will come too soon compels her to eat with some persistency as well as with great enthusiasm. Those near her in the playhouse may decide with regret that she is a greedy little thing, but they forget the psychological connection between candy and drama, and between economy and femininity.—Toronto News.

GAVE TO THE POOR.

St. Louis, Mo., July 10.—Shortly before his death, the late Rev. Dr. Palmer, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, waived his property right to $10,000,000 estate for the benefit of many poor families. These families had settled on 5,883 acres of land in West Virginia to which Dr. Palmer said he had a deed.

PROSECUTION TO FOLLOW WHEN WATER IS USED ON THE LAWNS IN PROHIBITED HOURS

At a meeting of the Public Utilities Commission yesterday afternoon the Superintendent was instructed to appoint an inspector to notify persons who are using water for lawns at prohibited hours, to cease and prosecute unless the instructions are carried out.

Superintendent Dobbin was instructed to get instructions from the City Council in writing where they wished the following standpipes placed: George Street near Antrim Street, Aylmer Street at Wolfe St., and Smith Street at Dennistoun Avenue, the Council to be charged with the removing expenses.

The Superintendent also reported on the matter of the petition for a service on London Street from Gilchrist to 378 London Street, the cost of the work, for an eight inch main being $382.40 with a total revenue of $22.92.

Messrs. J. J. Turner and Sons quoted a price of $31.55 for 18 blinds for the new Public Utilities Commission office. The matter was settled by the Commission deciding to leave the matter in the hands of Mr. Howse, manager of the Commission.

Both Superintendent Dobbin and Manager Howse were instructed to make an inspection of the river water above the city to Young's Point.

It was decided to refund John Young the amount of $11.67 for over charge of connections at Nos. 182 and 184 Hunter Street.

ALGONQUIN PARK

The attractions that are found in the Algonquin Provincial (Ont.) Park, situated 200 miles north of Toronto and 175 miles west of Ottawa, should appeal to Canadians who desire to summer-out in a district where health and pleasure abound.

Algonquin Park is 2,000 feet above the sea level, has the best fishing in Ontario, including small-mouthed black bass, salmon trout, lake trout, and speckled trout.

The "Highland Inn" accommodates 150 people and is situated on one of the most beautiful lakes in the Park. If a more restful place is desired, "Nominigan Camp," situated on Smoke Lake, 7 miles from the railway is available, or "Camp Minnesing," on beautiful Island Lake, 10 miles from the railway.

These camps are built of cedar logs, accommodate 60 people each, and offer unrivalled attractions in the way of fishing.

Those who require rest and city comforts in the wilderness are also recommended to these camps.

Get a copy of the Algonquin Park folder issued by the Grand Trunk and see the nearest Grand Trunk agent, and make your reservation for the summr, or write C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Toronto, Ont.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MR. BURNHAM WRITES.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—Such prominence has been given to an interview from Mr. E. A. Peck concerning local politics that I feel called upon from a spirit of common decency and justice not unknown amongst us, to say that those who claim credit for having killed Mr. Soden should pay his election expenses. The Executive Committee at a full meting set out a statement which completely exonerated Mr. Soden, and just by so much did the reverse for those who got ugly and refused to play. But it is one thing to be just and pay for the damage done or claimed to be done and another thing to interview the newspapers, for the purpose of letting things down easy after all. I consider that a hideous injustice was done to the Conservative party and to Mr. Soden, whom I supported loyally because he was the party's nominee. I should consider myself a "sport" if I had done otherwise. No party can be reconciled to itself by glossing over these gross injustices as suggested, but those responsible can do their best to atone for the unexpected and mistaken action of a few by putting their hands in their pockets and doing the decent thing. I do not know who "Voter" is, but I do know that his statement that politics have been a shuttle-cock here, which Mr. Peck denied, is perfectly true. Mr. Peck apparently wants things to go back to where they were before we cleaned the Augean stables. I do not. Nor am I to be frightened by the flapping of any party wings that ignore proper party conventions and proceed to knock holes in the party and then cry out that the party is in a bad way and should be re-organized. Any attempt to twist matters into a tacit declaration of injustice to the party's candidate, Mr. Soden, by any further pretences is to be resented. A manly apology from the kickers is what is needed, an apology both to the party and to Mr. Soden and a handsome contribution to his expenses. The baby play of the last few weeks has disgusted many and I fervently hope that we shall have no more of it. When any sentence of departure comes from a properly-conducted convention, as this one was, I will walk out without a whimper. I will not seek such a convention's suffrages and then, if disappointer, start raising Cain.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM.

MAJORITY OF STORES PULLED THE BLINDS

Only a Few of Smaller Stores Remained Open

N. C. Cameron, local secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association, reports that the very large majority of retailers, big and little, closed their doors yesterday at noon and observed the first half-holiday.

Some of the smaller stores remained open as was expected, but it is hoped that all the merchants will fall in line and draw their store blinds next Thursday at noon.

CRESSMANS' ANNUAL IS BIG SUCCESS

Delightful Trip To Rice Lake Points

With ideal weather the seventh annual outing of A. W. Cressman Co., Ltd., held yesterday to Gore's Landing was one of the most successful and delightful outings yet held by the company. The staff and their friends, numbering in all about eighty, enjoyed the pleasant sail down the river with ideal weather to Gore's Landing, per the steamer Geneva. On arrival at Gore's Landing, dinner was served and was featured by the presentation of a large bouquet of flowers to hostess Mrs. A. W. Cressman by Master Storey. After the innermost cravings, increased as they were by the sail, were satisfied, the gathering were afforded some very interesting views in a sail around the lake, which is particularly beautiful at this time of the year.

Arriving at Highland Park, a keenly contested program of sports were run off. Max Schlueter again demonstrated his ability an an athlete by capturing the wheel-barrow event and other feature races.

The baseball game between teams under Fred Cressman and A. W. Cressman afforded the gathering much entertainment, the latter finally winning after a hard struggle, 3-2. Fred Cressman twirled his annual game for the losers with Williams doing the receiving, and Raynor making his debut as pitcher for the winners, and Emory catching.

On the return the orchestra on board supplied music and a most enjoyable dance was held. A vote of thanks was moved in favor of Mr. Cressman for his generosity, and efforts to make the event a most pleasing one.

The sports were won as follows:
Sack race, C. McBride.
Peanut race, Miss Shepard.
Wheelbarrow race, "Germany Schlueter and Miss Long.
Biscuit race, Miss Edith Bailey.
Boot and shoe race, J. Emory.
Henderson Challenge race, Mr. Raynor.
Girls' race, Edith Price.
Boys' race, Gordon Manning.
Children's Race, under 12, H. Vickers, M. Vickers and D. Grant.
Boys' race under 20, Stan. O'Brien.

CASE WHERE THE MOTORIST GOT OFF

The charge of breach of the traffic by-law against Robert Sturgeon, a local motorist, was dismissed this morning at Police Court by Magistrate Dumble.

Constable Servante who laid the information claimed that Sturgeon passed a standing street car on the wrong side.

Inspector McCann of the Radial Railway Company stated that he was of the opinion that the street car should have the right of way.

"Why should a big man have the right of way over me," contended Magistrate Dumble as he dismissed the case. The breach was alleged to have been committed at the corner of Charlotte and George Streets.

RAIN IN THE COUNTRY.

Amid the terrible heat of yesterday afternoon, Providence looked with favor on Douro and Ennismore, causing a much needed rain to fall. It was quite general in those sections and will help materially so far as the late crops are concerned. The farmers are at present cutting hay, which is better than was at first anticipated. The rain of a few weeks ago was of wonderful assistance.

DISLOCATED HIS NECK DIVING

Injuries Will Likely Prove Fatal To Swimmer

Toronto, July 12.—William Herbert, aged 23, of 38 Dunbar Road, was probably fatally injured while bathing at Turner's baths at the Island yesterday afternoon. He dived from a wharf into shallow water and, striking his head on the bottom of the lagoon, dislocated his neck. He was removed to the General Hospital. At a late hour last night he was said to be unconscious, and to be suffering from paralysis from the shoulders down. Little hope is held out for his recovery.

The accident occured about 4 o'clock. Herbert, who is the son of Fred H. Herbert, the well known architect, had been swimming in the lagoon with several friends for a short time before the accident. He waded ashore and climbed on to the wharf. He was apparently unaware of the shallowness of the water and before he could be warned he dived, striking his head against the bottom.

When he failed to come to the surface his friends and other bathers went to his assistance. He was unconscious when they brought him to shore. The Life-saving Crew was notified, and the man was brought to the mainland and removed to the hospital in the police ambulance.

MANY WANT TO HANDLE THE BONDS

Ottawa, July 9.—There is considerable competition between various Canadian Trust Companies as to which will receive the trusteeship for the $45,000,000 bond guarantee which the Government passed last session for the Canadian Northern.

There still appears to be a hitch in connection with the execution of the mortgage, and the government has not yet decided as to which company will be entrusted with the profitable trusteeship.

It is stated that the National Trust Company is making a strong claim for the trusteeship, but that the Government fears that political capital may be made out of such a choice on account of the connection which the Minister of Finance, Hon. W. T. White, had with the company before coming into public life, and also on account of the fact that Mr. Z. A. Lash, is prominently connected with it.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

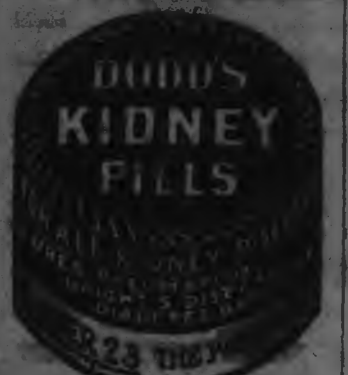
ERRING ONES TO BE TAKEN HOME

Cleveland, O., July 10.—Frank S. Haserot, former president of the Cleveland Board of Education, and head of the Haserot Company, wholesale grocers and canners, last night wired from Toronto, Ont., that he had located his son John and his bride and would bring them to Cleveland at once. He telegraphed the mother of the bride that he would meet her at the Juvenile Court, where it is said Mr. Haserot will attempt to have the marriage annulled on the ground that his son is but 17. The girl is also 17 years old.

John Haserot and Miss Edith [illegible] left the city July 2, saying they were going to Bellevue, Ohio, for an auto ride. Instead they went to London, Ont., where they were married. They then went to Toronto, from where young Haserot wired his father that he was married. Mr. F. S. Haserot started on their trail at once, but did not find them until yesterday. The young Mrs. Haserot also telegraphed her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Watkins, of Detroit Avenue, that they were married and having a fine time. The elopement has caused a sensation in the East End, where the Haserots were society figures.

NEW METHOD FOR GIVING PERSON DRINK

Sarnia, July 10.—One of the last resorts "to get a drink" was disclosed in Sarnia last night, when Constable Coulter saw two men pouring liquor down a paper funnel to a prisoner in a cell. The funnel was projected through a window, and the prisoner was catching it in a cup. Coulter's attention was attracted when he heard a noise in the cell, and slipping through the Police Court room he saw the method of giving the prisoner a drink. He arrested the men, Patrick Wallen and David Hunt. They will appear in the Police Court.



COMMENT

tion was as much at home as an old maid chaperoning, with a possible victim waiting on the sad sea shore.

The fans will have a chance to look over the offerings of Bobby Auld who has lost but one game this season. Toronto critics claim he is due for a tryout with the Internationals.

"In all the years I have been attending baseball games—and they are more than I would care to number—there is one play which stands out in my mind as the greatest I have ever seen," says a contributor to the American Magazine.

There was no wonderful skill embodied in the play. It was, I suppose, pure luck. But the fact remains that I have never seen it duplicated nor approached, and it is, so far as I know, unique in the annals of baseball.

"The game was one between Washnigton and Cincinnati back in the days when Washington was in the National League. The score was 1 to 0 in Cincinnati's favor in the last half of the ninth. Two men were out, and Washington had a runner on second, with Wilmot at bat. On the first ball pitched Wilmot swung hard and knocked an infield fly, the highest I have ever seen. The ball went up and up until it was visible only as a tiny speck.

"With the crack of the bat the runner on second had started for home, and he crossed the plate before the ball began to fall. Buck Ewing, Cincinnati's first baseman; McPhee, who played second, and 'Germany' Smith, the shortstop, all gathered between first and second awaiting the ball to drop. Wilmot sped around the bases at top speed and passed third as the ball fell just inside the triangle of waiting infielders.

"The ball struck the hard earth of the base line and bounded high in the air. Ewing having to wait for it to descend a second time before he could make the home throw. Wilmot slid around the plate and was safe, having won the game with a home run on an infield fly, a feat which has never been duplicated in professional baseball."

LACROSSE

Goodness, Gracious!

The Peterboro lacrosse team became so filled with the idea that they had to "wrest it from Hastings," as the Peterboro papers say, that they apparently forgot that there was a village six miles north of us, called Norwood, also playing lacrosse.

We would gently remind them that there is another village six miles further east, called Havelock, which will also have to be reckoned with.—Hastings Star.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

WHEN you interfere with other people you might as well make up your mind to take your raps good naturedly, for you will have to take them from both sides.

Sometimes there is but one reason why a true story is exciting, and that is simply because it is true.

If you are bound to cry over milk of any kind, by all means let it be spilt milk, for then the teardrops can do it no harm.

One good point about a thunderstorm is that it quits when it gets through. In this respect it differs from many people.

There is no use in having money, for if some kind friend doesn't borrow it you will have to use it for commonplace things.

An automobile is a haughty, arrogant, aristocratic thing, but it takes a tumble and eats dust when it meets up with an ordinary sand bank.

You can't always tell what a woman is driving at by the hits she makes.

Getting up in the morning and getting out among the [illegible] may not be comfortable, but it is [illegible] to get results.

We can any of us break a bad habit if we want to, but the great difficulty lies in getting our own consent to do it.

The Head Boss.

Are you the master of yourself,
The chief director and the boss,
The one who orders things about
And sees [illegible] do not cross,
Or are you [illegible] drifting [illegible],
The plaything [illegible] chance,
Tossed here and there and everywhere,
The [illegible] of circumstance?

To what extent, if I may ask,
Are you the captain and the mate,
The one who guides your daily life
And keeps it sort of headed straight?
Do you each [illegible] to yourself
Say, "I will do things thus and so?"
And have they when you go to bed
Been done that way, I'd like to know?

Is it a cinch that you will do
Tomorrow what you plan today,
Lay down a program for yourself
And later with it get away,
Arrange the details plain as print,
Put all the items in the plan,
And at the time when each is due
Be on the spot [illegible]?

You know, if you will read the past,
A[illegible] day
Toward guiding and directing things
[illegible] just how small a part you play,
For circumstances, [illegible],
Have got you in their [illegible] strong,
And with a protest now and then [illegible] let them carry you along.

Newest Comparison.

"How do Jenks and his wife get along?"

"Not very well."

"I hear they are living like cats and dogs."

"No; like New York millionaires."

The Reason.

"Wonder why they are called bachelor girls?"

"Policy."

"Ah how?"

"May attract some bachelors to investigate the meaning of the title."

Must Be a Promoter.

"His prospects are brilliant."

"Indeed! Are his past achievements notable?"

"I should say so."

"What has he done?"

"Boosted his future."

Modern Advice.

"If you would have a thing well done"—

"Oh, yes, I know—do it yourself."

"Not on your life."

"What is your method?"

"Hire an expert."

They Would See to It.

"How shall we preserve the priceless boon of free speech?" shouted the orator.

"Give women the ballot," replied a wise man in the audience.

[illegible]

"Going to the church supper tonight?"

"No."

"You old sinner! Why not?"

"I am too hungry."

FIGURES ARE VOUCHED FOR

Engineer Says Company's Official Supplied Them

FREDEIRCTON, N.B., July 10.—Another sensation in the Southampton Railway investigation was sprung yesterday when Commissioner Pringle called upon E. V. Johnson, the the inspecting engineer, upon those certificate the Dominion double subsidy was paid to take the witness stand.

Commissioner Pringle had previously stated that he was dissatisfied with the evidence of David W. Brown, who had been chief engineer on construction of the railway, and had further remarked that he had made up a preliminary estimate on the cost of the road to be submitted to the Department of Railways, "anticipating a double subsidy when he made up the figures." The Commissioner had also said that after sitting here for several days, conducting the inquiry, he had come to the conclusion "that there was a colored gentleman in the wood-pile somewhere." At to-day's session, when Mr. Brown has been requested to be present to go on the stand for an examination by Mr. Pringle, is looked forward to with much interest.

Mr. Johnson said that he visited the Southampton road once in 1912, during the construction, and once in 1913, when it was supposed to be completed. "He got his information regarding the cost of the road from Mr. Brown. He did not learn whether proper accounts were kept, according to the subsidy contracts. Mr. Brown gave the information to the witness in writing, and the witness produced the memorandum.

Chairman Pringle then went over the memorandum with Mr. Johnson, and in each item considered, the inflated figures were ascribed by witness to Engineer Brown, who had endeavored, according to the evidence to persuade Johnson that the figures were correct.

KRAFCHENKO EXECUTED.

Desperado Penitent For Misdeeds But Denies Murder.

WINNIPEG, July 10.—John Krafchenko, convicted of murder, was hanged at 8.59 yesterday morning in the provincial jail. He died as he had lived, a man of iron nerve, and went to death unflinchingly.

John Krafchenko died penitent. He proved to his spiritual adviser, Rev. Bertal Heeney, during the silent watches of Wednesday night, that had he wished he could have left his cell, could have broken out as he had out of the "old kitchen," and a bent, battered old teaspoon was the simple implement he used to pick the massive lock of his cell before the eyes of the astonished clergyman.

Mr. Heeney entered Krafchenko's cell at 11 o'clock Wednesday night, and throughout the night he and the prisoner prayed every hour. At 8.55 he was brought from his cell to the place of execution by two guards. He mounted the twenty or so steps to the scaffold, and when half way up he sadly smiled and and murmured to one of the guards that he did not feel very well. He took his place on the drop. In a moment the black cap was in and the noose adjusted. Mr. Heeney began to recite a last prayer, and within a few brief seconds and while the clergyman's lips were still moving, Arthur Ellis suddenly threw over the lever, the drop was sprung and Krafchenko died.

Krafchenko maintained his innocence of the actual murder to the last.

Spring-Rice Joins R.N.W.M.P.

OTTAWA, July 10. — Private Spring-Rice, a near relative of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, British Ambassador to the United States, and said here to be the ambassador's nephew, is the newest distinguished recruit to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Young Spring-Rice spent the winter in Ottawa, where he lived quietly, and was known to only a few by name, but was a familiar figure on the streets and in the Parliament Buildings grounds, where he was frequently seen accompanied by three bull dogs.

Mistake In Charge.

MONTREAL, July 10.—Vassil M. Delmege, former bank clerk, charged with having stolen $7,622 from the Merchants' Bank of this city, was taken before Judge Leet yesterday for voluntary statement. He entered a plea of not guilty. It developed that in one of the five charges against Delmege there was lacking the declaration of crime.

Two Months For Sailor.

MONTREAL, July 10. — Manuel Chute, the Storstad sailor who tried to cash money orders he picked up while rescuing the survivors of the Empress of Ireland, was yesterday given two months in jail by Judge Choquette in the Sessions Court. Chute will be deported after serving his sentence.

GO TO PRIVY COUNCIL.

Ottawa, July 9.—The Dominion will ask leave of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to appeal the finding of the Supreme Court in the companies case. E. L. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice, has left for England to make the application.

The Supreme Court upheld in its judgment the contention of the provinces in the case as submitted jointly by the Dominion and the Provincial Government. The court held that companies possessing provincial incorporation were not to be limited in their scope to the borders of the province in which they are incorporated.

The provinces declared their desire that the finding of the Supreme Court should be final, but in view of the importance of the question, the Dominion desires to have the opinion of the highest court in the Empire.

SPEND $10,000,000 IN ALBERTA.

Edmonton, July 9.—It is said locally that more than $10,000,000 will be expended in the Province of Alberta in carrying out the 1914 construction programme of the Canadian Northern Railway. Included in this amount is the $6,500,000 received from the sale of bonds in England of the Canadian North-Western a subsidiary company which has received the guarantee of the provincial government.

CHANGE OF PITCHERS HELD PETES AND BEAVERS WON

Half Holiday Crowd Witnessed a Merry Struggle --- Two Boots Helped Visitors Score Winning Run --- Score 5-4

The laborites enjoying their first half-day recess at the ball lot, yesterday afternoon, got good measure for their money. The first engagement between the Petes and the Beavers was a mighty interesting battle, the only disagreeable point about it being that the locals had to swallow a defeat by one run. It was one of those nip and tuck arguments with each gang showing plenty of fight, healthy hitting and classy fielding. A win looked promising for the Blountmen, but with three runs tucked away and others peeping o'er the horizon, Bauswein withdrew to the shade of the lumber and likewise the homesters were forced to take a rest. Mr. Roberts' assortment was too much of a change.

The proceedings were enlivened by a massed assault upon Umps Bedford, but it was only one of those vocal charges that delight the fans and causes a shrinkage in the pay envelope. Mr. Ort, who was in charge of the Beavers, led the way in the direction of his supreme majesty and objected to Louie Schettler being allowed to hold the bag, when the throw off his grounder had landed in the firstbasman's mit, before Louie's arrival. But the umps sustained the Petes' charge of interference to the runner, and Schettler anchored. The Beavers howled in rage, Ort was ordered to the bench, he refused, and this cost him his view of the interior.

First Innings

Toronto — Blount took Kroy's drive just above the grass, a pretty catch. Miller swallowed Burrell's foul fly, and Dolan threw out Ort.

Petes — Curly walked; Welsh sacrificed, and Dolan was thrown out by Ort, in a nice stop, Blount getting third. Isaac took Stewart's grounder.

Second Innings.

Toronto—Killilea was safe on his biff through the box. Trout flied to Byrne, and Stewart grabbed a hard long fly from Isaac, and Welsh came in and took Schultz's fly.

Petes—Rooney singled into right and on stealing second Trout threw wild, the runner going to third. Byrne walked and King did likewise. Miller singled through second, scoring Rooney and Byrne. King went out at third on Schettler's hit to pitcher, and Blount flew out to right. Welsh went out the same route.—Two runs.

Third Innings.

Toronto—Byrne took Hunt's pop, Rooney picked Hauswein's crack, and Dolan glued Kroy's fly.

Petes—Dolan dropped a hit into right. Stewart sacrificed. Killilea threw out Rooney, Dolan making third, and scoring on Byrne's double. Roberts now pitching. King flew out to left.—One run.

Fourth Innings.

Toronto—Burrill flew to Blount, a nice catch, and Ort gave Welsh the same chance. Killilea fanned.

Petes—Miller grounded to Isaac, who threw out Schettler. Blount beat out his grounder to Ort, a close decision, but was tagged on the attempted steal.

Fifth Innings.

Toronto—Trout singled into right centre and Isaac into short right, Trout making third. Schultz tripled into right, scoring both runners. Hunt went out to King. Roberts and Kroy fanned.—Two runs.

Petes—Hunt grabbed Welsh's effort; Dolan singled through second and stole; Stewart fanned; Killilea went back after Rooney's fly.

Sixth Innings.

Toronto—Burrill beat out a tap to Byrne. Ort sacrificed. Killilea rolled out to Rooney, Burrill making third, and scoring on Trout's single between third and short. Trout went out stealing.—One run.

Petes—Byrne was passed. King sacrificed. Kroy went out at first, and Schettler flew to Killilea.

Seventh Innings.

Toronto—Isaac got a scratch hit. Schultz was safe, but on Hunt's tap Schettler got Isaac at third. Roberts struck out. Kroy doubled, Schultz scoring. Burrill flew out.—One run.

Petes — Blount skied to Isaac. Welsh got a scratch hit. Dolan grounded. Stewart walked. Rooney walked, making three on. Byrne singled, scoring Welsh, and King grounded out.—One run.

Eighth Innings.

Toronto—Ort flied to Dolan. Killilea skied to Welsh, and Trout beat out his bunt which bounced off Schettler's glove. Isaac was safe on Dolan's fumble, and Trout scored on a second fumble by Dolan on Schultz's grounder.—One run.

Petes—Miller grounded out, and Schettler was declared safe on interference, and Ort was ordered from the game for protesting long and unwisely. Graham went to second. Blount was out, pitcher to first, and Welsh flew to Killilea.

Ninth Innings.

Toronto — Schettler covered the bag on Roberts' grounder, for an out; Kroy was hit, and Burrill walked. Graham fanned, and Dolan took Killilea's fly.

Petes—Dolan flew to right. Stewart singled across second. Rooney flew out to right, and Byrne flew out to centre.

COMMENT

As You Like It

The team that fights will take the majority of games in the present series with Toronto. The Beavers are out for blood, and the Petes cannot afford to take any chances.

Rooney made a healthy attempt to land Schultz's triple over his head, but he was inches too short. It was a solid biff and it started the scoring.

Both Welsh and Hunt in left field handled some difficult chances in clever style. Both men give the batter an awful battle.

"GENE" STAYED WITH HIS MAN

Greek Wrestler Unable to Secure Fall

When John Kolonis, the Greek wrestler with Washburn's Midway Shows attempted to throw Gene Hurtubise, the well known local man, he had a contract on hand that he found it impossible to complete. Last night the men met in five, ten and fifteen minute bouts and at the close neither had secured a fall. The fact that Gene has been out of the game for a couple of years might lead people to believe that he has gone back, but his performance last night assures them that he is still there with his old tricks. His famous bear hug was worked a great deal and when he got it clamped he had the Greek visitor at his mercy. The renumeration is a dollar for every minute a man can stay with Kolonis and Hurtubise kept him stalled the full time in preference to throwing him. At one stage of the game the Greek grew a trifle hostile, but the big Frenchman secured a crotch and neck hold, and heaved him over the ropes. From then on the bout was fast and clean.

The manager of the wrestling auditorium claimed that he would rather see the local man wrestle in preference to stalling, so Gene picked him up on it and challenged his man to a straight bout. The challenge was accepted, and the match will take place Saturday night.

LIFT LOCKS WON

The Lift Lock team won a hard fought snappy game of baseball last evening from the East City Ramblers by the score of 11-7. The game was one of the best played by the Lift Locks and their splendid fielding and batting gave them the victory. The East City Ramblers did not play as good a game as was expected. Sam McCauley for the winners pitched in good style. The East City Ramblers used three pitchers.

FINE TIME AT ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH GARDEN PARTY

All things considered the garden party on the grounds of St. George's Church, last evening, was a very fine success. The weather was ideal and the gathering of English churchmen and their friends had an enjoyable time. The attendance was all that could be expected in view of other attractions, including those at the exhibition park.

The grounds were decorated, through the kindness of J. J. Turner and Sons and the 57th band delighted all with a very fine program of music.

There were four booths and the inevitabl fish pond where business was brisk.

His Worship Mayor Buller, opened the function and Rev. Canon Davidson presided. All the speeches had a happy and humorous vein and judging by the merriment, the speakers were very popular. Votes of thanks were tendered by Messrs. E. A. Peck, and F. D. Kerr. The object of the gathering was to secure funds toward the building of a new church and the purchasing of two lots, and it is hoped that the financial returns will be satisfactory. Rev. Jas. Price is grateful to all who assisted.

WILL REFUSE TO PAY FOR BAD EGGS

Egg Improvement Campaign Taken Up By Montreal Dealers

Montreal, July 10.—The egg improvement campaign instituted by the Dominion Government under the Livestock branch of the Department of Agriculture is making its influence felt in the Province of Quebec. On July 13 there goes into active force in Montreal an agreement signed yesterday in the Board of Trade Building by many of the leading produce firms, who were met there by John A. Porter, of the Department of Agriculture, Toronto. The agreement reads:

"We, the undersigned egg dealers of the City of Montreal pledge and agree among ourselves that commencing July 13 wo will not buy any eggs either direct or through our buyers, except on a 'loss off basis.' It is understood that 'loss off' means black and red rots, spots and all eggs unfit for food."

"This, said John Gunn, at the close of the meeting yesterday, "is the most important movement that has taken place in Canada for a long time. We began last year and I have no hesitation in saying that the general standard of produce has been higher than over before. Now, thanks to the perseverance of the Dominion Government officials, we are further perfecting the organization of this industry which will benefit alike those engaged in it and the public generally by securing a uniformly high standard of eggs."

J. A. Porter stated that he was going through the country to get the egg dealers to organize and buy eggs only on the "loss off" basis, which meant that the dealers would "candle" all eggs and absolutely refuse to pay for bad eggs. The principal idea, said Mr. Porter, is to encourage the better marketing of eggs and to eliminate the loss that accrues through careless handling.

It is stated that every dealer in Montreal and the Province of Quebec will sign the agreement within the next few days.

WHOLE FAMILY PERISH IN WATER

Four Lose Their Lives And One Escapes

Brantford, July 10.—Late last night a whole family was wiped out by a tragic drowning accident on the Grand River near Sour Springs. Thomas Garnet, a well-known and well-to-do farmer of Onondaga township, was rowing down the river in a rowboat. With him were his young son, aged about ten years, his daughter, two years younger, a maid, and a hired man. How the boat upset has not yet been ascertained. Garnet, with his two children and the maid, were drowned, while the hired man succeeded in getting to the river bank. He tried to save the boy, but was unsuccessful. He at once gave the alarm, but it was too late.

All evening boats were patrolling the river, but no trace of the missing could be found. The boat in which they were rowing was floating bottom up.

So far as can be ascertained, no explanation of the catastrophe is forthcoming. Garnet himself was a splendid oarsman and used to the handling of a boat. Sour Springs is up the river some distance.

NINETIETH BIRTHDAY CELEBRATED

Lakefield News.

Grandma Taylor of Lakefield, celebrated her ninetieth birthday on July 3rd, at the home of her son, Mr. Peter Taylor. Grandma Taylor was, of course, the central figure of the occasion. She was surrounded by her descendants, consisting of middle-aged men and women, blooming youth and budding childhood. Mrs. Taylor came originally from Aberdeen, Scotland, where she learned to romp among the bonny hills. However, the ninety turns of the perpetual wheel of time have seen buoyant adolescence transferred into ripening old age. The day was one of keenest enjoyment and entertainment. The circle of unions and reunions of relatives reached its maximum at 34. Friends present from Lakefield were Mrs. Bullock, Mr. and Mrs. G. Payne and Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Armstrong. When the festal board was spread the guests proved that they could do justice to Lakefield fare. Those present from Kingston, Toronto, Peterboro, Bellrock, Norwood and Warsaw, as well as Fall River, Mass., could testify as to the appetising nature of the atmosphere of the picturesque little town. During the afternoon's chit-chat period, the great-great-grandchild (the 5th generation of Mrs. Taylor, sitting in the midst, a boy of 11 months and weighing 30 pounds, and eliciting admiration on every side, Grandma was noted to have remarked, "The stock doesna' seem to be running out." The gasoline launch on the Otonabee River was a feature of the programme which afforded inexplicable pleasure. The munificence of the guests at the birthday party was shown by generous donations, the major part being money presents. A geneological tree, starting with Grandma Taylor, would boast 78 immediate descendants, without numbering the sons-in-law and grandsons-in-law. Of these 78, 55 are still in the land of the living. She has 4 children, 18 grandchildren, 22 great-grandchildren and 1 great-great-grandchild. This society of aunts and uncles and cousins held high carnival all day of July 3rd, and although the celebration rites were at an end, still a large number continued to celebrate the next day and remained over Sunday. Saturday morning saw a well loaded gasoline launch towing a freighted canoe up the Otonabee River and Stoney Lake, where other members of the family were visited. The elaborate preparations were only eclipsed by the appearance of a Peterboro photographer, who snapped us three times. We hope to have an adequate facsimile to perpetuate the memory of the occasion. From a provisionary standpoint as well as from its joy imparting significance, the birthday party was a full-bloom success.—Com.

ESTABLISHED 1879. PETERBOROUGH, ONT., SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1914 PRICE 2 CENTS

TWO GLOBE TROTTERS TELL OF THEIR TRAVELS

Friendships Were Made Under the Union Jack, During Boer War.

Two well-known and famous globe trotters, Messrs. W. Hope Hodgson and L. Russell Kynack of Melbourne, Australia, the latter gentleman formerly of Vladivostock, Russia, were guests last evening at the Oriental Hotel.

In conversation with a Review scribe, both gentlemen were able to relate a few rather startling experiences, being in a reminiscent mood after enjoying a few days' fishing at Buckhorn. Mr. Hodgson, a tall military-looking man of about 45, is an Englishman who found the life of the average Englishman at home too tame. He longed for big game, and during his early life after leaving Oxford two years before his term, he travelled considerably. About 1894 he located in South Africa and invested in mining, and he resided at Cape Town until the war broke out, when be enlisted with the British Army, securing a commission as an officer. During the siege of Ladysmithhe received an injury which resulted in his enforced absence from the fighting. It was here he met Mr. Kynack, who was trying his fortune with the grand old Union Jack against the Boers. Their meeting was such as to result in lifelong friendship, owing to the fact that the latter was the means of saving the life of Mr. Hodgson ,when he was shot down, receiving a bad wound in the shoulder. Hodgson was carried over one mile by his newly-found friend to the army surgeon, when the din of battle died down. This was the means of both becoming fast friends, and at the conclusion of the the war, after settling up their few personal matters, they returned to England. In 1905 both went to Melbourne, Australia, and since then have visited all the principal places of the globe, having made their fortunes in the early days of the diamond mines of South Africa.

Had to Leave Russia

Mr. Kynack at one time lived at Vladivostock, Russia, but became mixed up in some strange manner with anarchists, He was a young man at the time and held a high position socially. He was forced to leave the country. After months of hardship he finally succeeded in getting out of Russia and after remaining in Paris for a few months, left for England, and then after an extensive trip landed in South Africa.

During the Boer war he participated in several battles before meeting with Mr. Hodgson.

Like Peterborough

Speaking of Canada, both gentlemen here for the first time evinced surprise to see such a large country well developed and evidently very prosperous. They were very much impressed with Peterborough. It had the makings of an ideal residential city where one could enjoy life's many comforts.

They left this morning for Montreal and New York, to sail for England.

TO OPEN COLLEGE IN PETERBORO

E. S. Hudson of Ottawa Comes to This City

The Ottawa Citizen of the 1st inst. has the following in connection with a young business man who is locating in Peterboro:

After four years' connection with the Gowling Business College as commercial Master, E. S. Hudson leaves to-day to enter business for himself at Peterboro, Ont., where he will open a new business college. Mr. Hudson is well known in Ottawa and was a prominent member of McLeod Street Methodist Church choir, and of the male quartette of that church.

Mr. Hudson was born in Walkerton, Ont. He is the holder of a second class teacher's certificate and taught in a public school for a time. Later he attended the Central Business College of Stratford, and after graduating taught for a year there. He then became bookkeeper for E. Long Mfg. Co. of Orillia, Ont. After gaining practical experience in the business world with this firm he was engaged as a teacher in the Gowling Business College. Since coming to Ottawa, Mr. Hudson has made a host of friends who all wish him great success in his new venture.

E. S. HUDSON,
Who will shortly open a Business College in the building next the Review office.

BOARD OF WORKS TO BUILD SIDEWALK

On East Side of George Between Perry and Lake

The Board of Works, in session last evening, put an end to the question of whether or not sidewalk should be laid on the east side of George Street between Perry and Lake Streets. There are two residences on that block and one desired the pavement, for reason that he had no way of escaping the mud, while the other claimed that it wasn't needed. The latter has had a crossing from his property to the west side of the street. Ald. Stratton and Duffus put forth a motion by which a crossing should be built on the north side of Lake Street from the west to the east side of George Street and thus have both residences with a crossing. In view of the fact that some day sooner or later the sidewalk must be placed there and it might just as well be done now, Ald. Johnston moved an amendment that the sidewalk be laid. The amendment carried.

CONTRACT LET FOR PAVING

Foley and Gleeson to Pave New Area

In view of the fact that Foley and Gleeson's work on the paving of this city's streets has so far been very satisfactorily performed, the Board of Works has decided to award the firm the contract for the new paving. The Warren Bituminous Co. were offered the work east of George Street, or 8930 square yards, but this morning declined the offer at the prices quoted in the tender.

Mr. Gleeson, who was present last night, informed the Board that he would also put in a half inch binder between the base and surface, gratis. This will give the city, 2½ inches of wearing surface.

When the question of paving was first introduced last night, City Engineer Passons informed the Board that Mr. Lytle, the local contractor desired to withdraw from the field and leave it for Foley and Gleason and the Warren Co. to fight it out. Mr. Lytle came before the meeting and stated that such were his intentions. He was, he said, willing to take a chance on getting some of the work from the company securing the contract. The Board decided to allow him to withdraw and returned him his check.

The price of the total work asked was:

By Foley and Gleeson:

COMMISSION FINDS FIRST OFFICER OF STORSTAD WAS WRONG AND NEGLIGENT

Canadian Press Despatch.

Quebec, Que., July 11. — The Court of Enquiry into the Empress disaster assembled for the last time at ten o'clock this morning when the finding of the Commissioners was read by Lord Mersey, dealing with the responsibility for the disaster. The report says, "We regret to have to impute blame to anyone in connection with this lamentable disaster, but we can come to no other conclusion than that Mr. Tuftenes, 'chief officer of Storstad,' was wrong and negligent in altering his course in the fog and in keeping the navigation of the vessel in his own hands and in failing to call the Captain when he saw the fog coming. The disaster might have occurred in the Thames, Clyde, Mersey or elsewhere, and is in no way attributable to the characteristics of the St. Lawrence."

When Meals Are Bad Sue Boarding Mistress

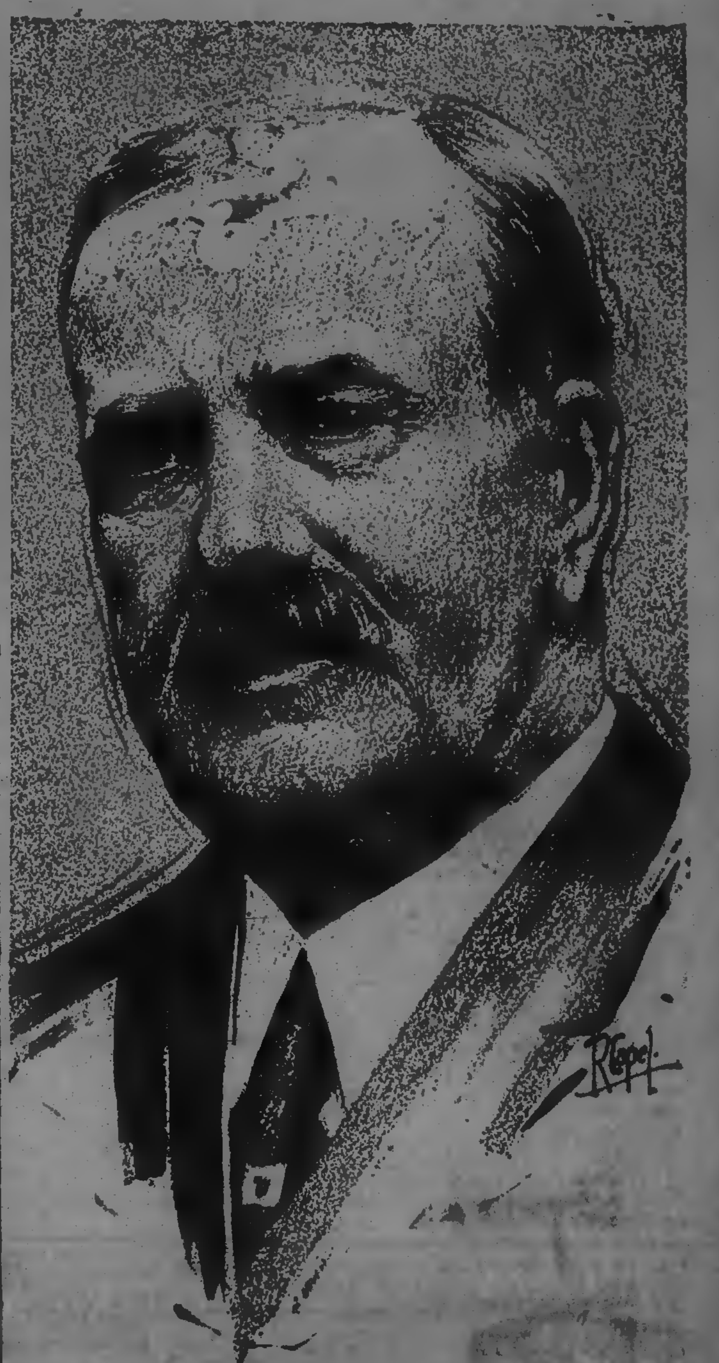
Topeka, Kansas, July 10.—Persons who provide unwholesome food which "makes their guests, boarders or employees sick" are liable for personal damages, according to a decision of the Kansas supreme court.

The decision was handed down in the case of J. D. Malone, a farm hand, who brought suit for $15000, alleging that his employer served meat that made him ill. The lower court gave him a verdict for $5000. This decision was upheld by the supreme court.

GEORGE ST. CHURCH.

The services at George street Methodist Church on Sunday will be appropriate to the 12th of July. Rev. Mr. Peever's subject in the morning will be "What Is Protestantism?" Rev. H. J. Keith, of Knox Church, will preach at the evening service.

PREMIER ROBLIN OF MANITOBA



GOVERNMENT WILL HAVE BARE MARGIN

Majority May be Increased to Working Efficiency by Three By-Elections In Northern Seats.

THE SITUATION AT NOON

Canadian Press Despatch.

Winnipeg, July 11.—The result of yesterday's election is [illegible] in doubt. The Telegram, Conservative, claims the election of twenty-five government supporters and twenty-one Liberals, while the Free Press estimates twenty-three Conservatives and twenty-one Liberals with two in doubt. The Telegram claims the Government will have an ample majority and the Free Press concedes the Government "a precarious lead."

The consensus of opinion here is that the complexion of the new legislature cannot be determined until recounts are taken in several close constituencies, and three deferred elections have been held.

WINNIPEG, July 11.—Reports received thus far have not definitely decided the standing of the parties in the next Legislature, but they indicate clearly enough that the Government will have a small majority, may be increased to a working efficiency by the three bye-elections yet to be held in the deferred northern seats.

The Liberals claim a tie of 21 seats each, with four to hear from. These four are claimed by the Government, who also claim several of the seats placed by the Opposition in their own column. A detached estimate might put the final standing at 25 Conservatives and 21 Liberals, with three deferred elections, making the total of 49. What the Government side now claims is 27, as against their opponents' 19. Liberals claim that results in six seats now standing in the Government columns are so close that recounts are inevitable, such seats being Kildonan and St. Andrew's, where Hon. Dr. Montague has at present a majority of but four, whereas at the recent bye-election it stood in the hundreds.

The Liberal sweep in Centre and South Winnipeg is one of the most surprising things of the campaign, and can only be attributed to a hostile Orange and church sentiment.

The election was fought almost entirely on two issues: the Coldwell amendments to the education act providing Roman Catholic teachers for Roman Catholic children in the public schools, and the abolition of the bar. The lining up of the Orangemen to "save the little red school-house" is believed to have been the most potent influence.

The results now in hand are as follows:

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1914

GET AWAY FROM THE VILLAGE STYLE

THERE WAS A TIME when Peterborough was a village. Then, in the course of development it became a town, and lastly a city. But, in spite of the fact that Peterborough is a city, a great many intelligent people have failed to realise that the change has meant vastly more than an enlarged population. It has meant changes in practically all departments of the life of this community and occasioned problems which must be dealt with in the light of new conditions if those problems are to receive any adequate solution.

We hear it said that though Peterborough is a city, it is really just a big village. The sooner the citizens of this place get away from that idea the better it will be. If we have men in public places who regard the performance of their duties in the light of the requirements of a village, it is time to drop them. If we have men in business who are catering to a village while living in a city, they will wake up some day to find that they have been surpassed or forced out of business. The same criticism can be applied to politics, to churches, to municipal affairs.

The City Council was desirous of keeping the local tax rate at 26 mills when the expenditure of large sums is absolutely necessary. The Council can keep the rate at 26 mills, but the assessment will have to be changed or increased. It does not matter whether the money comes from a 26-mill rate on the present assessment or from a 20-mill rate on a higher assessment. The money has to be raised for certain things and the people have to pay it. So long as the money is spent judiciously in the people's interest there should be no complaint, but in some things the City Council has acted in the village style, and one of those things is plumbing inspection.

While the Medical Officer of Health proposed a change, nothing was done, and he was rather summarily treated by the Council. Then, the matter of plumbing inspection was dillied and dallied with as if each alderman was afraid to shoulder the responsibility of doing what his office called him to do. The proposal of the Medical Officer of Health may not have been the right course to pursue—that was for the aldermen to judge—but the whole matter should have received the consideration which its importance demanded.

We have heard that the one thing that saved this city from the serious consequences of this slip-shod method of dealing with pluming has been the good work of the plumbers. This may or may not be true. It is said that there are many unskilled men doing plumbing jobs in this city, and one would not expect the best results from that kind of workmen.

Another point is that the new Act gives the Medical Officer of Health wider powers than under the old dispensation, and the Council should give a respectful hearing to suggestions from that official, especially when given in the discharge of his statutory duties. At any rate, the question of plumbing inspection should be handled in a business-like manner at the next meeting of the Council, and if the aldermen want the opinion of their Medical Officer of Health, it should not be hard to obtain.

Had some plague or epidemic broken out in Peterborough, due to defective or insanitary plumbing, there would have been a great hullaballoo. Special Council meetings and investigations, possibly lawsuits, would have resulted to find out nothing new. Now is the time to prevent, in a measure, such conditions by settling the plumbing question.

CO-OPERATION IN SASKATCHEWAN.

CO-OPERATION in the agricultural industry is growing in the West. Fifty-five co-operative marketing associations have registered in Saskatchewan since February first, according to an announcement made by the Saskatchewaan Government. This shows the popularity of the co-operative marketing movement and speaks well for its probable success. Eight egg marketing associations have been organized, according to the report of W. W. Thompson, director of the co-operative organisation branch of the Department of Agriculture.

Prominent agricultural authorities will discuss topics of general interest to the farmers of Saskatchewan at 65 provincial centres during the present summer. Among the speakers will be J. G. Raynor, William Betts, S. L. Guild, E. H. Hawthorne and A. J. McPhail. Many of the subjects will have to do with the question of mixed farming which is becoming a more important topic every day. The advantages for the stock raisers are numerous, and it is now considered only a question of time until practically every farmer in the province will raise stock as well as wheat.

MEXICO'S INDIAN RULERS.

ALL THE MEN who in the last half-century have shown any capacity to govern Mexico have been largely or wholly of the indigenous race. Jaurez, who was a full-blooded Indian of the Zapotec tribe, settled from time immemorial in portions of the territory forming the present state of Oaxaca, the builders perhaps of the palaces of Mitla. President Sebastion Lerdo de Tejada was of pure European descent, and he was driven from the country by the revolution of Tuxtepec which elevated Porfirio Diaz to power in 1876. Though Diaz, according to his biographies, was able to trace his maternal descent in part to an 18th-century emigrant from the mountains of Asturias and his paternal descent to one of those early Andalusian settlers in Oaxaca who gave to its chief city the name of Antequera, from the town in southern Spain whereon Christian chivalry used to often foregather for their forays into the territory of the Granadine Moors, the fact is that the former president showed in his physique and temperament the predominant characteristics of the Mixteca, divided by long-standing tribal feuds from the Zapotec. Senor Madero was of European descent—his family, it is understood, were originally Portuguese Jews who settled in Mexico in colonial times.

COULD IT HAVE BEEN PREVENTED?

THE MURDER MYSTERY in Freeport, Long Island, is another case where some persons in respectable society have gone wrong. At the present time the mystery has not been solved, but one fact that shocks everybody is the murder. Until further developments have arisen it is difficult to make any specific criticism, but it seems, from the facts of the case so far learned, that the catastrophe could have been prevented by a little quiet missionary work. Too often people, in refusing to speak a word of warning, allow the misdirected course of their friends' acts to carry them to shocking lengths. There is too great a tendency to allow everybody to go their course and reap its consequences, when a quiet word would often change everything for the better. It is a most difficult and delicate thing to do, but if done judiciously, usually saves a world of trouble and shame.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

EIGHT HUNDRED and twenty-two years after Amerigo Vespucci reached this continent in time to give it a name, another Florentine of the same name came over and had his hand caught in the cog of a machine. He was working for Mackenzie and Mann as an explorer of the interior of Mount Royal, being stationed at the north portal of the tunnel.—News item in Montreal Mail. What interests us is how did Vespucci name America before Columbus discovered it? We have always been under the impression that America was discovered in 1492 and named some years afterwards. Perhaps the Montreal scribe has been reading "On the Sides" Almanac.

THE ACTION of the old and well known firm of Richard Hall and Son in shortening the hours during which their store is open, for the rest of this month and August, is to be commended. The new arrangement should not interfere in the least with the convenience of their customers and will give their clerks a little more respite from indoor work, which should be an advantage to their health. In thus providing for the health and comfort of their employees, the Richard Hall firm is following in the course of the largest and most modern stores, not only of Canada, but of the United States as well.

MAYOR McVEITY of Ottawa has ordered all civic employees not to drink liquor. This is the same city where the tap water is not fit to drink so milk will probably go up in price now.—Montreal Mail. Personally we have a fondness for buttermilk. Statistics show that one glass of buttermilk contains as much nutriment as one pound of beefsteak, but the trouble is that most beef-eaters and beer-drinkers won't believe it.

ONE OF THE MOST ardent "abolish the bar" newspapers in Toronto carried in a recent issue upward of twelve columns of "booze" advertising. This is what might be called having the courage of one's convictions.—Toronto Saturday Night. We presume the advertising was at the regular card rates without discounts.

Missing the Beautiful.

Farmer's Advocate.

Take a look at the big elm which stands in stately majesty in the pasture, field, and if you see nothing in it but two cords of tough-splitting wood you are missing something.

An Appropriate Observation.

Toronto News.

Philadelphia will entertain this year a convention of Osteopaths. We presume that the visiting delegates will walk down Walnut street in a spinal column.

The Late Hon. H. R. Emmerson.

Toronto Mail and Empire.

The death of Hon. H. R. Emmerson, who was Minister of Railways and Canals for a time in the Laurier Administration, removes a prominent member of the House of Commons and one whose ideas at times leant piquancy to the proceedings of the House. Mr. Emmerson will be chiefly remembered for his recent attack on Governors General of Royal Blood.

Calamitous for the Empire.

Brantford Expositor.

Lord Milner interprets Canadian feeling aright in respect to the Irish situation in so far as he says that in case of civil war a feeling of despair would arise in the Dominion as to the future of the Empire. If the two factions are allowed to bring things to that pass, we can say good-bye to all our dreams of Imperial development. There are some who would welcome such a result, but the trouble at the centre of the King's realm is alarming to those who, in the face of great discouragements, have kept alive the cause of closer union.

Versatile Office Seeker.

Some of the applicants for government jobs have great faith in their ability to fit any opening that may be available. Hon. Dr. Reid, Minister of Customs, received a letter recently from a job-hunter, who set out his qualifications as follows:

"I am well qualified in general naming, writting, mathometiks, jeography, good speaking in fore languages, and understand two more (naming them as follows) English, German, Polish, Bohemian, Glecian, and Stowanish, also well experianced in telegraphy, and bookkeeping also a good machinist."

It is not known whether his knowledge of "methomatiks" and "Stowanish" secured him a job in the Customs.

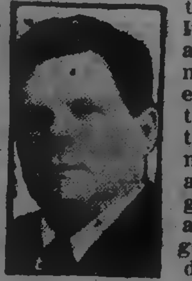
Sir Robert's Favorite.

Sir Robert Laid Borden, during his long association with the legal and judicial fraternity at the bar of Nova Scotia, accumulated a fund of stories of lawyers and their clients. The Prime Minister is fond of one in particular, which deals with an old and frequently arrested offender, who was making one of his erstwhile appearances in the prisoner's dock. The judge had assigned to his defence a young and ambitious but inexperienced lawyer. Before passing sentence the cadi asked the prisoner if he wished to say anything.

"Nothing, my Lord," was the startling response, "except to bespeak the clemency of the court for my lawyer."

TIRED

By Walt Mason



Alas, I am weary of swatting, the effort seems useless and stale; for weeks I've been painfully trotting around after flies, on their trail; I've doped them with acid carbolic, I've slugged them and caught them with trap; and still on my forehead they frolic, when I lay me down for a nap. I hate the pestiferous friskers, which tickle my scalp with their toes; they're building their nests in my whiskers, they're picnicking now on my nose. They give me all kinds of diseases, by carrying germs to and fro; I pause here for seventeen sneezes, I've got the pneumonia I know. I'm strong for those able physicians, who tell us, "Keep swatting, you guys, if you would improve the conditions, and drive from our country the flies!" And yet I am weary of swatting, I've thrown all my weapons away; I'm weary of tirelessly potting the germ bearers, day after day. Because, in the midst of my labors, I glanced from my ancestral hall, and saw that my indolent neighbors were doing no swatting at all. Unless we all labor, united, to chase every fly out of view, the graft is a sepulchre whited, a sheer waste of muscle and thew.

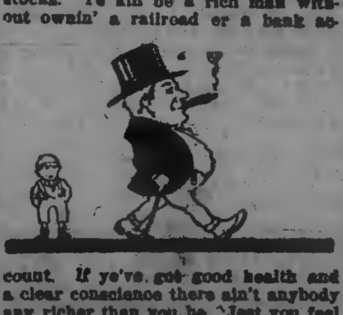
PROSPERITY

IT pays ter look prosperous. Ye can't look a thing fer long without feelin' thet you air what ye look, and if ye feel prosperous why, ye are prosperous and thet's all there is to it. Now, bein' prosperous don't necessarily mean thet ye have lots of money and real estate and minin' stocks. Ye kin be a rich man without ownin' a railroad or a bank account. If ye've got good health and a clear conscience there ain't anybody any richer than you be. Jest you feel rich in spirits and scatter a few dollars' worth of same along the way as ye go, by whistlein' a bar of a tune. Beats all how much a little tune is wuth to this old world. Jest ye keep in tune wuth yer feelin's and be prosperous.



That's It.

"He is bent on going to destruction."
"I see—a regular crook."

"She is an artist, did you say?"
"Yes."
"Does she paint?"
"Always in the evening."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The people who have been up in the air for so long ought to be able to qualify in the aviating races.

If an unhappy marriage can't be cured it certainly ought to be amputated.

Being a fool doesn't pay unless you are paid for it. Then it isn't foolishness, but business.

The bunko man always salves his conscience by telling himself that somebody is going to get you anyhow.

The man who can't take care of himself usually has his moment of genius in which he secures a capable wife.

A man can't be a fool and not know it. He has too many friends.

One reason why so many of us are poor is because there are people who have to be enormously rich in order to keep out of jail.

A girl hates dishwashing worse than a boy hates sawing wood, only she will jeer and say she doesn't mind.

People who keep their tempers are always the ones who never let them get busy.

WATCH THE ICE BOX

The care of the refrigerator is perhaps a twice told tale, but it is so important that it might be well if we all transposed the slogan of "Watch your step" into the home exhortation of "Watch your ice-box." My best friend, Mrs. Efficient Housewife, has the words "Clean the ice box" written in large type on her kitchen list of the day's duties, so that it is emphasized in the minds of her help. She has given a few rules which may easily be followed whether we live in the country or city.

Ice is not a cleanly product in spite of its crystal clearness. It goes through all sorts of vicissitudes on its travels and collects dust and germs. If it is not possible to wash it on the back porch, set it in the sink and dash cold water over it so that it may go into the box as clean as possible. Remember that it is a saving to keep the ice chamber full. A good big piece three times a week is much more economical, both in regard to the degree of coldness maintained and the amount of ice required, than a piece every day. Never put food stuffs in the ice chamber. It is the very warmest part of the refrigerator, and the presence of food, either lying upon or standing against the ice, causes it to melt more rapidly. The only exception to this rule may be in the case of a vegetable which is wanted very crisp, as salad, etc.; then we must accept the extra melting. Very carefully wash the lettuce or parsley, cress or celery, wrap it in oiled paper and lay on the ice for a couple of hours.

The question of odors is a difficult one to deal with in hot weather. So many housekeepers complain that no matter how careful they may be there is always a little odor in the refrigerator. Be careful of the food you put in; for instance, cucumbers have a very decided and penetrating odor, and there is nothing in the world worse than a cantaloupe to "smell up" in an icebox. If there is no cool closet or window box available, put the odoriferous foods into cracked ice for a short time before serving and they may be made deliciously cold. At one of our big hotels the other day I saw a canteloupe served sunk in a little cube of ice. One could imagine how deliciously refreshing it would be, but we can't all take the trouble to do that, or afford it either.

Sometimes tiny insects get into an icebox and cause no end of annoyance. If the shelves are portable, take them out, wash thoroughly in hot soda water, rinse in a strong solution of borax, and do not wipe. Allow them to dry in the sun. This will leave a borax dust on the shelves. Treat the interior of the box in the same way, and when thoroughly dry, sprinkle a little borax over the shelves and bottom before putting the food in and closing up. Charcoal has been spoken of as a prime disinfectant, and a piece should always be kept in the food compartment. It may be changed every other week. Watchfulness and cleanliness are rewarded by freedom from the dangers which cause ptomaines.

WHITE GLOVES.

Keeping Them Clean When on the Way to Evening Affairs.

To appear in town, either in the evening or for daylight affairs, with spotless white gloves has always been one of the troubles of the suburban woman. Of course you may say she need not put on her white gloves till she arrives at the place for which she is bound, but it is not always practical to do this.

One woman has found a way—there always is a way out of every predicament—and she has kindly passed the idea on for the benefit of others. In the fall she purchases, usually at bargain sales, one or two pairs of white silk gloves, one-quarter size larger than the size of gloves she wears; these she draws over her white kid gloves and does not remove them until she reaches her destination. Silk gloves fit snugly over the kid ones and do not look so bulky as cotton ones would. They are easily stored away in her coat pocket until needed again.

A WORN QUILT.

May Be Attractively Repaired With Pieces From the Scrap Bag.

An old quilt with worn covering may be repaired and give much service. Use pieces from your scrap bag about as they come, leave them large as possible and do not be afraid of irregular shapes. Sew them right down to the surface of the quilt, sewing the edge of one patch right over the raw edge of another in a seam, then turn the last patch over right, leaving a finished edge where just sewed; where this cannot be done turn in the edge of patch and finish it that way.

Thus you are making a crazy quilt of big patches and finishing the edges of them instead of adding fancy stitches to hide the seams. You are sewing on your cover and quilting it at the same time. Besides, you are able to use all sorts of patches, and, if large, there is much less sewing to be done. Flannelette and outing flannel make soft and serviceable covers.

VICTORIAN SCARFS.

They Have Been Successfully Revived For Evening Wear.

Net scarfs are embroidered in gold, silver or colored beads in all kinds of fanciful designs. Quite new are the little tiny lappet scarfs in a mosaic of iridescent beads, worn at the throat to fill in the interstices of the evening cloaks.

The patterns on these are worked in colored flowers and even "landscape scenes," such as decorate those quaint bead bags—a revival of old Victorian days. Tiny as these scarfs are, the work must sorely tax both the patience and the eyesight of the embroideress.

Their groundwork is a compact mass of gold, silver or milk white beads, the whole of this miniature wrap combining no inconsiderable amount of warmth and weight with its undoubted picturesqueness.

But when a woman puts her foot down, the size of her shoe cuts no figure.

Good Form

A Doll Party.

A little girl who dearly loved her doll conceived the happy idea of giving dolly a birthday party. No sooner thought of than the little girl and her mother put the thought into execution, with the result that seven girlies received invitations to bring their favorite dolls to the birthday party.

The hours were from 3 to 5, and it was indeed a pretty sight when the dolls and their mothers assembled around the daintily decorated table. Doll dishes were used, and the small table was set entirely with miniature articles, and the gifts brought the birthday doll were most fascinating, for everything that grown people have is now made for dolls.

There were wee cakes with tiny pink tapers, which were lit, and the little mothers were just as grownup as possible and looked after their respective children with true motherly solicitude. At a large table the real children had their repast, and some of them ate the dolls' portions also.

High Teas.

High tea may be defined as a small, formal, early supper, after which the guests are expected to stay for the evening. It differs from a dinner party chiefly in the absence of the roast and vegetables. The principal dish is usually an entree, say chicken patties. Otherwise it may be as formal as a dinner and served in courses, beginning with bouillon and ending with the demitasse, or it may be the old fashioned tea, hot biscuits and honey, cold sliced chicken, preserves and cake.

Housewife's Sets.

Several sets of matching caps and aprons are a positive necessity to the young housekeeper who does her own cooking and answers her own doorbell. The cap looks best when made in Dutch style with wings above the ears, as that sort perfectly protects the most elaborate of coiffures and bears not the faintest resemblance to the conventional housemaid headgear. But, of course, the main thing is to adopt the style of cap which best becomes the individual young housewife.

House Guests.

A hostess should always state in her invitation just how long she wishes a house guest to remain with her. This will be appreciated by the guest, for she will then know what clothing to provide for her visit.

A hostess should plan proper amusements for her guests, taking into consideration their likes and dislikes.

Good Form Hints.

Never grow careless about borrowing and returning things lent you.

Be enthusiastic over things, but don't overdo it or people may think you are insincere and gushing.

Don't keep your friends too long chatting in the street. They may be in a hurry.

GLORIOUS HAIR

Always Attracts—Use Parisian Sage. Thin or Faded Hair Becomes Abundant and Radiant With Life.

Girls and women of all ages want to be charming, beautiful and attractive—it's their birthright—but unsightly, thin and characterless hair destroys half the beauty of a pretty face.

If your hair is not attractive, is falling out, streaky, full of dandruff, too dry, or if the scalp itches and burns, don't delay — use Parisian Sage. Apply with a sponge or cloth, taking a small strand of hair at a time. Rub it well into the scalp. It will go right to the hair roots, nourish them, and stimulate the hair to grow strong and luxuriant. Parisian Sage removes dandruff with one application and cleanses the hair of dirt, dust and excessive oil. It will cool and invigorate the scalp and make the hair doubly beautiful.

Parisian Sage is a scientifically made preparation that gives the hair just what is needed to make it soft, fluffy, thick and gloriously radiant. It is delicately perfumed—not sticky or greasy. Sold in fifty cent bottles only at all drug and toilet counters. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." Accept no substitute.

Delighted users pronounce Parisian Sage the best hair tonic. Get a bottle from The Warne Drug Co. — to-day — they will return the money if you are not satisfied.

When the young husband reached home from the office he found his wife in tears.

"Oh, John," she sobbed on his shoulder, "I had baked a lovely cake, and I put it out on the back porch for the frosting to dry, and—and the dog ate it!"

"Well, don't cry about it, sweetheart," he consoled, patting the pretty, flushed cheeks. "I know a man who will give us another dog!"

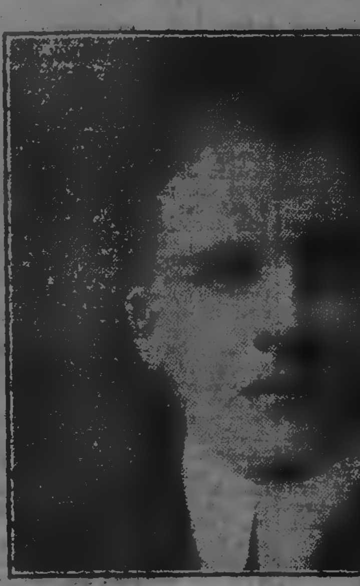
DYSPEPSIA MADE MY LIFE MISERABLE

Did Not Think I Would Ever Be Able To Enjoy Another Meal, Until I Decided To Investigate Claims For "Fruit-a-tives"



W. F. ALLEN, ESQ.

Halifax, N.S., Nov. 22nd, 1913

"I feel that I would be doing "Fruit-a-tives" a great injustice if I did not make known to you the wonderful results that I have obtained from its use. For the past eight years, I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia. I had given up all hopes of ever being able to enjoy another meal, when I chanced to see your advertisement in the papers, and as a last resort, I decided to investigate and see if all you claimed for "Fruit-a-tives" was true. Now, after having used six boxes, I find that your claims for "Fruit-a-tives" are well founded. I am now in perfect health and can enjoy my meals as I formerly did, and I cannot praise "Fruit-a-tives" too strongly". WELLARD F. ALLEN.

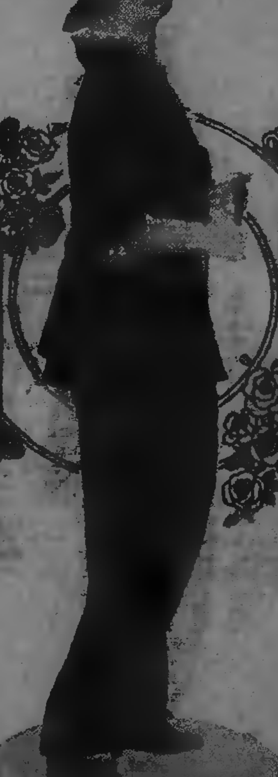
Just as sure as day follows night, just so sure will "Fruit-a-tives cure every trace of Indigestion and Dyspepsia. "Fruit-a-tives" keeps the stomach sweet and clean. "Fruit-a-tives" insures the digestive juices being fresh and plentiful by ridding the whole system of impurities. "Fruit-a-tives stimulates the stomach muscles, and insures every meal being promptly and completely digested.

If you have any Stomach Trouble, such as Belching Gas, Pain After Eating, Sour Stomach, "Heart Burn"—and especially if your Bowels are not regular, by all means take "Fruit-a-tives".

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by "Fruit-a-tives" Limited, Ottawa.

MOHAIR STREET DRESS.

Smart Combination Suits Are Now the Vogue.



MOHAIR AND SILK SUIT.

The vogue for combinations of materials has taken the world of fashion by storm and shows itself in almost every outer garment, whether it be of silk or of cotton or of wool. In this suit blue mohair and plain silk are combined to make a most striking effect in the modish short jacket and the box plaited peplum. Since collars are the features of all smart garments here we have the regulation effect with a softening of lace. The right finishing touches are found in the wreath trimmed hat and the gray topped button boots.

Cleaning Velvet Ribbon.

To clean velvet ribbon, first brush thoroughly with fine velvet brush. Dampen the right side lightly with clear water. Tack or pin the ribbon over space from table to chair with wrong side up. Iron with medium hot iron on wrong side until dry. The wrinkles will disappear, the crumpled edges straighten out and the pile freshen and stand up like new.

FOR HOUSEWIVES

The problem of quantities becomes simpler if it be remembered that a spoonful of anything, without further qualifications means a tablespoonful, and in the same way a cupful means a kitchen cup, or half a pint. A "pat of butter" means an an ounce; a piece of butter "the size of a nut" is half an ounce; "the size of a walnut," one ounce; or the "size of an egg," two ounces. Again, one butter is equivalent to an ounce, a heaped tablespoonful, two ounces, and a cup of solid butter is a half pound in weight. Four even cupfuls of flour weigh one pound, or if the cup is heaped up with flour, six ounces go to the cup. Two slightly rounder tablespoonfuls of flour equal one ounce. Arrowroot and cornflour weigh somewhat heavier.

Sometimes in a recipe a pound of eggs is mentioned and this is apt to puzzle the young cook. It always implies that they are to be weighed in their shells. Ten average-sized eggs usually go to the pound, but it is better really to weigh them, as eggs vary so much in size. In the same way 25 yolks go to the pound. this allows for any waste there may be separating the white from the yolk.

With vegetables and fruit, from four to six potatoes weigh a pound; six to eight onions equal a pound.

Besides these there are special measures which are apt to vary somewhat in different parts of the country. Vegetables and fruit in country districts are often sold by the peck yet this varies with different kinds. A peck of potatoes averages 20 pounds, while turnips, onions, apples and goosberries run about 16 pounds to the peck; peas, plums, damsons and practically all other fruits are reckoned at 18 pounds to the peck, and green peas and beans average from eight to nine pounds to the peck.

A pinch of pepper means about half an average saltspoonful, and a pinch of salt means as much as can be taken up in all four fingers and thumb, or roughly speaking, a teaspoonful.

SUMMER MENU.

In the following menus for two days the dinners and one dish in each luncheon may be cooked in the fireless. The triplicate kettles make it possible to cook three kinds of food at one time in one apartment, says a Newark News writer. A great advantage in this form of cooking is that it encourages system and induces us to plan ahead, so that time, energy and money may be saved. The choice of beverage is left to the housewife.

Breakfast — Strawberries, cereal, cream, poached eggs on toast.

Luncheon — Spanish rice, cream cheese and lettuce sandwiches; cookies,

Dinner—Fricasseed chicken, rice balls, mint, peas, spinach, junket ice cream with strawberries.

Breakfast—Sliced pineapple, omelet with peas, toast, radishes.

Luncheon—Molded spinach with eggs, French fried potatoes, green onions.

Dinner — Chicken soup, bread sticks, boiled macaroni, string beans, onion and cucumber salad, strawberry tapioca, whipped cream.

The left-overs were rice, radishes, strawberries, spinach, onions and cold chicken, with part of the carcass. In the serving of food we must remember that variety does not mean cooking five different kinds of vegetables at one meal, but presenting seven different dinners, and not monotonously repeating them on the same days the following week.

THE BLESSING OF MOTHERHOOD

Healthy Mothers and Children Make Happy Homes

Motherhood is woman's highest sphere in life. It is the fruition of her dearest hopes and greatest desires; yet thousands of noble women through some derangement have been denied this blessing.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong. This is evidenced by the following letters which are genuine and truthful:

London, Ont.—"I wish to thank you for the benefit I received by taking your famous medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Before my baby was born I was so ill I could not stand long or walk any distance. I had to lie down nearly all the time. After I took your medicine I felt like a new woman. I could work from morning till night and was happy and well. I certainly think it relieves pain at childbirth and recommend it to every woman who is pregnant. You may use this testimonial if you like. It may help some other woman."—Mrs. FRANK CORRIN, 132 Adelaide St., London, Ont.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"I was ailing all the time and did not know what the matter was. I wanted a baby but my health would not permit it. I was nervous, my side ached and I was all run down. I heard that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was good and took the medicine. I have now a beautiful baby and your Compound has helped me in every way."—Mrs. J. J STEWART, 290 Humboldt St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

The Tombstone.

A lady of recent widowhood encountered much difficulty in framing an inscription for her dear husband's tombstone. After endless consultations with her friends and neighbors this was the one she selected:

A DEATH SENTENCE AGAINST DOGS

(Canadian Kennel Gazette.)

Our old friend, and past-president of the C.K.C., Dr. J. S. Niven, London, Ont., was kind enough to send us the following editorial from the Toledo Times, which he suggests is worth reproducing and it certainly is, although part of it we have used before. We are always glad to get stories or clippings referring to the dog as a dog. The editorial is headed "A Death Sentence Against Dogs," and reads as follows:

Chief of Police Murphey has issued a death sentence against all stray dogs, to be carried out today.

Is such a sweeping sentence just?

Are all dogs dangerous and evil?

Would it not be just as fair to issue a death sentence against all vagrant men—just because a few of them had committed murder?

Those who would kill all homeless canines are advised to read a tribute to the dog that was delivered by Senator Vest of Missouri some years ago. He was attending court in a country town, and, while waiting for the trial of a case in which he was interested, was urged by the attorneys in a dog case to help them. Voluminous evidence was introduced to show that the defendant had shot the dog in malice, while other evidence went to show that the dog had attacked the defendant. Vest took no part in the trial and was not disposed to speak. The attorneys, however, urged him to speak. Being thus urged, he arose, scanned the face of each juryman for a moment, and said:

Gentlemen of the jury: The best friend a man has in the world may, may turn up against him and become his enemy. His son or daughter, whom he has reared, with loving care, may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and our good name, may become traitors to their faith.

"The money a man has, he may lose. It flies away from him, perhaps, when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees to do us honor, when success is with us, may be the first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its cloud upon our heads. The one absolutely unselfish friend man can have in his selfish world, the one that never deserts him, one that never proves ungrateful nor treacherous, is his dog.

"A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and in poverty, in health and in sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground, where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer; he will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince.

"When all other things desert, he remains. When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces, he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journeys through the heavens. If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him, to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies.

"And when the last scene of all comes, and death takes the master in its embrace, and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by the graveside will the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad, but open in alert watchfulness — faithful and true, even in death."

Then Vest sat down. He had spoken in a low voice, without a gesture. He made no reference to the evidence nor merits of the case. When he had finished, the judge and jury were wiping their eyes. The jury filed out but soon returned with a verdict of $500 for the plaintiff, whose dog was shot; and it was said that some of the jurors wanted to send the defendant to the penitentiary for life.

Drank More Beer and Smoked More Cigarettes

Washington, July 11. — Americans drank less whiskey last year than they did in the previous fiscal year, but they consumed more beer and smoked a great many more cigarettes. Reports to the internal revenue commissioners show that receipts totalled $864,069 less than for the previous year. Receipts from tobacco taxes show an approximate increase over last year of $2,200,000. This gain is due almost entirely to a phenominal increase in the cigarette trade.

TAKEN THOUSAND ZUTOO TABLETS
Cured 500 Headaches.
Mrs. (Dr.) Shurtleff, of Coaticook, says. "Zutoo Tablets must have cured 500 of my headaches, for I have taken 2000 tablets. After trying every remedy within reach, I discarded them all four years ago for Zutoo, which I have taken ever since. I find the tablets a harmless and efficient cure for all kinds of headache."

LIGHTNING BOLT SHOT THROUGH STR. LINTONIA

The Captain and crew and a few passengers on board the Steamer Lintonia had a thrilling experience last evening about 6.36 oclock, as the trim little steamer was plying her course across Sturgeon Lake to Greenhurst, adjacent to Thurstonia. A fierce electrical storm was passing around further north and the rolls of thunder appeared to be quite close, but Sturgeon and Pleasant Points were thought to be out of the danger zone. However, such did not prove to be the case, as a lightning bolt from the blue shot through the steamer with rapidity, passing through the boiler room and out across the waters on the other side of the boat.

It was all over in the twinkling of an eye, and amazing as it may appear, no person was injured, although the Engineer was dazed for an instant and another of the crew had his officer's cap carried away by the contact. Mr. Clarence Fisher, who was also on board, felt the effects of the lightning and was dazed for a short time.

The wonder is that the bolt did not strike home and shatter the steamer. As it was, it was a very narrow escape and an experience that Capt. Grey and his men certainly do not wish to pass through again.

THE TWELFTH OF JULY

The question has been asked why the Battle of the Boyne is celebrated on the 12th of July, when English history says the battle was fought on July 1st. On the first of July, 1690, a decisive victory was won by King William over the Irish and French, who led by King James, Tryconnel and Lauzen, made a stand behind the River Boyne. William's army forced the passage after a sharp struggle, William himself leading his cavalry through the river, and, with his sword in his left hand—for his other arm was crippled by a wound—showing himself wherever a fight was hottest. His best general, Marshall Schomberg, a German Protestant, who had once been in French service was killed while rallying the Huguenots in William's army.

King James, when he saw the day going against him, galloped off, and reproaching his troops with cowardice made his way to the coast, whence he sailed for France.

The reduction of Ireland to England was effected the next year by the Dutch general Ginkell, afterwards created Earl of Athlone, who gained, July 12th, 1691, the battle of Aghrim, over the Irish and their new French General, St. Ruth, who fell in the fight.

In 1751 was passed the statute for the reform of the kalendar, The Julian Kalendar (so called because it owed its origin to Julius Caesar) made the year too long at the rate of nearly three days in four hundred years. In the 16th century the error had been corrected under a regulation of Pope Gregory XIII, and the alteration of new style had been in course of time accepted by most Christian countries. But in the British Dominions people still went on with the old style, until at length the day they called the first of the month was in other lands the twelfth—in short they were eleven days wrong in their reckoning. By the statute of 1751 these nominal days were dropped out of the month of September, 1752, and the new style was adopted. By the same statute the legal year, instead of beginning as formerly, on the 25th of March is reckoned from the 1st of January. In Russia today the old style is still in vogue, and there are now twelve days difference.

Some forty odd years after the change in kalendar, the Loyal Orange Association was formed and the leaders of the Association having been young men when the change in the kalendar was made, decided to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne on the day of the month it was thought according to the new style, which would be really the 12th of July. In fact French and German histories give it as being fought on the 12th, as those countries had accepted the new style before the Battle of the Boyne was fought.

The first regular Orange Lodges were founded in 1795, but the system existed earlier. The orange flowers of the Lilium bulbiferum are worn on the 1st and on the 12th of July, the anniversaries of the Boyne and of Aghrim but by celebrating the anniversary of Boyne by the new style and Aghrim by the old style kalendar both would fall on July 12th and so it has come to be almost universal among Orangemen to keep the one day as the anniversary of both events although still at the present day the orange flowers are worn by Orangemen both the 1st and the 12th of July.

HOT WEATHER AILMENTS

A medicine that will keep children well is a great boon to every mother. This is just what Baby's Own Tablets do. An occasional dose keeps the little stomach and bowels right and prevents sickness. During the hot summer months stomach troubles speedily turn to fatal diarrhoea or cholera infantum and if Baby's Own Tablets are not at hand the child may die within a few hours. Wise mothers always keep the Tablets in the house and give their children an occasional dose to clear out the stomach and bowels and keep them well. Don't wait till baby is ill—the delay may cost a precious life. Get the Tablets now and you may feel reasonably safe. Every mother who uses the Tablets praises them and that is the best evidence that there is no other medicine for children so good. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Co., Brockville, Ont.

W. S. DAVIDSON IS TREASURER OF ASS'N

Calgary to Preserve Memory of Early Days

Calgary, July 11.—With the intention of making the stampede a yearly event and preserving the memory of the early days of Alberta when cowboys were kings of the ranges and the wild cattle and wilder horses ran the unfenced prairie, the Calgary Frontier Athletic Association has been formed.

The days of the old cattleman have gone, even though horses buck as hard and the sport demands as skilful riders as it did when the pioneers were here. There is no sport so thrilling and enthralling as those western contests where brains, sinews and endurance of skilled men were pitted against the might, brawn and marvelous quickness of the wily broncho.

The association intends to keep green the memory of those days, and therefore the directors intend in the near future to hold bucking exhibitions and athletic sports of the frontier days.

The Calgary Frontier Athletic Association, limited, has been capitalised at $50,000. The par value of the shares is $10. The following is the list of the directors of the new company:

President, Col. James Walker, Calgary; first vice-president, Samuel Drumheller, Drumheller; second vice-president, W. S. Herron, Calgary; secretary, H. N. Jarman, Calgary; treasurer, W. S. Davidson, Calgary; directors, Norman Rankin, George Neadick, E. McCormick, W. F. Earnheart, all of Calgary; bankers, the Union Bank of Canada.

THE BOY SCOUTS

The boy scouts of Peterboro have now divided into two troops, junior and senior. The senior troop will meet Fridays at 7.30 p. m. and the junior troop on Thursdays at 7.30 p. m. Boy scouts are now being enrolled for senior troop, age limit of which is 13 years, and height minimum 4 feet 10 inches. Scoutmaster Milby has received a communication from the Duke's private secretary asking that the Peterboro boy scouts be represented in Toronto at the Fair when the Duke makes his farewell inspection of the scouts.

All scouts must be in uniform when attending meetings.

GREAT BRITAIN'S FOOD SUPPLIES

Great Britain annually imports food stuffs and other necessities to the value of $1,375,000,000. Despite the dream of the Imperial Free Trade League, who desired to see the Overseas Dominions supplying the Motherland with her food stuffs, Great Britain, at the present time, imports less than one-third from the outlying parts of the Empire. One-quarter of the food stuffs are imported from the Argentine Republic whose contributions reach $175,000,000 per year. The United States comes next with $165,000,000. Among the outlying parts of the Empire, India takes first place with $125,000,000, Canada comes next with $100,000,000, Australia third with $70,000,000 and New Zealand fourth with $50,000,000. In Europe a number of countries, such as Denmark, Holland and Germany each send over $50,000,000 worth of food stuffs to the people of Great Britain. Altogether, the food supplies of the United Kingdom are drawn from ninety separate countries.

The source of supplies is changing from year to year. Eight years ago Great Britain imported $25,000,000 worth of chilled and frozen meat from the United States; last year, this had decreased to $75,000. In regard to Canada, we have seen a once profitable and extensive meat trade completely wiped out; the same is true of our egg exports and the same will probably happen in regard to cheese. On the other hand, our exports of wheat and flour are increasing. The following figures relate to the changes which are taking place in regard to the food supplies of the United Kingdom:—Within twenty years the imports of wheat have risen from $125,000,000 to $220,000,000; butter from $65,000,000 to $125,000,000; bacon from $40,000,000 to $100,000,000; beef from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000; mutton from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000; fruit from $25,000,000 ot $55,000,000; and eggs from $20,000,000 to $45,000,000. Of wheat, Great Britain produces only about one-fifth of what she consumes and the acreage of arable land in the Kingdom is growing less yearly.

It is to be hoped that efforts will be made to increase the trade between Great Britain and the outlying parts of the Empire so that, in time, the overseas Dominions will in reality become the granaries of the Empire.—Montreal Journal of Commerce.

MAIN FEATURES OF HOME RULE AMENDING BILL

Toronto Star.

To clarify the present situation with respect to the Home Rule legislation, it may be well to summarize the main features of the Home Rule amending bill as it this week has passed the House of Lords. These are:

1. The exclusion of the entire Province of Ulster from the Home Rule bill without any time limit.

2. The Secretary of State in the British Parliament to exercise the executive authority of his Majesty, in lieu of the Lord Lieutenant, in the excluded area.

3. Reduction of Irish representation at Westminster from 42 to 27.

4. Irish judiciary to be appointed by the British Government (as a present), instead of by the Irish, as proposed by the Home Rule bill.

5. House of Lords and not Privy Council to continue to be the final Irish Appellate Court.

6. Royal Irish Constabulary to continue under control of British Government permanently.

These provisions are decidedly more sweeping than those of the amending bill as originally introduced by the Government through Lord Crewe in the House of Lords. The main concession of Asquith's proposal was the exclusion of such Irish counties as might desire it, for a period of six years.

Mr. Asquith has set a precedent in introducing a first-class contentious measure into the House of Lords, in the first instance, as also an amending bill before the bill which it is designed to amend has passed through all its stages — for the Home Rule bill yet awaits its final rejection by the Peers. And this precedent may have some unlooked-for consequences — some of them almost Pickwickian. For instance, the bill, being a Government measure, must now be introduced in the Commons by the Government. But it differs so radically in its present form from the original Government measure, as introduced in the Peers by Lord Crewe, that it may be that the Government, even in introducing it, will be compelled to signify dissent from some of the provisions of the bill which they are themselves introducing. Even if they do so, however, the door is not closed to compromise. It is likely that there will be a certain period of shaffering, and that the final stage will ultimately be reached in the House of Lords again, when the Commons' amendments to the Lords' amendments are under discussion there.

THE FOREIGN PERIL

Ottawa, July 11.—The degree to which foreigners are responsible for capital crimes in the Dominion is indicated by the fact that of eleven cases now before the Justice Department, there is not a Canadian or British born subject in the list. They are mainly Italians and Poles.

Ice cream can be kept hard for 24 hours by placing it in a paper cooking bag. Fold the ends of the bag over tightly to keep out the air and then place in the refrigerator directly on the ice.

To remove coffee stains, mix equal parts of yolk of egg and glycerine, apply to the stain, and allow to dry on. For a light silk garment the glycerine should be mixed with water instead of yolk of egg.

THE GLASS OF QUALITY

When we took the exclusive right to manufacture and fit "PEBLO" Lenses, we believed our patrons would appreciate having their eyeglasses fitted with this superior quality lens, and after two years' exclusive use of "PEBLO" Lenses, we are well satisfied with the result, judging by the hundreds of satisfied customers whom we have fitted with these beautiful lenses.

It is interesting to know that in spite of the expense of procuring "PEBLO" Lenses, the prices to our patrons are no more than when we used other makes of lenses, this being due to the large quantity we buy at a time. Remember we manufacture these "PEBLO" Lenses from the uncut Peblo Glass, in our own Lens Grinding Department. We can duplicate any kind of lens while you wait, and all our work is guaranteed.

RAILWAY CO. TO MOVE SWITCH

From C. G. E. to Rear of Knox Church

Mr. W. H. Munro, representing the Street Railway Co., waited on the Board of Works last night and asked permission to remove the switch, now placed on Park Street in front of the Canadian General Electric, to Reid Street between Wolfe and Dalhousie. The' reason for the moving of this switch accrues from the fact that its present position makes the northern division longer than the southern and it is impossible to give a ten minute service unless the divisions are equal.

Although Mr. Parsons had previously spoken as being opposed to any switch coming too close to the curb Mr. Munro pointed out that by lessening the space between the switch and the mainline there would be ample room for vehicles to pass. Furthermore the Street Railway Co. were willing to grade the road after the switch was installed and leave everything in perfect condition for traffic. As to who was liable in case of accidents, that point is covered by the company's agreement with the city.

Ald. Green remarked that as the siding would be at the rear of the Knox Church, where the only heavy traffic occuers on Sunday and it is not likely this city will be favored with Sunday service for some time, he was of the opinion that the railway company should be granted the permission. Mayor Buller also spoke along those lines making reference to the fact that the citizens were pleased to have the ten minute service and undoubtedly were in favor of helping the company in their efforts.

The motion of the Mayor, seconded by Ald. Green, which granted the company the permission to move the switch was carried unanimously.

PETERBORO CADET HURT AT BARRIEFIELD

Harold Flowers Injured in Face by Baseball Bat

Camp Barriefield, July 10.—Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, paid an official visit to the cadet camp at Barriefield on Thursday morning. He arrived in the city on Thursday morning over the Canadian Pacific railway. At 11.25 he left for London, Ont., to inspect the cadet camp which is being held at that point.

When speaking at the camp grounds, the Minister of Militia stated that he was well pleased with the camp. When asked as to the messing Col. Hughes stated that it was good. "It is something new and it has proven very successful," was the statement of the minister.

During his inspection Col. Hughes was accompanied by Col. V. Williams and Col. T. D. R. Hemming. The three officers made the trip around the camp grounds in an automobile.

One brigade was inspected at a time. The officers of the different brigades were introduced to the minister. Col. Hughes shook hands with a number of the little lads in the different corps. He also made an inspection of the rifle ranges and the swimming pool in the centre of the grounds.

After the inspection of the brigades the minister returned to the camp headquarters where a number of clergymen were introduced to him. In speaking to them Col. Hughes stated that he hoped by this time next year he would be able to furnish the chaplains of the different corps with uniforms.

$1,000 Uniforms.

Col. Hughes stated that he was delighted with the showing made by the highland corps from Williamstown high school, which is attached to the 1st brigade in command of Major W. J. Mills. The corps, which is forty-two strong, has made a hit while in camp. The uniforms worn by the boys cost $1,000. Those in charge of the corps are Capt. W. C. McLennan, Capt. J. A. B. McLennan, Lieut. H. G. Arnold and A. D. McIntyre.

On Wednesday afternoon the camp was inspected by Col. R. G. Gwynne, director of cadet service. Col. Gwynne stated that he was well pleased with the camp as it was one of the best he had the opportunity to visit. He made a thorough inspection of the mess tents and expressed himself well pleased with the service given by Reid & Hambrook, caterers.

Local Cadet Hurt.

Harold Flower, one of the members of the Peterboro corps, was injured on Wednesday evening while watching the baseball game. It appears that when one of the lads was in the act of hitting the baseball the bat flew out of his hand and hit the Peterboro Cadet in the face. A bad cut resulted by the blow. He was taken to the Station hospital, Queen street, where he is receiving treatment.

The bon-fire concert held on Wednesday evening was a big event. The lads gathered around the fire and spent a very happy time.

FOREIGNER TAKEN IN BY ROGUES

They Posed As Employment Agents

A few of the wily ones have picked one or two poor unfortunate foreigners during the past few days for their rapidly going cash. These unscrupulous ones posed as employment agents and effected the extraction of the small sum of money from one poor unfortunate Italian who appeared in the city the day before yesterday looking for work by the means of telling him that on the payment of $2.00 they would secure him a position. Being short of money and anxious for work the man from Sunny Italy parted with his change only to find himself the victim of a crooked game. He was without funds and was forced to appeal to some of his fellow countrymen, who arranged for his board and meals.

Aged.

"Why, look here," said the merchant who was in need of a boy, "aren't you the same boy who was in here a week ago?"

"Yes, sir," said the applicant.

"I thought so. And didn't I tell you then that I wanted an older boy?"

"Yes, sir. That's why I'm back. I'm older now."—Exchange.

BOYS RETURN FROM CAMP

Two Weeks Went Too Quickly at Sandy Point

After two weeks of the best outing with ideal weather, the annual boys' camp of the Y.M.C.A. held at Sandy Point broke up yesterday, the members returning home last night per the steamer Manita. For the past two weeks under the able management of Messrs. Galley, Carson, Meserve and others, the various features introduced made a big hit with the campers. Hikes, motor boats, trips and camp life seemed to make the two weeks pass very rapidly. Several field day programs were also held, affording considerable amusement and entertainment for the boys.

First aid and swimming lessons by Physical Director Carson was carried on during the past week. Life saving lessons were also featured during the entire two weeks.

LOCAL POLICE LOOK FOR JAS. WILSON

The local Police Department have received a communication with the description of the boy bandit, James Wilson, who escaped from the Prison farm at Whitby on July 2. Wilson was serving a term of six months for a series of thefts committed in Lindsay. He and his pal, Smith, were arrested here by Detective Newhall and Meagher on information received from the Lindsay Governor of the County jail. Both had stolen considerable jewelry which was found in their possession. Wilson is of medium height and dark complexion. The local authorities have his finger prints taken when arrested.

Five members of the International Typographical Union, some with members of their families, are known to have perished in the St. Lawrence River some weeks ago. These unfortunates were all natives of the British islands, returning for visits to friends and relatives.

An evening call is productive of much pleasure—if not when you come, at least when you go.

ULSTER QUIET SO FAR

Provisional Government Authorizes Resistance To Home Rule

LONDON, July 11. — The predictions of the Unionist press that yesterday would see some startling developments in the Ulster situation were not fulfilled. Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, arrived at Belfast and was accorded a reception of a military character, after which the "provisional government" held its first formal meeting and passed a series of resolutions, authorising the executive to take whatever steps were necessary to enforce Ulster's opposition to Home Rule.

The Unionist papers declare that the gravest possible crisis is at hand in Ulster, and some of them have sent large staffs to that province and have made preparations to report unexpected events.

On the other hand, the Liberal papers contend that the followers of Carson are working up a great sensation, which is only a bluff, intended to influence the coming debates in the House of Commons on the amending bill and frighten the Government into yielding all the exclusion terms demanded by the Carsonites.

The humorous side of the situation is seen in the almost daily reports in the Unionist papers of extensive landing of arms and ammunition for the Ulster volunteers, which reports are promptly contradicted by other equally trustworthy Unionist papers.

Carson Is Pleased.

LONDON, July 11.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—After the Ulster council meeting yesterday when the leaders were authorised to act in any emergency, and when Ulster Unionists were exhorted to preserve the same restraint as hitherto, Sir Edward Carson said:

"I am proud and touched at the evidence that I have had to-day of the increasing enthusiasm and growing determination of Ulster. To-day's scenes have touched me deeply. Look outside there, now." He stopped and pointed to a dense crowd outside of the Ulster Club which had been waiting patiently for hours to cheer him as he went out. He commented: "Heaven knows what they are waiting for, but there they are."

AMERICAN EXODUS FALLS OFF.

U. S. Labor Department Says Settlers In Canada Are Going Back.

WASHINGTON, July 11. — Secretary Wilson of the Department of Labor is in receipt of reports which indicate that the number of American citizens emigrating to Canada is decreasing. For several years the time of emigration across the northern borders of the United States grew to such proportions as to cause anxiety to American Government officials and others. During 1913, 97,951 American citizens went to Canada, while the number returned from that country to the United States was only 33,317.

When he became Secretary of Labor Mr. Wilson ordered that departmental bulletins giving facts as to the products resources and physical characteristics of all the states be sent to American residents of Canada.

For the eleven months ending May 31, 1914, it is stated at the Department, 68,296 American citizens went over into the Dominion, while 44,127 returned to the United States.

REVENUE IS LESS.

Decrease Is Shown For First Quarter of Fiscal Year.

OTTAWA, July 11.—The Dominion revenue for the opening quarter of the fiscal year totals $33,660,389. In the same period last year it was $41,-268,690. The expenditure on consolidated account is $13,047,642, compared with $10,777,911 in the like period of 1913. Capital outlay decreased by three millions to $4,169,-954, due to fewer railway subsidies.

The revised returns for the fiscal year ended March 31 show total revenue, $163,174,394; consolidated fund expenditure, $127,353,981; capital expenditure, $56,216,712; net debt, $335,966,658, an increase of $21,665,032 on the year.

Joe Martin Is Disgusted.

LONDON, July 11. — Joe Martin, who sails for Canada to-day, said last night: "I stand by the Liberal principles as understood at the time I was elected. The Government have introduced a number of violations of these principles, and some Liberal members are a disgrace to the nation. I know many of them who only support the Government because they hope to obtain honors at some future time. They vote for their knighthood or whatever they aspire to, not for their principles. That is as bad corruption as taking money.

A High-handed Action.

SARNIA, July 11.—There is general indignation over the action of U. S. immigration inspectors from Port Huron in locking several hundred members of the Sarnia Baptist Sunday School in a waiting-room at the Northern Navigation Co. docks yesterday morning until the steamer City of Toledo arrived to take them to Tachmoo Park on the American side for their annual picnic. Locking up Canadians on Canadian soil is considered going a little too far and trouble may result.

China Wants Big Loan.

LONDON, July 11. — Pekin despatches to The Daily Telegraph say that China is about to apply to the bankers of the five-power group for another loan of $100,000,000.

Started on Long Tramp.

OTTAWA, July 11.—Discovered on Thursday night while trudging barefooted along a street in the outskirts of the city, bearing in their arms their penny banks, and headed for the far west, Eric, six-year-old son of Mayor McVeity, and Lorne, son of Captain Ogilvie of the N.T.R., a day's search, in which the mayor and most of the police participated, was ended. They had, soon after leaving home, in the early morning, got rid of their shoes and stockings.

Mayor Mitchel Stops Parade.

NEW YORK, July 11.—Mayor Mitchel announced yesterday that he had instructed the police not to allow the procession Alexander Berkman, anarchist, and his associates proposed to hold to-day in honor of the three men who were killed in a Harlem tenement house last Saturday by a bomb explosion.

Glengarry Cadets Win.

KINGSTON, July 11.—The Highland Cadets, from Williamstown, in Glengarry County, were awarded the Benson trophy at Barriefield camp yesterday morning for general efficiency. Merrisburg Cadets came second, just two points behind the Glengarry boys.

HOMER'S WAR CORRESPONDENCE

The first war correspondent, according to a theory propounded by Sutherland Edwards, appears to have been Homer, who was sent by the editor of an Argo spaper called the Chronos to describe the siege of Troy. Hostilities lasted only about seven weeks, and when they came to an end the Greek chiefs were in no hurry to return to their wives. Homer was a good sort and, as he drew a large salary and a handsome allowance for expenses from the Chronos, he readily accepted the scheme propounded by the wise Ulysses—to keep the war going in the columns of his paper so long as he could manage to write about it. His letters were too good not to publish, and meantime the Greek chiefs had an enjoyable time at Troy and elsewhere. Reissued in book form as "The Iliad," these early examples of war correspondence have enjoyed a wider circulation than was possible even in the columns of the Chronos.—London Chronicle.

MILLIONS OF BOOKS.

It is computed that the total number of printed books in the world is no less than 11,638,810, and that about 8,714,000 of these have been published subsequently to the year 1800, says the "Bulletin de l'Institut International de Bibliographic." From 1500 to 1535 the number of books produced annually averaged only 1,250. It was not until 1700 that the annual average passed 10,000, and it was not until 1887 that it reached 100,000. From 1900 to 1908, however, the annual output averaged 174,375—exactly 140 times the average output between 1500 and 1535.

PETES STOPPED BOBBY AULD

Bobby Auld's honour roll of victories was dented by the Petes yesterday to the tune of 8 to 3, the Beaver hurler being no puzzle to the Blountmen, who started things moving in the first frame, on three hits and a wild heave to the plate. Ever afterwards, the visitors were a beaten team as Bob Sterling had the upper hand. Twice when the Beavers started a rally, the local dispenser tightened up and backed up by splendid fielding, turned the enemy away. Both teams put up some very fine fielding, but the Petes had the edge in this department. Outs at the plate were faultlessly executed, and Chester King's work in starting a double play, was extra good.

First Innings.

Toronto — Fox threw out Kroy. Burrill flew to Welsh. Byrne got Ort's speedy drive.

Petes — Blount doubled over Isaac's head to the left fence corner. Welsh singled, Ort scoring when the throw was wild. Welsh took third, and scored on Dolan's single into right. Rooney advanced Dolan to second. Ort threw out Byrne, and Killilea took King's fly.—Two runs.

Second Innings.

Toronto—Killilea was robbed of a hit on a fine catch by Welsh. Trout dropped a single in short left, but was out trying the steal. Isaac singled to short right and stole. Schultz gave Sterling a battle and fanned.

Petes — Fox grounded out, and Kelly walked. Sterling flied to centre. Kelly was out stealing.

Third Innings

Toronto — Hunt fouled to Dolan, Auld fanned, and Kroy flew to Welsh.

Petes — Blount singled to right. Welsh sacrificed. Dolan grounded to the pitcher. Rooney lined across second, scoring Blount and going to second on the throw-in. Byrne flied out.—One run.

Fourth Innings

Toronto—Burrill walked and went to third when Ort dropped a single into right. Killilea grounded out. Byrne got Burrill at the plate on Trout's tap, and Ort was out on the play, Kelly to King to Kelly, as Trout went down to second.

Petes — Kroy grounded out, Fox fanned, and Kroy took Kelly's fly.

Fifth Innings

Toronto — Isaac, after a foul fest, beat out his drive to King. Schultz flew to Welsh. Hunt walked. Auld sacrificed. Kroy fanned.

Petes — Sterling grounded, Blount flew, and Welsh grounded. All fine fielding by the visitors.

Sixth Innings

Toronto — A fumble by Fox gave Burrill the bag. Ort fanned. King grabbed Killilea's high drive, and doubled Burrill at first. It was a pretty play.

Petes — A wild throw allowed Dolan the bag, and in some lively work on the paths following Rooney's hit to Ort, both runners were safe. Then when Killilea dropped the throw from Auld, Dolan took third, and scored on Byrne's single between short and [illegible]. King sacrificed, and Rooney scored on Fox's hit to centre. On Kelly's out Byrne scored. Sterling [illegible] to right. Blount grounded.—Three runs.

Seventh Innings

Toronto — Trout drew a hit and went home on Isaac's long crack to the centre fences. He scored on Schultz's single across second. Hunt walked, and Sterling threw out Schultz on Auld's tap. Kroy fanned and Burrill grounded.—Two runs.

Petes—Killilea retired Welsh and Dolan on skyscrapers, and Hunt took Rooney's flyer.

Eighth Innings

Toronto — Ort and Killilea were passed and Ort scored on Trout's single. Fox went back for a nice catch of Isaac's fly. King threw out Schultz, and Blount came in for Hunt's fly.—One run.

Petes—Byrne walked. King tapped over Isaac's head. Fox drew a hit, and King went home on Isaac's wide throw. Kelly's sacrifice fly scored King, but Fox was doubled at second. Sterling fanned.—Two runs.

Ninth Innings

Toronto — Harkins, batting for Auld, fanned, Kroy flew to Rooney, Burrill walked, and Ort flew to Welsh.

COMMENT
As You Like It

The Ottawa Baseball Club has finally succeeded in landing men who, it is expected, will strengthen the team and put it back in the race against London for the Canadian League pennant. Manager Shaughnessy wired this morning that he had secured Pitcher Page, from the Detroit Tigers; also Infielder Dazzol. Paige was with St. Louis for a while last year and will come here under optional agreement. Drazzel is with Chatanooga and the Ottawas will buy him through the Detroit Club. Both are now on their way and will report to Ottawa tomorrow. They will be available for the Peterboro series.

Shaughnessy also expects to get an outfielder from the Detroit club, and will shake up his present team at once. Wager has been released and Fried will be loaned to the Brantford club. Nill will be replaced by Drazzel unless he braces up, and two of the present pitchers will also be let out.—Ottawa Citizen.

Finding a Starting Place.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., July 11.—W. D. Walker, agent for Lieut. Porte, who plans to cross the Atlantic in the flying boat America, has arrived here to select a starting place for it. He will take a motor trip with President Reid of the Reid-Newfoundland Railroad yesterday, to inspect various harbors along the coast between St. John's and Cape Race.

THE STEAM AUTOMOBILE.

The difficulty of obtaining really efficient condensation placed what appeared to be an effectual bar before the steam automobile some years ago; mileage was limited because of the limited amount of water that could be carried. Now, however, this difficulty would seem to have been overcome in a car that has just made its appearance in Waltham, Mass. A double-acting, single-expansion steam engine with two cylinders measuring 4 x 6 inches is used. A fire tube boiler is used, with 158 feet of heating surface, and heat is supplied by a kerosene burner; it is said the car will run 10 miles to the gallon of kerosene. The condenser is the interesting part of the car. It is an ordinary honeycomb radiator, such as is used on gasoline automobiles for the cooling system. The exhausted steam is carried directly to the top of the radiator, whence the condensed water passes back through a Venturi mixing chamber to the water tank; the temperature of the water in the radiator never exceeds about 100 deg. Fahr. The car is capable of a speed of 75 miles an hour on 800 pounds steam pressure, which is normal, in 15 seconds, from a standstill.

EIGHT PERSONS HURT.

Several Others Narrowly Escape When Motor Runs Amuck.

MONTREAL, July 11. — Eight persons were injured, two seriously, the plate glass window of a saloon was smashed and a score of people narrowly escaped injury yesterday morning when a motor delivery truck, driven by W. Bibeau, owned by H. Letourneau, became unmanageable, the brakes refusing to work while descending the steep hill on St. Lawrence boulevard, near Ontario street.

Ben Ostell and Jenny Ostell, aged 5 and 22, respectively, brother and sister, were hit by the mud guard of the machine and thrown a distance of six feet. They were picked up unconscious and taken to the General Hospital along with A. Lupino, who was struck by falling glass. At the hospital it was found that the Ostells were badly bruised and probably suffering from internal injuries.

The truck crashed through the plate glass window of Lafleur's saloon.

West Kent Recount Started.

CHATHAM, Ont., July 11. — The recount of ballots in connection with the recent election in West Kent was started yesterday morning before Judge Bell. George Lynch Staunton of Hamilton is appearing for Geo. W. Sulman, the Conservative candidate, declared elected by 13, and J. A. Walker, K.C., of Chatham, represents R. L. Brackin, who disputes the official count. The recount will not be completed for a few days.

PROPOSALS TO REDUCE ARMAMENTS IS BADLY RECEIVED BY POWERS

In Reply to Criticism of British Policy Regarding European Situation, Foreign Secretary Declares That Efforts Towards Peace Have Availed Little.

LONDON, July 11.—Criticisms of the bloated armaments of the European powers were directed at Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, in the House of Commons yesterday. In reply Sir Edward declared that Great Britain had done her best, but her direct suggestions to foreign countries as to the limitation of armaments had been without any good result. On the contrary, they had been regarded, he said, as attempts to limit their control of their freedom of action and had been resented accordingly.

Sir Edward added that the most notable thing in Europe during the past year had been, not the naval, but the military increase, and Great Britain had not been responsible for that.

Sir Edward Grey also referred to the invitation sent by the Netherlands Government on July 2 asking the nations which participated in the second peace conference to appoint delegates to a committee to formulate a definite program for the third conference. He said that when the United States first proposed the appointment of a committee he had replied sympathetically, but had criticized it since as being unwieldy. He had suggested a smaller body, which he thought probably would deal with the matter more expeditiously. Today he said he would repeat the same criticism in accepting the invitation from the Dutch Government.

Great Britain, according to Sir Edward, would support at The Hague any proposals calculated to lead to a reduction of expenditure on armaments, but he would oppose personally all direct suggestions on the subject to other countries as long as there was any likelihood of them being resented as attempts at pressure.

CARRANZA STILL IN CONTROL

Constitutionalist Leader Acknowledged by Villa's Generals.

SALTILLO, July 11.—The conference at Torreon, which met to adjust differences between Carranza and Villa has completed its labors to the satisfaction of the first chief of the Constitutionalists, according to announcement last night of Gustav Pinoza Morelos, Gen. Carranza's private secretary. Details of the conference were not made public.

It was announced, however, that all generals of the divisions of the north commanded by Villa have reaffirmed their recognition of Carranza's authority and again expressed their adherence to the plan of Guadalupe, providing for Carranza exercising executive authority in case of Constitutionalist success, until elections can be held.

It was stated that troops under Gen. Villa and those under Gen. Pablo Gonzales would move southward to-day in a combined march with Mexico City as their goal.

Took 5,000 Prisoners.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., July 11.—Gen. Alvaro Obregon, commander of the Constitutionalist forces, who on Wednesday captured the important city of Guadalajara, Mexico, took prisoner more than 5,000 Federals after three days' battle.

Mexican Delegates at Montreal.

MONTREAL, July 11. — Four of the five Mexican delegates who represented the interests of Mexico at the recent "A. B. C." Peace Conference at Niagara Falls, arrived here yesterday morning. The delegates are Senors Luise Elgaro, R. Elgara, M. Del Campo and Algara de Sumn. They will remain here until further instructions from Emilio Rabasa, the chief delegate for Mexico are received. The latter is now in New York, and word is expected from him within the course of a day or so.

GOVERNMENT CLEARED.

Railways Department Acted In Good Faith In Padded Account Case.

FREDERICTON, N.B., July 11.—That David W. Brown, acting on an alleged hint from J. V. Johnson, Federal inspecting engineer, practically padded the cost of the Southampton Railway to make sure of the double subsidy of $6,400 a mile, was brought out yesterday in the most sensational session of the Government inquiry. It was also made clearly apparent that the Dominion Department of Railways and Canals acted in good faith on the report submitted by Mr. Johnson. At the end of a severe examination before the commissioner, Mr. Brown made the statement that acting on a statement of Mr. Johnson that the cost was too near the double subsidy limit of $21,400 a mile, and that J. K. Pinder's books would not stand an audit, he raised the value to $13,400, or about $1,000 per mile.

Mr. Johnson, when recalled to the stand, stoutly maintained his innocence and said that the statement credited to him by Mr. Brown was untrue.

It is expected the enquiry will close to-day, as the commissioner intends sitting from 9.30 until 6 p.m.

CAPTAIN IS ARROGANT.

But He Has Finally to Submit to Arrest by Canadians.

ST. CATHARINES, July 11.—When Chief of Police Taylor of Thorold boarded the steamer Cadillac to serve a summons on Captain Sullivan in connection with a wage case, Sullivan maintained that no British peace officer had a right to go aboard an American vessel. To enforce his contention the captain called his mates and two of the crew and had the chief thrown from the boat to the canal bank. High Constable Boyle and Chief Howe of Port Dalhousie met the steamer at that place and arrested the captain after considerable bluff and bluster on his part. He was taken to St. Catharines, charged with an indictable offence, and held in $4,000 bail.

Bandits Hold Up Train.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 11. — The two masked bandits who held up the westbound Katy Flyer on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, near Matson, Mo., 65 miles north of here, Thursday night, captured a track walker who surprised them as they were robbing the train and took him away with them.

The bandits, after stopping the train and firing a fusillade to keep passengers from alighting, compelled the engine crew to uncouple the express car and then take them some distance, when the safe was blown.

DENMARK DEMOCRATIC.

Advocates of Revised Constitution Victorious at Polls.

COPENHAGEN, July 11. — The elections for the Upper House of the Danish Parliament, held yesterday, resulted in the return of twenty members of the Right, five less than before dissolution, five Free Conservatives, twenty members of the Left, five Radicals and four Socialists.

Of the twelve members nominated by the King nine are supporters of the Government bill for the amendment of the constitution on a democratic basis, the passage of which is now assured. In the Upper House as it is now constituted this bill has 38 supporters and 28 opponents.

The Upper House of the Danish Parliament was dissolved early in June because of the deadlock over the constitutional amendment bill, which abolishes all property qualifications for electors of members of that body and takes away from the crown its right to nominate twelve members of the chamber. Twelve members of the House appointed by the King were not included.

ESCAPED FROM FLAMES.

Father, Mother and Child Nearly Perish In Brockville.

BROCKVILLE, July 11.—Mr. and Mrs. L. Morrison and their three-year-old son narrowly escaped being burned to death when fire broke out in their home at an early house yesterday. The screams of the child awakened the parents. At this time the whole lower portion of the dwelling was enveloped in flames. Morrison beat a hasty exit through the stifling smoke with his wife and child by a rear stairway, and succeeded in reaching the street safely with nothing but their night clothes. The greater portion of the household effects were burned and the dwelling badly scorched. The loss is fully covered by insurance.

Wouldn't Arrest Mayor.

MONTREAL, July 11. — Mayor Martin was caught yesterday breaking a civic bylaw by stopping his motor car at the curb on the wrong side of St. James street and allowing the car to stand there for some time. Jean Juneau, sales manager of the Stockwell Motor Co., who has been prosecuted a number of times for violating the bylaw in similar fashion, took the number of the car, also the number of a policeman, who declined to take any action in the matter, though pressed by Juneau to do so.

The latter threatens to make trouble for all concerned.

Free Rides For Mothers.

BERLIN, Ont., July 11. — The Light Commission last evening decided to give free trips once a week to mothers and children under ten years of age to Waterloo and Bridgeport during the months of July and August, on the Berlin and Waterloo Street Railway. It was reported that the traffic during the month of June was the largest in the history of the railway, 101,139 fares being collected, compared with 87,878 for the same month last year. The net profit for the month was $1,256.61.

Cadets Inspected.

LONDON, Ont., July 11.—Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, paid a short visit to the city yesterday when he inspected the annual cadet camp at Carling's Heights. Fourteen hundred lads took part in the march past, and their soldierly bearing drew glowing commendation from the Minister. Col. Hughes said that the camp this year in numbers, discipline and enthusiasm was the best yet held.

Steamer Invermore Is Aground.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., July 11.—The steamer Invermore of the Reid-Newfoundland Railway Co. is ashore near Brig Harbor, on the Labrador coast. She carried passengers, mail and freight from this city. No reports of her condition have been received.

Russian Diplomat's Death.

BELGRADE, July 11. — The Russian Minister to Servia, N. Hartwig, died suddenly yesterday while conversing with the Austrian Minister at the Austrian legation. He was appointed to that post in September, 1909.

FINE CREW FOR THE SHAMROCK

Will Be Well Selected and Trained

Brightlingsea, England, July 11.—Shamrock IV., Sir Thomas Lipton's new challenger for the America Cup, will have the best selected and best trained English crew that ever sailed for the famous trophy.

Furthermore, the challenger will have a crew representative of the country which she hails from, which cannot be said of the defending yacht. In recent cup matches sons of Sweden and Norway have been chosen as the best sailors available to sustain the supremacy of America.

Thirty-Three Men.

All told her crew will number about thirty-three men. Every one of them is a trained racing sailor of the best type produced in England. A majority of them have raced for several years under the Corinthian captain of Shamrock, W. P. Burton, and his professional skipper, Albert Turner.

Shamrock's professional skipper is from Wivenhoe, where he has spent all his life. In shipping his crews in years past he has naturally chosen men from his own district.

Both Shamrock's mates, William Frost and Edward Heard, respectively first and second, are from Tollesbury, as well as nearly a third of the crew.

East Coast Type.

These East Coast sailors are of a type that will distinguish them as true representatives of their country. They are fair-skinned, brown-haired, blue-eyed chaps—fair types of modern Saxons. You will see hardly a black-haired man among them. In build they are powerful, with with particularly strong-looking shoulders, arms and hands.

In manner these English sailors are quiet and go about their work with few words.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

Mother—(cooking)—Phew! That's a bad egg.

Willie—Why don't you make it good?

Mother—I can't make a bad egg good, my son.

Willie—Why, I heard the grocer tell you if you found any bad ones he'd make 'em good, and if he can, why can't you?

BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT

To go through life successfully you must be scouting all the time to prevent yourself from falling into the snares and pitfalls of this wicked world. Success comes by scouting only — when I say success I don't mean the boy or man who has things forced upon him, as some seem to have, without any effort of their own, as these are extraordinary exceptions and come but to few.

To you who have to make your mark in life, and are anxious to ascend the ladder, I say, be a SCOUT, as this will help you more than anything I know, and the little time spent in same should be one of your best investments. Be a Scout, make an effort to be a man, and by God's help make one. Be a Scout, and by being a good Scout, you will become a good and useful, healthy, wealthy and wise man. Be a Scout.

The moving pictures at the Grand showed those who saw them what it was possible to do, what it was doing, and will do. Take the boy out of the slums and gutters of this life and bring him to be a sound, healthy, wealthy man. I suggest to you ministers of this city to be Scouts or Scout Masters. As I understand, this is what we are most in need of, to press this noble movement forward. Ministers, become Scout Masters — preach Scouting. There is far more in it than politics and the liquor traffic. What it is and what it means, according to the priciples, laws and rules laid down in Sir Baden-Powell, K. C. B., K. C., V. C., book, Canadian Boy Scout, which may be obtained at any of the book stores in this city, price 35 cents, in my opinion no better book can be placed in a boy's hands. The Boy Scout movement is no more or less than training a boy to be a practical Christian, in addition to giving him health, which is the finest thing in the world. A Christian without good health is a poor creature.

"Better to hunt in fields for health unbought than fee the doctor for a noxious draught."—Dryden.

"The wise for cure on exercise depend;
God did not make His works for man to mend."

To the Big Brothers of Peterborough

I suggest to you to help to boost the Boy Scout Movement. Your time will be well and profitably spent in saving, and making our boys into good, sound, healthy, strong, and intelligent men and citizens.

To the Knocker.

I say, read in the book before you open your mouth, so that you might know what you are talking about. Any fool can pull down—few can elevate. Try it. Be one of the few and elevate yourself and others. As the knocker, as a rule, knocks himself down, don't be a knocker.

The Scout Law.

A Scout's honor to be trusted.

If a Scout says "On my honor it is so," that means that it is so, just as if he had taken a most solemn oath. Similarly if a Scout officer says to a Scout, "I trust you on your honor to do this," the Scout is bound to carry out the order to the very best of his ability, and to let nothing interfere with his doing so.

If a Scout were to break his honor by telling a lie, or by not carrying out an order exactly, when trusted on his honor to do so, he may be directed to stand over his Scout badge and never to wear it again. He may also be directed to cease to be a Scout.

2. A Scout is loyal to the King and to his officers, and to his parents, his country and his employers. He must stick to them through thick and thin against any one who is their enemy or who even talks badly of them.

3. A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others. And he is to do his duty before anything else, even though he gives up his own pleasure or comfort, or safety to do it. When in difficulty to know which of two things to do, he must ask himself: "Which is my duty?" that is, "Which is best for other people?" and do that one. He must be prepared at any time to save life, or to help injured persons. And he must try his best to do a good turn to somebody every day.

4. A Scout is a friend to all and a brother to every other Scout, no matter to what social class the other belongs. Thus, if a Scout meets another Scout, even though a stranger to him, he must speak to him, and help him in any way that he can, either to carry out the duty he is then doing, or by giving him food, or, as far as possible, anything that he may be in want of. A Scout must never be a snob. A snob is one who looks down upon another because he is poorer, or who is poor and resents another because he is rich. A Scout accepts the other man as he finds him, and makes the best of him. "Kim," the Boy Scout, was called by the Indians "Little friend of all the world," and that is the name that every Scout should earn for himself.

5. A Scout is courteous: That is, he is polite to all, but especially to women and children, and old people and invalids, cripples, etc. And he must not take any reward for being helpful or courteous.

6. A Scout is a friend to animals He should save them, as far as possible, from pain, and should not kill any animal unnecessarily, for it is one of God's creatures. Killing an animal for food is allowable.

7. A Scout obeys orders—of his parents, patrol leader, or scoutmaster, without question.

Even if he gets an order he does not like, he must do as soldiers and sailors do—he must carry it out all the same, because it is his duty; and after he has done it he can come and state any reasons against it; but he must carry out the order at once. This is discipline.

8. A Scout smiles and whistles under all circumstances. When he gets an order, he should obey it cheerfully and readily, not in a slow, hang-dog sort of way.

Scouts never grouse at hardships, nor whine at each other, nor swear when put out.

When you just miss a train, or some one treads on your favorite corn — not that a Scout ought to have such things as corns — or under any annoying circumstances you should force yourself to smile at once, and then whistle a tune, and you will be all right. (N. B.) Since this rule first appeared in print a great many Scouts, old and young, have written to me saying how useful it has been to them.

9. A Scout goes about with a smile on and whistling. It cheers him and cheers other people, especially in time of danger, for he keeps it up then all the same.

The punishment for swearing or using bad language is for each offence a mug of cold water to be poured down the offender's sleeve by the other Scouts. It was the punishment invented by the old British Scout, Captain John Smith, three hundred years ago.

10. A Scout is thrifty: That is, he saves every cent he can, and puts it into the bank, so that he may have money to keep himself when out of work, and thus not make himself a burden to others; or that he may have money to give away to others when they need it.

Thanking you for your valuable space, I am, dear sir, one interested in the interest of our boys and the Scout movement.

THINKS PORTE WILL FAIL

Seattle, July 11.—Predictions that Lieut. Porte and his companion will perish when they attempt to fly across the Atlantic ocean in a hydroplane next month were made to-day by Jack Irwin, superintendent of the Marconi company's North Pacific division.

Irwin was with Walter Wellman when he attempted to cross the ocean in a dirigible balloon and was wrecked with it.

"When a more reliable engine can be produced, the trans-Atlantic flight may be possible," said Irwin, "but it is not now. If Porte is forced to 'land' on rough water, I would not envy his predicament."

ST. JAMES' S. S. EXCURSION WAS FINE OUTING

The annual excursion of the St. James' Sunday School, held yesterday via the steamer Stoney Lake to Jubilee Point, proved to be one of the most successfully and enjoyable excursions held this season. The boat could carry very few more, nevertheless the women and children were taken care of in a manner which reflects great credit upon the committee in charge. The smallest child on the boat had as much pleasure as any of the adults.

At Jubilee a large list of sports were run off, the most important being a baseball game between the single and married men. The Benedicts came out ahead with a score of 7-4. The batteries for the married men were Rev. Clarry and J. Anderson and for the single men E. Aikins and J. Ridyard. After the sports were completed a sail on Rice Lake was enjoyed. The boat arrived at her new wharf a few minutes before eight o'clock.

The gentlemen who composed the main committeee were :—Messrs. A. E. Prest, W. G. Wright and J. O. Fife.

DUKE VISITS NEWFOUNDLAND

Vice Regal Party Sees Life In Island Colony

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., July 11.—The Duke of Connaught had an interesting experience Thursday evening and yesterday forenoon getting a first real insight into the cod fishery industry, as prosecuted by the Newfoundlanders. At Blanc Sablin he saw a cod trapper's large enclosure of netting, used extensively for fishery purposes nowadays, hauled in by the fishermen, and its catch removed, the fish being then brought to the curing house, washed, salted, dried and packed for market. He realized the hardships the Newfoundland fisher folk endure in earning their bread by constant battle against fog, ice and storm.

At St. Anthony yesterday morning he saw another aspect of the life of the fisher people, the assistance provided for them in the way of medical, surgical and educational relief through the efforts of Dr. Grenfell, assisted by the generosity of well wishers in Britain, Canada and the United States. The herd of 1,200 reindeer were of especial interest to the party. They are to be distributed in a year or two along the Labrador coast, their advent to be marked by a wholesale slaughter of the dogs now used, reindeer being substituted for the dogs.

The duke is now on the way to Botwood, in Notre Dame Bay, where he arrives to-day. He will then proceed to Greenland farms, where the Harmsworths have their big paper mills.

LEAVE WALK WHERE STAKED

City Engineer Visits Locality, Where Protest Comes From

Messrs. T. Brown and R. Gordon, the latter appearing for B. Lacroque, waited on the Board of Works last evening and requested that the sidewalk to be placed on the east side of Lock street from Lansdowne street to Gladstone avenue be placed out a foot further than where it is staked. The reason given for this was that if it were placed where it is staked out it would cause the fences to be moved in. The City Engineer explained that the people along that section were utilizing considerable of the city property; in one place the fence was out over four feet. The matter was left for him to settle as best possible.

In speaking to a Review scribe after visiting the spot this morning, Mr. Parsons stated that the sidewalk should either be placed where staked or not at all. Moving it out a foot would cause a jog in the straight walk, and the city has been endeavoring to put a stop to such practice. The Engineer intimated it might be possible to have the building of the sidewalk left in abeyance.

All Off Says Leonard.

Major Leonard made this reply when told that it was reported that the college would further consider the offer.

He said: "My proposition to Queen's University is absolutely withdrawn. If the question be reconsidered it will not be with the trustees or the senate."

PETERBORO DELEGATION TO S.A. CONGRESS RETURN HOME

C.P.R. Station is Scene of Many Happy Reunions and Civic Officials Are Also on Hand ---Temple Band Won High Praise, for Local Corps and the City

The local Salvation Army Band which took the place of the Territorial Staff Band after that noble organization had been practically annihilated by the St. Lawrence tragedy, returned home Saturday afternoon from the London Congress and was given a fine reception by local army members and city officials. The station platform was crowded when the train pulled in. Adjutant McElhiney who had charge of the local delegation was boiling over with enthusiasm over the outcome of the congress and the reception tendered the local band and the Canadian delegation as a whole.

The train which brought the band home arrived at the C.P.R. station about 3.35. Mayor Buller, Ald. Stratton, chairman of the reception committee and G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., were on hand to extend the hand of welcome but the welcome the army accorded its band surpassed, naturally, the civic welcome. It was some little time before the homecomers had completed the task of shaking hands and caressing friends and relatives. The band of the junior department which has been taking the senior band's place struck up Welcome Home as the train steamed in. The band was under the direction of T. T. Blunt.

A procession was formed and just previous to its departure a photograph of the band was taken. The procession covered several of the main streets and reached the Temple via Simcoe Street where Mayor Buller, Ald. Stratton and G. A. Gillespie spoke in fitting terms of the good work the army was doing and the honor bestowed on the city by the local band's showing at the congress. Adjutant McElhiney replied in a fitting manner after which the bands and followers held a service in the Temple where selections were rendered by the juvenile band and the songsters' brigade.

Civic Reception.

Arrangements will be completed today for a big reception to be tendered the band at Victoria Park tomorrow evening. Mayor Buller, Ald. Stratton, W. H. Denham and the local members of parliament have promised to be on hand. The band will play a special program of numbers which met with special favor at the congress. The program follows:

March—Comrades True.
Selection—The Army.
Vocal Number—I love Thee.
Selections—Songs of Germany.
Trombone and Cornet duet—The Larboard Watch. Bandsman Sandford, Bandmaster R. Peryer.
March—The Army Brave and True.
Selection—Loving Grace.
Band Song—A Stranger.
Selection—All Nations.

The march Comrades True was played by the famous Belfast Band and the local band under W. H. Peryer's direction and created a fine impression while the vocal selection I Love Thee was given on the Thames. All through the playing of the band at the congress comments of a highly favorable nature and correspondents to the Canadian Wad Cry speak in glowing terms of the band's work. Bandmaster Peryer and his men are to be congratulated on their fine work which putting it mildly is a credit to themselves, the Army and this city.

On Thursday evening at the Temple a big meeting will be held when the adjutant will tell of the local delegation's experiences at the congress. On that occasion also Bandmaster Blunt of the junior department will hand over the keys of office of the band and Songsters' Brigade, to Bandmaster Peryer of the senior band and Albert Moynes of the Songsters' Brigade. In passing it the choral society. In passing it may be said that Mr. Blunt has worked wonders with the junior band and singers. When the senior band left for the old land he was called upon to take charge of practically green players and today the band although not finished in tone and technique as the senior band, is a credit to any section of the Army.

A Few Impressions.

Adjutant McElhiney, when interviewed regarding the trip and congress stated that it would take a book to tell all but some of the experiences give one a vague idea of the giganticness of the affair. On the five mile march more than 20,000 took part including 200 bands. When the local band arrived in London the Hon. Geo. Perley, acting Canadian High Commissioner sought out the band. He met them as they were swinging down the street playing the Maple Leaf and immediately jumped onto a buss and addressed the band members in stirring tones. For the mammoth parade the High Commissioner provided a huge float on which was piled the products of Canada. Out of respect for the Dominion and the serious blow it suffered when the Empress of Ireland went down, the Canadian delegation was given first place in the parade of floats. One feature of the Canadian float was Adjutant McElhiney's placing of a Peterboro pennant on the flag bearer of the local band. The name can be plainly seen in pictures that appeared in the Canadian and English War Cry publications.

GREAT ORANGE PARADE AT LINDSAY TO-DAY

Peterboro Lodges do Their Share to Swell the Ranks at Annual Celebration.

Lindsay, July 13.—All the many trains arriving in Lindsay this morning, brought thousands of Orangemen and their friends to take part in the celebration. The town is in gala attire, the main streets having been decorated with streamers and flags by representatives of J. J. Turner and Sons, Peterboro. Several of the prominent visitors have commented very favorably on the decorations.

HUERTA TO RESIGN THIS WEEK, PERHAPS TO-DAY

According to Statement of His Under Secretary — Will Step out to Save Country from Civil War and Capture of His Capital

Canadian Press Despatch.

Vera Cruz, July 13.—To save his country from the horrors of civil war and his capital from capture and perhaps sack by a victorious army, General Huerta intends to resign the provisional presidency and leave Mexico. This is the statement made by his under secretary of foreign affairs, Roberto Esetvo Riuse who reached here yesterday on his way to Europe. Huerta, he said, will surrender the government to his new minister of foreign affairs, Francisco Carbajal who in turn out will step aside later for some other administrator, wholly acceptable to the Constitutionalists. The under secretary thinks Huerta will resign this week perhaps today.

CARL DULLMAN IS AT LIBERTY

Fenian Dynamitard Released After 14 Years

SENTENCED FOR LIFE

Was Leader in the Welland Canal Dynamite Outrage

KINGSTON, July 13. — "I'm a lucky man all right." This remark came from Luke Dillon, alias Carl Dullman, as he passed out of the big gate at the penitentiary Saturday afternoon after being given his release. Dillon was a life convict. Release came about after a fight lasting two years. He was the leader in the Welland Canal dynamite outrage of 14 years ago. Since May, 1900, he has been in the penitentiary, having been given a life sentence. Dillon belonged to Philadelphia, Pa., and there was engaged in the shoemaking business, and with two other men, Nolan and Walsh, he aimed to strike a blow at Canada on behalf of Fenian organizations in the United States. Their game went wrong and all three landed in the penitentiary. Dillon's plans were foiled, but had they been successful there would have been great loss of life and Canadian shipping would have suffered a great deal. After entering the penitentiary, Dillon declared his sole object in making the attempt on the canal was not to cause loss of life, but to lead a blow at England, which the Clan-na-Gael hates.

For the past two years great efforts were put forth to secure his release, and the sum of $50,000 was subscribed. Dillon's part against the murderers in the celebrated Dr. Cronin case, Chicago, went a long way in influencing the Canadian Government to free and deport him.

During his long stay in the penitentiary his conduct was good and this was reported to Hon. C. J. Doherty.

The ex-convict was taken on the steamer America by two guards and a local clergyman accompanied the guards as far as Cape Vincent, where Dillon was placed on American soil and allowed to go his way. He is in fine health; his long stay in prison has not affected him much.

Came to Peterboro on the Twelfth of July, 71 Years Ago

Mrs. John King, 610 Bethune Street, is celebrating the 71st anniversary of her arrival in Peterboro, Mrs. King having come here with her parents, when a child of very tender years. Since the twelfth of July 71 years ago, Mrs. King has always evinced great interest in the Orange celebrations. She is the oldest living member of the George Street Methodist Church.

Her father, the late Jos. Spencely assisted in the erection of many of the older buildings in Peterboro, he being a stone mason by trade. Two years ago, the Review published an account of an interview with Mrs. King, who had many interesting incidents to relate.

ORANGEMEN AT CHURCH

Rev. J. R. Webb Delivers Sermon to Local and District Lodges

WAS APPLAUDED

He Admires the Church but Has no Respect for Hierarchy

Rev. J. R. Webb preached an excellent sermon to the Orangemen who attended the annual church service at Murray Street Baptist Church, last evening. During the course of his sermon the preacher was applauded.

His text was Acts 10 ch., 15 v., which deals with the vision to Peter who had gone to the housetop of Simon, to pray. The point brought out was that Peter had come down to meet Cornelius, not with the feelings he had previously held, but as a man. Peter was broadening up; he was a larger and better man. He perceives that God was no respector of persons. This had been the experience of the Orange Order. "You have been on the housetop," said the preacher. "You have seen visions, you have dreamed dreams and you have come down a bigger and better organization than ever. You have become large in heart, mind and sympathies."

He was not an Orangeman; he had never had that honor, but he thought he knew all about that principle of the Orange Order—that it does not ask any liberty for itself, that it does not ask for the Roman Catholic. The Orangemen not only contends but asserts that the Roman Catholic shall have the liberty to worship according to his own conscience.

Peter, he said, came down from the housetop, believing that there were many good things in the Gentiles.

We were not shouting today as our forefathers did about the Roman Catholics. We were not damning the Pope as did our forefathers and we were not ridiculing their method of prayer, as some had done in the past. A true Orangeman would say, "I will not let any priest or pope take away any of my rights and liberties and I will not let any Protestant take from the Roman Catholic what is his rights." When a priest told him he could not get to heaven, outside the Roman Catholic Church, he would tell that priest that he, the priest, could go to heaven in spite of his church.

The great mass of Roman Catholics, the preacher said, are not to be denounced but they should receive the helping hand, by those who have had the light, the Roman Catholics have not had. Rev. Mr. Webb made reference to an incident at Norwood, where he took part at the funeral of the wife of the Baptist minister. There were several beautiful floral tributes but none more beautiful than that received, with a note of deepest sympathies, from Rev. Father Kelly. "These things are beautiful, they are admirable," he said.

Peter had met Cornelius and said we are both men, we are equal, let us be helpful to one another.

Protestants should help the Roman Catholic into his proper heritage by remembering that the Roman Catholic church is one thing and the Roman hierarchy is another thing altogether. In spite of the mistakes of the Roman Catholic Church, he admired it. "The devotion of the people would put some of you to shame," he said. Their liberality was astonishing. But he had no respect for the hierarchy, which he termed a political machine.

Respect the church and abhor the hierarchy and one was on safe and Christian ground.

Ontario and Quebec.

The Province of Quebec was pointed out to be a larger and more fertile province than Ontario, yet Ontario had a population of 3,043,000 while Quebec had 2,500,000. Farms in Ontario are worth $932,000,000, in Quebec, $36,000,000. Crops last year in Ontario were worth $97,000,000, in Quebec, $86,000,000. In Ontario there are 52 daily newspapers, while in Quebec there are but 14. In Quebec there are 250 municipal libraries and in Quebec there is not one.

"Why is it?" asked Mr. Webb. It is because the ideal of the Roman hierarchy is the ideal of the middle ages. Upon us rests the responsibility to make it known to our Roman Catholic friends that Canada will never accept the ideal of the hierarchy.

A bishop at Philadelphia had said not more than nine months ago that there is no sense in attempting to hide it or deny the fact that our desire is to make America Roman Catholic. For that Canada will not stand and the Orange Order will not stand for it. In this, Protestants were not knocking the Roman Catholic down but lifting him up. If we are to help the Roman Catholic we must also get rid of his errors. "If," said the preacher, "you hate popery, will you try to see that there is no Pope in the Order Order?" Applause.

"Will you see that no civic or Dominion representatives make no more ado of the arrival of a cardinal that of General Booth, or of a

PROTESTANTISM IS DEFINED BY REV. R.G. PEEVER

The Human Answer to the Divine Call to Prove All Things

At George Street Methodist Church Sunday morning, when he preached on the subject, What is Protestantism? Rev. R. G. Peever said Protestantism did not mean the weighing of merits of two great churches. By Protestantism was the human answer to the divine call to prove all things. It went further back than the reformation; it was an appeal to the sacred scriptures and Protestantism honours Christ as Prophet, Priest and King.

BIT OFFICER AND GOT HEAVY FINE

Chas. Kellar Gave Officers a Hard Struggle

Showing strong evidence of having gone through a rather strenuous battle, Chas. Kellar of Bridgewater appeared before Magistrate Dumble at Police Court this morning on the charge of being drunk and disorderly and also charged with biting a police officer. Kellar was assessed $25.75 on the latter charge and allowed out on suspended sentence on the first charge. Constable Cookman who arrested Kellar had some battle resulting in his being bitten on the left hand and leg, by the man. Constable Dainard was summoned to help in the arrest and the officers were forced to manacle both hands and feet of the man, who despite his small size fought like a demon, and startling the entire staff of the Palace Hotel where he was arrested. When the officers arrived on the scene he was fighting with another man who was handed over to Mr. Bastorah. In some unaccountable manner he made his escape. Constable Cookman in giving his evidence this morning stated that the crowd refused to assist them in their duty. Kellar still under the effects of his week-end spree could not remember anything about the fight. He knew he came here on Saturday with over $75. He had his first drink and it also marked his first fight. His parents were farmers at Bridgewater.

"Well, if they think enough of you to pay the fine they can get you out of jail," concluded His Worship when he imposed the penalty of $25.75 forthwith.

Didn't Like it.

John Luke a stranger here with the show, was fined $5.75 on the charge of disorderly conduct. Luke was with some of the suspects in the robbery cases when they were being questioned and he became indignant and started to tell the officers what he thought of them.

YOUTH FACES MURDER CHARGE

Canadian Press Despatch.

St. John, N. B., July 13.—Special policeman O'Leary, who was shot last Monday by John Braman, whom he had arrested under suspicion of burglary, died in a hospital this morning. Braman, who is only seventeen, now faces a murder charge.

ORANGE CELEBRATION RIOTS ARE FEARED IN BELFAST AND DERRY

While it is Generally Believed That Order Will be Preserved in Belfast the Police Are Less Hopeful Concerning Londonderry—Volunteers Took Guns From Police, Says Ulster Despatch.

BELFAST, July 13.—While it is generally anticipated that to-day will pass off peacefully in Belfast, there is some disquiet as to Londonderry. No special police or military precautions are being taken here, but strong police reinforcements have been despatched to Derry.

The religious services yesterday afternoon and evening were exceedingly well attended and files of Orange lodges filled the street during the afternoon.

Sir Edward Carson, discussing the statements of the Radicals minimizing the result of Friday's meeting, said: "I cannot say anything as to the proceedings at the meeting, but you may take it from me that the effects of its resolutions is to give us power to act at once when necessary to do so"

A hundred extra police have been drafted to Londonderry.

If the celebration of the battle of the Boyne passes without a collision between Orangemen and Catholics, the Home Rulers of Ulster will have passed another critical danger point. The demonstrations will be marked here by a great procession, which will march to Drumbeg, four miles distant, to hold the customary celebration.

The Protestant section of Belfast is decorated more lavishly than in former years. Flags and banners bearing inscriptions defying Home Rule are displayed everywhere. The presence of Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, and armed guards surrounding his headquarters at Captain Craig's house, together with a review of battalions of volunteers, which several of the leaders held yesterday, causes much excited talk, but despite such exhibitions of high feeling, men in closest touch with the people of both factions predict that the occasion will pass without any conflagration.

The Nationalists assert that the covenanters are working up a purely artificial crisis to frighten the Government into accepting the Lords' amendments for the exclusion of the whole of Ulster from Home Rule.

Thousands of members of the constabulary have been brought north to preserve peace to-day, but this is about the number usually mobilized to repress the feelings of the wearers of the orange and of the green on the most contentious day of the Irish calendar.

Police Cowed By Volunteers.

LONDON, July 13.—The Londonderry correspondent of The Daily Express sends a sensational story of how 100 Ulster volunteers, on Saturday morning, recaptured at the Enniskillen station a consignment of arms and ammunition which had been seized at Londonderry on Wednesday by the customs authorities. The consignment was being conveyed from Londonderry to Dublin, under an armed guard of ten policemen.

At the Enniskillen station the volunteers surrounded the guard with drawn revolvers and swiftly removed the cases and placed them in motor cars. The police were powerless.

Birrell Is Sanguine.

BRISTOL, July 13.—Augustin Birrell, Secretary for Ireland, Saturday attended a Liberal garden party where he made an address dealing with Home Rule. In the course of his address he said that while the situation in Ulster was undoubtedly grave, he never was more sanguine than at the present moment that a reasonable settlement would be reached.

It was admitted on all sides that Home Rule for Ireland was inevitable, the Chief Secretary continued. The only question at issue was [illegible] bring it about in such a way [illegible] minimise the difficulties which [illegible] the whole of Ireland.

MR. BURNHAM IS CALLED TO LINDSAY TO ADDRESS ORANGEMEN

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., left at noon by Jones' motor car service for Lindsay, where he had been asked by telephone this morning to go and address the immense crowd gathered to celebrate the 12th at the Central Park at 2 o'clock. Twenty thousand people is the estimate of the number of people there, and there is much excitement in view of the action of the Orangemen in Manitoba and the situation in Ireland.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, JULY 13, 1914

THE OTONABEE NEEDS A DREDGE.

THE LETTING of the contract for the final link of the Trent Valley Canal was a gratifying piece of news to the people of this city and to all others due to secure the advantages from the opening of this waterway. For about one hundred years the canal on the Trent has been talked about, and now its completion is expected to be made in a little over a year. This bears out the statement to that effect made by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., a long while ago, and shows that he has been assiduous for the interests of this locality and its great scheme of development in the Trent Canal system.

But there is another thing that should be attended to, and one which militates against the efficiency of this canal system, and that is the necessity of dredging some parts of it. Especially for a few miles south of this city, the Otonabee River is badly in need of dredging. It is becoming choked with weeds, which are a source of danger in themselves, hinder navigation, and retain obstructions in the river bed. It is now quite a few years since any dredging has been done in this section, and the present condition of the river is such that immediate steps ought to be taken to have it cleaned out.

While the vast sums of money expended on this waterway have been to utilize it for commerce, the scenic and tourist possibilities of this waterway are very important to the city of Peterborough, and should be made as attractive as possible. With the river full of weeds, it is very inconvenient for pleasure craft, especially motor boats whose propellers get clogged with weeds. It might be well for the Dominion member and the civic authorities to take some action drawing the attention of the Government to this need. Also the establishment of a public park along the river would be a subject worthy of consideration, but it is important that the river be dredged in the near future, so that when the final link is completed there may be no obstruction to the efficiency of the Trent Valley Canal.

PUBLIC SWIMMING BATHS.

A WRITER to the editor of the Toronto Star on swimming accommodation in that city has some good remarks to make, and says:

> "I noticed by a few words in the summer number of the "Health Bulletin," that even Dr. Hastings, our Medical Health Officer, is one of the many who have mistaken ideas ideas on the subject. In it he says: "Don't enter a canoe if you cannot swim. Don't take with you a companion who cannot swim. There's no excuse nowadays for not being able to swim.'
> "Is he right? I know the boys of our city have all the advantages, and there is no reason on earth why they should not learn to swim, but what of the girls?"

It is all very well for medical and other authorities to give advice about entering canoes and swimming. Dr. Hastings knows a lot about conditions when he says there is no excuse nowadays for not being able to swim. There are dozens of large towns and cities in this country where there is every excuse for not knowing how to swim. In spite of daily drowning accidents during the summer, and Empress disasters, civic authorities have given little consideration to the establishment of public baths. Peterborough has no accommodation for teaching girls to swim, the Y. W. C. A being, we are sorry to say, without a swimming pool The Y. M. C. A. is affording facilities to a limited number of men and boys, and in their free swimming lessons are deserving of highest praise. They are doing a good work for the men and boys of this city, but they cannot accommodate the whole city. The establishment of swimming facilities for both sexes should be undertaken by the authorities of Peterborough without delay.

TESTING MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

EDMONTON is one of the thriving new cities of the Canadian Northwest which are testing Henry George's single tax theory under favorable conditions. A new municipality may begin operations under the single tax plan before any vested interests have been set up without doing injustice to any one. Those who do not like that system of taxation can stay away, and it will be of interest and widespread importance to have this system fairly tested under conditions that are as favorable as its most enthusiastic advocates can ask.

Edmonton's mayor is in New York City at present and has been good enough to give a sketch of Edmonton's experience as he has seen it. One big packing house in this city has built a plant at the cost of $1,500,000, and carries a stock of products that averages several hundred thousand dollars in value the year around, but it does not pay a cent in taxes on its building or machinery. A land speculator who owned an adjoining piece of property of the same acreage would have to pay exactly the same taxes. The assessed valuation of real estate in Edmonton is $17,800,000, on which the tax rate is only fourteen mills, but Edmonton has other sources of revenue because it owns its street railway and power plant, electric light and telephone system, the cost of which is in excess of $9,400,000. Mayor McNamara takes pride in the success which he claims has attended municipal ownership in his city, but it is apparent from what he himself says that the city came near making a shipwreck of its enterprises.

Advocates of municipal ownership usually base their arguments in its favor on the low fares or rates that the municipality will give to its citizens, and they place more stress upon cheapness than they do upon the revenue the city is to get from its investments. Edmonton evidently tried to give its citizens too much at the start. Mr. McNamara says that when he went into office he found the street railway was not paying because the city was selling transportation below cost. The first thing he did was to start a fight to raise the rates, and his businesslike proposal was fought by the members of the City Council and the Provincial Legislature. He was able to prove to the citizens that bankruptcy was ahead of them if they persisted in forcing the city's own street railway to do business at a loss, and he succeeded in raising the fare to five cents a passenger. The street railway was in bad repair at the time, but as soon as it was put on a business basis it could borrow the necessary money, and it is now in first-class shape. Mr. McNamara takes great pride in saying that not only did the railway then pay expenses and add to the sinking fund, but it was able to accumulate a surplus which is being devoted to wiping out the old deficit.

In Toledo, Cleveland, and several other cities in the U.S., the city authorities backed by the people, unfortunately, are trying to force the local traction companies to grant three-cent fares and make other concessions, which would entail an actual loss in operation. Edmonton tried low fares and has abandoned them. Its citizens now realize the folly of putting transportation rates below cost and encouraging people to use the cars with unnecessary freedom just because travelling is cheap. In the light of Edmonton's experience fair-minded persons must agree that it is grossly unjust to force a private corporation to give something for nothing when the municipality itself would quickly check the loss by raising the rates, as this Canadian city has done. Edmonton's municipal enterprises and system of taxation are still in the experimental stage, but Edmonton's experience with its street railway is illuminating and should have the serious consideration of other cities which are trying to get something for nothing.

In addition to his headship of government, the Minister of Justice was acting Minister of Agriculture acting Minister of Interior, acting Minister of Labor and a number of other important, special and unaccustomed duties fell to his lot. A Song of the English.
By Rudyard Kipling.

We have fed our sea for a thousand years,
  And she calls us, still unfed,
Though there's never a wave of all her waves
  But marks our English dead.
We have strewed our best to the weed's unrest,
  To the shark and the sheering gull,
If blood be the price of admiralty,
    Lord God, we ha' paid it in full!

There's never a flood goes shoreward now
  But lifts a keel we manned;
There's never an ebb goes seaward now
  But drops our dead on the sand—
But slinks our dead on the sands forelore
  From the Ducies to the Swin.
If blood be the price of admiralty,
If blood be the price of admiralty,
    Lord God, we ha' paid it in full!

We must feed our sea for a thousand years,
  For that is our doom and pride,
As it was when they sailed with the Golden Hind
  Or the wreck that struck last tide—
Or the wreck that lies on the spouting reef
  Where the ghastly blue lights flare.
If blood be the price of admiralty,
If blood be the price of admiralty,
If blood be the price of admiralty,
    Lord God, we ha' bought it fair!

THE GROCER
By Walt Mason

The grocer sells the things we eat—all sorts of things, in reason; the pickle sour and honey sweet, and garden sass in season. He sends things where his patron dwells, and strange it seems to many, he doesn't eat the goods he sells, to gain an honest penny. He has his window filled with fruits that came from distant regions, from countries where the warthog roots, and jaguars roam in legions. The treasures of some far-off clime—no royal store could beat them! And still I wonder, all the time, just why he doesn't eat them. With dates from Araby the blest, and figs from Asia Minor, the smiling grocer does his best to please the western diner. Imported things upon his shelf, spaghetti, cheese and noodle; if I were he, I would, myself, consume the whole caboodle! The grocer reaches south and north, and east and west he reaches, for all the eatables of worth, the cantaloupes and peaches; the new potatoes and the peas, the condiments and sauces, the Chinese eggs and sweitzer cheese, which oft are total losses. I'd hate to sell such tempting things; if patrons came, I'd greet them, and say, "They're not for sale, by jings, for I intend to eat them!"

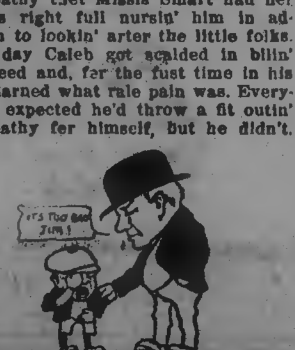
SYMPATHY

CALEB SMART was so downright sympathetic thet he uster cry if he saw a kid wuth a toothache. When his children had the measles he was so dinged sick through sympathy thet Missis Smart had her hands right full nursin' him in addition to lookin' arter the little folks. One day Caleb got scalded in bilin' hog-feed and, fer the fust time in his life, larned what rale pain was. Everybody expected he'd throw a fit outin' sympathy fer himself, but he didn't.



IT'S TOO BAD JIM!

He jest sot up and grinned at the doctor who was bandagin' his arm and said: "Doc, I've been a downright fool, I reckon. I've shed a bucket of tears over somethin' I knowed nuthin' about, but thort I did, and I've suffered mental anguish fer folks who were only undergoin' physical discomforts jest because I didn't know what pain was. Hereafter I'm goin' to let people do their own cryin.'"

And when ye come ter think on it, there's quite a lot in what Caleb said. Sympathy is a beautiful thing but if ye can't feel and extend it to anybody without sweatin' blood mentally, don't do it.

A COUPLE OF WINE CASKS

They Contained Something Better Than Wine

By F. A. MITCHEL

Not all the aristocracy of France were, previous to the revolution, oppressors of the poor. True, the power they possessed rendered many of them tyrannical, especially those about the court, but through the country there were instances of nobles who were much beloved by their inferiors in rank.

Among these was the young Count de Lisle, who on his twenty-first birthday came into a fine property in the province of Maine, not far from Paris. He had a tender heart, and the condition of the peasantry pained him exceedingly. When he fell heir to his estate there were 100,000 francs for him in currency in a Paris bank. Half of this he distributed among the poor on or about his domain.

He furthermore resolved that he would devote his life to the cause of the betterment of the condition of the oppressed lower classes. Had he been older he would have realized that the many years of wars and extravagance on the part of royalty and the nobles had so impoverished France that those who had wasted the wealth of the nation must be put out of the way before France could begin a necessary retrenchment.

When the revolution came on the count threw himself heart and soul into the cause of reform. He went to Paris, where he attended a meeting in the Palais Royal composed largely of the best men of the middle class in France, and there raised his voice in behalf of the overtaxed people.

But in the rising cloud of revolution was a thunderbolt, unseen by the intelligent middle classes, who were unconsciously fostering it. Mme. Roland, the leader of the Girondists, feared that the excitement would die away before the constitutional rights required by the people from the sovereign had been granted. It was not long before the storm broke, sweeping away her and her associates in the work. They all perished on the guillotine, singing the "Marseillaise," the volume of sound lessening as each head fell, till the last died singing alone.

One day news came to the tenants of the Count de Lisle's estate that cast a gloom upon them. The count had been arrested in Paris. A few there were who, having become rabid by the flow of blood, rejoiced that another noble head would soon fall and there would be one less of that class who had impoverished France. The young Countess Julie de Lisle had sent messenger after messenger to her husband, begging him to come home and leave the revolutionists to work out their own salvation. But he had entered upon the work of ameliorating the condition of the oppressed people and would not turn back.

He had been warming a serpent in his bosom. At the height of the tempest, when the leadership fell into the hands of representatives of the lowest classes and the cry was raised to exterminate all royal blood and all nobles, De Lisle was denounced as an enemy of France and thrown into prison. A few days later he was taken before one of those tribunals, consisting only of a so called judge—a man without any knowledge of law and usually even without education—whose business it was to condemn those whom the people wished to get rid of in order that they might be executed with the semblance of justice. What was the count's astonishment to see sitting in the judicial chair behind a pine table Henri Denier, one of his own tenants, who had received a portion of the 50,000 francs that the count had distributed on his coming of age.

The two men's eyes met for an instant. Then those of the judge fell before the steady gaze of the one who had befriended him and whom he was now called upon to order to execution. Nor was it in Denier's power to refrain from this course. Behind him were the people, who had put him there, not to judge of guilt or innocence, but to pronounce sentence. He was compelled either to send his benefactor to the guillotine or go there himself. And by refusing to pronounce sentence of death he would not save the count, who would be condemned by Denier's successor.

"We have met before," said the count.

"Yes," replied the judge mechanically, "we have met before."

"Which one of us has contributed more to the cause of the French people, you or I?"

The room was filled with revolutionists. Denier was aware that every eye was upon him. Should he flinch in his duty to the cause of extermination he would at once be reported as an enemy of France.

"That is not the question before us, citizen," he said. "You have been denounced, and it is my duty to pronounce sentence upon you." Then to the guards, "Take him to the conciergerie."

Until this moment Henri Denier had been a revolutionist of the extreme type. He had inherited a little patch of ground and some money from his father, but the taxes he had been obliged to pay had eaten up his patrimony. His wife had fallen ill and needed medical attention and other comforts. His children were without wholesome food. Like a gift from heaven had come his proportion of the count's money. Not only that; the count, being informed of Mme. Denier's condition, had sent his own physician, who had treated her, and she had been restored to health.

The memory of this benefaction in a twinkling produced as great a revolution in the heart of Henri Denier as was being wrought in the government of France. He resolved that if he could save his benefactor by giving his own life he would do so. But his self control was perfect. He sat apparently unmoved even under the reproachful glance of the count as the latter passed out of the room between two soldiers.

Then the work of condemnation was resumed.

Denier after having been some time in Paris, noting the trend the revolution was taking, had gone to his home in disguise for a day and left a cipher code with his wife by which he could communicate with her without any one except himself or her knowing what he wrote her. One morning a girl about fifteen years old appeared at Mme. Denier's door and handed her a bit of paper on which there was writing.

"Who is this from?" asked Mme. Denier.

"Read it," was the girl's only reply.

Mme. Denier, seeing a jumble of words, remembered her cipher code, which she took from its hiding place and interpreted the message:

Count de Lisle condemned. Send wine.

The recipient read much more than was expressed. She knew that her husband meant that she was to find some person or persons to come to Paris and help him save the man who had saved her when she had been ill. But what did the words "Send wine" mean?

She took the message to the countess, whom she found prostrated at news of her husband's arrest, which she had already received. Together they interpreted the "Send wine" to mean this: Denier had just before the revolution set himself up as a wine seller in Paris, bringing wine in casks to Paris and returning the casks empty. They were to send some casks of wine to his shop. What this would have to do with the count's condemnation the women could not determine.

Not two hours after the receipt of the message a man named Francois, a servant in the chateau who attended his master, loaded several casks of wine on a cart and started for Paris. When they reached Denier's shop the girl who had accompanied Francois went for Denier, but he did not leave his official duties till dark. On arrival at his shop he was pleased to see Francois and told him that on his coolness and courage the count's life depended. He was to remain that night in the shop and return the next morning, ostensibly to the chateau, but once having passed the walls of Paris, after proceeding some distance in that direction, he was to diverge on a road to the Belgian border.

Denier, having been one of the most radical of the revolutionists, was thoroughly trusted by them. Indeed, he had become a leader. About 10 o'clock on the night of Francois' arrival in Paris he sent a small squad of soldiers under a corporal to the conciergerie prison with an order to send Citizen de Lisle to him since his testimony was needed to denounce an enemy of France. The count was sent to "the judge," who was in the room where he sent persons to the guillotine. Announcing that he would interrogate the prisoner privately, he ordered the soldiers to withdraw.

No sound having been heard for some time from within, the corporal rapped at the door. There was no answer. The door was opened, and the room was found to be empty. A window had been left open. The corporal had nothing to do but go back to the prison and report the circumstance.

A commotion was stirred up by the disappearance of the judge and his prisoner, who on gaining the street had made straight for Denier's shop, where Denier got into one empty wine cask and the count into another, after which Francois put the heads on the casks. It was expected that the shop would be searched, so Francois placed the casks on his cart and drove it away, moving about the streets till sunrise, when he turned his course to a gate in the wall on the north side of the city. Since it was the same gate as the one through which Francois had passed on entering and he had treated the guard liberally to the wine he had carried he found no great trouble in passing out with the casks, which had evidently been emptied.

France being a wine growing country, with the product constantly passing to and fro, the fugitives experienced no difficulty in reaching the border, and once in a foreign country they emerged from their confinement and embraced Francois, whose coolness, wit and resource had saved them from exposure on several occasions.

The two men were joined in Brussels by their wives, whom Francois had advised while on the route of the human contents of his casks. When the storm of revolution had spent its force the count and countess returned to their chateau. The Deniers remained in Belgium longer, being fearful of returning to the revolutionists of Paris, whose cause the husband deserted. However, when the Bourbons were enthroned again and they felt assured of protection Denier went back to his wineshop and continued to bring in wine from the country, sending back the casks to be refilled. But never since that eventful journey made by him and De Lisle to the border has he sent out casks filled with human beings.

EFFECTS OF COLORS.

Those of Hats and Gowns Modify the Shade of the Eyes.

Have you noticed how the color of your eyes changes sometimes with the weather and sometimes with the color you wear? With almost everything but the eyes it takes contrast to bring out color. For instance, a portrait of a blond woman almost invariably has blue in the background, and somewhere about the portrait of a brunette you will find pink or red blended to accentuate the dark skin and hair.

It is exactly the opposite with nature. A color brings out a color. You will see a rosy cheeked girl with a rose colored hat on her head. Remove the hat and replace it by a brown or green one, and she will look pale. A blue hat or veil casts a blue shade over the face, so that the sweetest natural complexion will appear as if painted. You can make your blue eyes or gray blue eyes deeper in color if you like. If you wear a blue facing or much blue trimming upon your hat the same shade will be reflected in your eyes. The darker the blue the darker the eyes.

The same principle works with rich violet colorings. Often blue eyes appear like violets under a purple hat. Brown and dull reds will darken and deepen brown eyes when worn around the shoulders or on the head. Then there are colors which take all color out of the eyes.

The mustard yellow, so fashionable just now—or absinth color, some call it—while it flatters black hair, is positively fatal to complexion and eyes. It fades all color out of blue eyes and makes brown eyes look absolutely pale. Some pale shades of pink gowns are becoming to both blonds and brunettes, for they cast a soft glow over the complexion and eyes. Blue gowns on a blond or not too pale a violet color will deepen the color of the eyes and make the skin appear pearly. Blonds should avoid tan colored clothes. Only dark brown is becoming to fair hair.

White is illuminating to every one—man, woman and child. It enhances the color of the complexion and hair, but it brightens only the eyes. It has no effect upon their color. While a soft canary yellow will tone down any strong color by reflection too deep a yellow will cause the cheeks and lips to look pale.

SHE SAVED THE DAY.

Things Are Never as Black as They Seem When There's a Way Out.

THIS pathetic and true story was told us early Monday morning by a husband who had not yet recovered from the shock he got when it was sprung by his wife Saturday afternoon.

On Saturday morning this wife broke the news to this husband that she had to have a new hat. She spoke so eloquently that he was induced to give up the money he had been saving for some useful purpose.

On Saturday afternoon he went home early. He hadn't enough change in his pocket to linger down town. His wife came home a bit later. She greeted him with these words:

"Oh, my dear boy, a dreadful thing has happened! You know all that money you gave me to buy a new hat with? Well, it was stolen from me on my way down town this morning!"

"Great Scott!" cried the unhappy man. "It was my whole week's salary; it was all that—oh, heaven! We are absolutely"—

"Stop, dearie!" she said brightly. "I saved the day after all, and the loss didn't make a bit of difference!"

"Fine! You are a jewel! How did you do it?"

"I got the hat just the same and had it charged!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

If you spill tea on a tablecloth, cover it with common salt and leave it on for a while. When the cloth is washed, all stains will have disappeared.

Baby Girl Who Is Being Taught Not to Be Afraid.

COURAGE A FINE QUALITY.

Olive Whitman, Daughter of a Noted Lawyer, Schooled In Fearlessness. Hardworking Animals—Many Things to Interest Children.

Not long ago Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of the district attorney of New York city, flew a thousand feet above the Hudson river in a flying boat. These boats can go on water or in the air, as the driver wishes. When Mrs. Whitman entered the machine she put on a life preserver, because one never knows whether there may be an accident or not. At any rate, she sat beside the driver, and after skimming along the Hudson river for a short distance the machine flew into the air at a speed of seventy miles an hour. After reaching a height of a thousand feet the driver brought his machine back to the surface of the water. Volplaning is the term used by aeronauts.

OLIVE WHITMAN.

When Mrs. Whitman alighted from the machine she said she had experienced no fear. "I used to be afraid of the water," she said, "but I overcame that fear. I dislike to have fear of any kind, and I am teaching my little girl not to have a fear too."

Mrs. Whitman is a prominent charity worker in New York city, where she was born. Before she was married she was Miss Olive Hitchcock. Her only daughter's name is also Olive, and when the little girl grows up, if she responds to her mother's teaching, she will be brave like her mother. It is a good thing for children to cultivate courage and to be fearful only of doing wrong.

Hardworking Animals.

There are varieties of wasps which are paper makers; spiders are tireless spinners, and even worms are weavers.

Ants work nearly all the time and have a well looked after system of labor, which they follow closely.

Certain species of ants found in East India are farmers in a small way. They raise mushrooms for the purpose of feeding their young.

Bees are among the most expert builders of all time. Their hives are so constructed as to lose as little space as possible.

The ant lions are remarkable architects. Their funnel shaped traps are exactly correct in conformation and could not be surpassed if made by the most skillful architect and with the aid of complicated instruments.

The beaver is combination architect, engineer and woodcutter. He builds houses and dams his water course with a cleverness that would be creditable to an intelligent man.

Boy Scouts of Spain.

Eleven thousand scouts in Spain carry on a very similar program to that of the Boy Scouts of America. The handbook of the boys bears the name Estatutos de la Asociacion Catolica de Scouts de Espana. Madrid, the capital, has 3,000 scouts. The spreading of scouting in that country is another instance that Spain is waking up and getting ready to take her place again among the nations which in recent years have outstripped her in education. There is no doubt that scouting is spreading like wildfire all over the world, and it is confidently expected that it will be an entering wedge in many countries for new ideals of citizenship and boy training.—Scouting.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

She Needs the Money!

This poor girl is in need of some ready cash, therefore she is borrowing it upon the security of an old ring. Incidentally the picture reveals the name of a well-known player in the great arena of outdoor sports.

A BETTER WAY TO GET CASH!

Let any woman, young, middle-aged, or old, married or single, who would like a nice supply of ready money, enter the SUMMER PASTIME without delay. There's a splendid opportunity to gain liberal rewards.

HOW TO STUDY. Examine the rebus picture and see how it will apply to a name. For example, the picture of a man lying on a couch can be interpreted as COUCHMAN, while a stone-worker on a building could be evolved as MASON.

RULES. These will be reprinted occasionally. They are simple, easy to understand, and fair to all. The principal point is to study each day's picture and evolve from it the name of a recognized player of baseball, football (soccer or Rugby), hockey or lacrosse. No Answer Forms are to be sent in until called for in this newspaper at the close of the series.

AID TO WINNING. We offer an exceedingly helpful book containing the names of over 2,500 players of baseball, football, lacrosse and hockey, well known throughout Canada, and including every one of the seventy-five names used in this contest, so that they can be positively chosen by study. This book also contains 75 extra Answer Form Coupons. Further, if you have missed any of the preceding rebus pictures you may obtain them free. Ask for the Summer Pastime Handbook at the office of The Review, 166-168 Hunter Street, Peterborough, between 6 and 8 daily, or order through a newsdealer or by mail. Price 25 cents. A copy of this book will be given FREE if it is asked for when a new subscription is sent in for six months or one year.

CANADIAN ENGINEERS INSPECT CONCRETE ROADS

Party of Fourteen Visit Wayne County, Michigan, and Get First Hand Facts

Last week a party of Canadian Highway Engineers and Municipal Officials interested in good roads, under the guidance of Mr. L. S. Bruner of the Canadian Cement Company Limited visited Detroit and Wayne County, Mich., to learn how this progressive American community is building a comprehensive concrete road system of which it is justly proud.

The party included: J. F. Ure, Woodstock, Ont., Engineer for Oxford County; R. H. Spencer, Acting Mayor, Trenton, Ont.; G. R. Marston, Simcoe, Ont., Engineer for Norfolk County; F. M. Rutherford, St. Catherines, Ont., Engineer for Lincoln County; W. J. Hollingsworth, Hamilton, Ont., Assistant City Engineer; M. Manigault, Strathroy, Ont., J. H. Jackson, Brantford, Ont., R. Clarke and W. E. Nesbitt, Merriton, Ont., L. J. Wookey, C. P. Botsford and W. Coles, Toronto; L. S. Bruner and R. S. Muller, Montreal.

Wayne County now has nearly one hundred miles of the finest concrete roads in the world, one stretch of which extends in a smooth unbroken surface for a distance of 21 miles passing through the villages of Wayne and Dearbourne and it is a noteworthy fact that after much experimenting with every kind of road building material, the Board of County Road Commissioners has adopted concrete as its standard.

The party covered about eighty miles of highway of every description and in every condition from the worst to the best. The tour proved an exceptionally strong object lesson to everyone of the party and much gratification was expressed at the completeness of the building equipment and the excellent results obtained.

MENDING A CYCLE LAMP.

It is very inconvenient to get the glass of your bicycle lamp broken, especially if you are out in the country where there are no shops at hand.

The light is sure to go out if the glass is broken, then the following hint may come in very handy:

Open the lamp and take out all the broken glass. Get a piece of paper a little bigger than the frnt of the lamp, and put it where the glass was, so that, when the lamp is shut the paper will be pulled tight and made secure.

When this is done, the light will not blow out, but will show through the paper quite well.—The Scout.

PETERBOROUGH DELEGATION TO S. A. CONGRESS RETURN

A Deserved Honor.

It had been previously arranged that the Territorial Band would play on the Thames to the hundreds of thousands of workingmen who promenade there during the lunch hour. The wiping out of the staff band forced an alteration in the program and the local band under the direction of Bandmaster Peryer had the distinguished honor. At the Crystal Palace concert four hundred bands played before 25,000 people while General Booth conducted 3,500 musicions during a night musical festival. 250,000 people thronged Hyde Park on the day of the procession and as the Maple Leaf appeared at the head of the parade the reception was indiscribable.

Adjutant McElhiney was one of 500 delegates who was invited to a reception on the grounds of Vincent Astor's residences. Vincent Aster is a son of the late John Jacob who went down with the Titanic and the grounds formerly belonged to the Duke of Westminster. The Grenadier Guards Band played on the lawn, a special train was arranged to convey the party from London and return and special caterers were engaged. Mr. and Mrs. Astor received all the guests in person.

On the journey from London to home, the band visited Leeds, Bradford, Halifax and other northern points before embarking.

While in the old land the band sold numerous souvenirs of Peterboro and distributed gratis $1,000 worth of advertising material.

Lieut.-Col. Bond writing to the War Cry pays the following tribute to the local band.

I have just come in from the Victoria Embankment Gardens, where the Peterboro Band has been discoursing sweet music to the thousands of city workers who stroll on the Embankment during the dinner hour.

The bandstand was crowded, and the Canadian friends of the Bandsmen would have been charmed to hear the hand-clapping and the very nice comments made concerning the music by members of the International Staff Band and others. Their singing was especially applauded. They looked very manly and effective in their grey cowboy hats, and maroon tunics. I felt proud of them I was deeply impressed while they were singing "My Jesus, I Love Thee." They had taken the place of the Territorial Staff Band, which was to have had the honor of playing in the Embankment Gardens, a beautiful place, bounded on the north by towering palatial buildings and on the south by the smoothly-flowing Thames, and as they sang—

"I will love Thee in life,
I will love Thee in death," doubtless their minds went back to the dark St. Lawrence. I know I thought of it, but I also looked up into the blue sunlit sky and felt that they who had loved Him in death were now living with Him in Glory. I was comforted.

The Peterboro Band has won golden opinions, not only by its proficiency, but by its beautiful spirit and Salvationist bearing.

Both Imposed Upon.

Deserted Wife (telling grocer her troubles)—And I trusted him so.

Grocer—Confound it! So did I!

The Disappointed Farmer.

"Well, well!" said the farmer, as he rushed to the gate, his hand extended and his face wreathed in smiles, "I'm glad to see you; come right up on the porch and rest yourself in the rocker."

"Thank you," replied the visitor "I came around to see about summer board."

"Summer board! Why didn't you say so quick instead of raisin' my hopes? I thought mebbe you was lookin' for work." — Washington Star.

ANDERSEN SAYS ACTION WILL BE STARTED AT ONCE

Will Begin Suit For Damages Against C.P.R. He Declares After Commission Makes Report.

QUEBEC, July 13. — The whole blame for the disaster to the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence on May 29, when the C.P.R. liner sank after being rammed by the collier Storstad with 1,014 souls on board, was placed upon the shoulders of Alfred Tuftenes, the first officer of the Storstad, by the Dominion Wreck Commission, which investigated the disaster and which delivered its finding in the court house here Saturday morning. The commission found that Tuftenes was wrong and negligent in changing the course of his ship in a fog. Captain Kendall of the C.P.R. liner was found blameless, and his actions up to and after the disaster approved of by the commissioners.

The passage condemning the action of First Officer Tuftenes was as follows:

"We regret to have to impute blame to any one in connection with this lamentable disaster, and we should not do so if we felt that any reasonable alternative was left to us. We can, however, come to no other conclusion than that Mr. Tuftenes was wrong and negligent in keeping the navigation of the vessel in his own hands, and in failing to call the captain when he saw the fog coming on."

CAPTAIN KENDALL.
(He is exonerated of all blame for Empress of Ireland Disaster.)

The report further argued that the accident was not caused by special characteristics in the St. Lawrence river route and might have happened under similar circumstances in any other river.

An interesting part of the report was the suggestions made for safeguarding life at sea in future. It was found that portholes were open and that the vessel sank so rapidly that watertight doors could not be closed, and it was proposed that in future all ports and as many watertight doors as possible should be closed in a fog. The use of rafts that would float away when a vessel went down and a change in the system of taking on pilots at Father Point were also suggested.

The court room was again crowded by Quebec people and many Canadians and Americans now on a visit to the city. The dramatic touch lent to the enquiry when Captain Kendrall and the officers and men who had escaped from the vessel were present was lacking, as they had returned to England. Mr. Tuftenes was also absent, but Captain Andersen of the Storstad and his wife were in the court room.

Captain Andersen was wrathy as he left the court.

"I did not think Lord Mersey would be such a fool," he angrily exclaimed, "and you can say so in your paper if you like. He may be Lord Mersey, but I can tell you if he ever had any reputation he is going to lose it over this case.

"But," declared Captain Andersen, "don't you imagine that this thing will stop here. We people in Norway are too much interested in seeing it through. There will be plenty of work in the courts, both in Canada and Britain. We shall start a suit for damages against the C.P.R. here at once."

BOMB IN CHURCH

LONDON, July 13.—A bomb was discovered last night in the famous old Church of St. John Evangelist, Westminster, and a woman named Annie Bell, who has figured several times in militant activities, was arrested. This church was damaged last March by a bomb which the suffragettes placed beneath the seat in the gallery above the pulpit.

A member of the congregation noticed a light flickering in a pew in the rear of the church, and on investigation found a candle so placed as to set fire to a fuse connected with a can of gunpowder.

The suffragettes have been active during the week end. They burned a railway station near Leicester in the early hours of the morning.

NO ARRESTS AS YET IN ROBBERY CASES

As yet no arrests have been made in connection with the recent series of housebreaking in the southern section of the city which have attracted considerable attention and efforts of the police for the past few days.

A keen watch was kept on Saturday evening, but failed to reveal any suspicious moves on the part of people connected with the show. Evidently the thefts were committed by local denizens of the underworld anxious to get away with the plunder by taking advantage of a show being in the city at the time, by which they would be suspected.

HORSES RAN AWAY

Taking fright from some unknown cause, a team attached to a heavy democrat owned by Robert Anderson of Otonabee, started on a rampage this morning about nine o'clock, down Water Street. The horses had been left standing somewhere near the corner of Water and Hunter Streets when they bolted. On reaching Charlotte Street, they turned out Charlotte, narrowly missing a collision with several rigs at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets. The animals were finally captured near the Boundary. One axle was broken, when the wagon struck a tree.

STANDING IN DOUBT

Conservatives Still Sure Result is 25 to 21 Seats

WINNIPEG, July 13.—The standing of the parties in the next Legislature of Manitobe still remains in doubt, two days after the elections. Liberal and Conservative claims still differ, the Government forces still believing in a 25 to 21 standing, which includes the two doubtful seats in St. George and St. Rose. Last night, however the Liberals, while conceding St. Rose, claim St. George as a Liberal victory, giving Sigfuson, Liberal, over Hamelin, Conservative, by 47 majority, with three polls to come. Of these three polls, two, they declare, will go Liberal and one Conservative, leaving the final result a Liberal victory.

Should the Liberals really be successful in taking the St. George, the standing would be 24 to 22, the Conservatives having formerly claimed both these seats in arriving at the 25 to 21 standing. The result cannot be settled with any degree of accuracy, however, until the returning officer's official figures are turned in.

FOR HOUSEWIVES

Many persons do not know how to hard-boil an egg properly, and consequently they come to believe that because the white is tough and the yolk discolored, the egg is indigestible. An egg should be put into warm water and left until the water is about 200 degrees Fahr. Then it should be left 30 minutes and dashed into cold water and peeled. After this process the egg will be mealy and the white will be hard and firm without being tough. Never let a hard-boiled egg cool in the water.

SARDINES IN EGGS—Allow one sardine for each hard boiled egg. Cut the eggs lengthwise and remove the yolks. Remove the skin and bones from the sardines. Make a paste of the yolks, the sardines, a little minced parsley, melted butter and pepper and salt to taste. Fill the whites of the eggs with this mixture and put two whites together. Garnish with fresh watercress.

EGGS WITH HAM—Mince boiled ham and mix it with the yolks from hard boiled eggs, with a little mustard and cream. Then fill the egg whites generously, rounding each off. Wrap in waxed paper to carry.

Cold Meats.

Cold meats can be served as they are, or in sandwiches. A ham is almost essential to good picnic fare. Veal loaf, too, is delicious in sandwiches and pressed chicken is one of the cold meats that can be carried and sliced at the picnic.

PRESSED CHICKEN—Boil three fowls until the meat comes off the bones easily. Remove all the bones and chop the meat up fine, add a piece of melted butter the size of a large egg. Season highly with salt and pepper. Take about one pint of the liquor in which the fowls were boiled, add to this half a box of gelatine and let it dissolve. Put the chicken meat into a saucepan and add the dissolved gelatine and cook until the broth is evenly distributed. Put into a pan and under a heavy press until perfectly cold.

Water when macaroni has been boiling in it makes a nice thin starch for lingerie garments. Also gives a pretty gloss to colored ginghams.

S.S. CANADA ON THE ROCKS

Passengers Landed Without any Panic

RIMOUSKI, Que., July 13. — The steamer Canada, of the Gaspe and Baie de Chaleurs Co., Ltd., on her return trip from Montreal to Campbellton, N.B., struck the rocks off Cape Chatte Saturday night in a dense fog, a half mile east of Cape Chatte lighthouse. The Canada carried about one hundred passengers for Quebec and Montreal, and general cargo. The weather was calm and the grounding caused little excitement on board. All the passengers were placed in boats and landed on shore, about half a mile from the stranded steamer.

The steamer Strathcona left Rimouski wharf late yesterday to try to float the Canada. As the Canada went on the rocks at high tide it is anticipated the work will be difficult. Cape Chatte lighthouse is seventy-five miles east of Rimouski.

Corpus Christi.

In referring to the much discussed situation growing out of the Corpus Christi procession at Montreal, Rev. Mr. Webb said that the hierarchy had not had their own way. Tradition had been shattered forever. The hierarchy had been denied in this for the first time in 60 years.

In conclusion the preacher laid stress on the help that would be given to the Roman Catholic by giving him the Bible. In spite of all the Roman Catholic Church might say, there is not in the province of Quebec, one solitary Roman Catholic who is reading the Bible with the approval of his priest. Giving him the Bible will be doing more that curses, cannon and swords have ever done.

BIBLE FROM THE CREATION IS PUT IN THE MOVIES

Daily Exhibitions at Opera House Are Free to the Public

The religious history of the world from the first moment when the "earth was without form and void," down through the corridors of time to the present day, is traced in detail in the photo-drama, "Creation," which is being shown to the people of this city in the Opera House. The exhibition commenced yesterday afternoon and was heartily welcomed by those present.

The photo-drama is being presented by the International Bible Students' Association, and there will be two exhibitions daily, at 3 and 8 o'clock p.m. There is not a cent of charge and no appeal for funds is made in any manner to those who witness the wonderful story of the Bible as portrayed in this manner.

Some years ago the International Bible Students' Association determined to find some method to bring to the mind of the people of all the earth the wonderful story of the Bible. It must be in a manner that the heathen Chinese or the college professor "might read as he ran."

There was only one way that it could be done—through the medium of the universal language, the "movies."

Then began an elaborate preparation of the subject matter that would be necessary to have the complete story told.

There and then it was found that the greatest stumbling block of skepticism was the matter of "creation." The fact that science and the Bible were on the outs so far as time and the ages were concerned, has made many a skeptic.

So it was determined that this should be given the attention not alone of the students of the Bible but by scientists who were in tune with the declarations as made in Genesis.

With their scientfic knowledge to call upon the making of the pictures was commenced. First there came means and methods for the showing of creation.

The Creation Shown.

In this alone the most complete data that could be found anywhere in the student world was called upon.

Beginning with the nebular star theory the pictures and films show the formation that, according to scientists, became the world. There are shown the gathering of the gases, the evolution towards solidifying, and finally the consolidation into the bare world of the beginning.

Science again plays the part in the records of the creation and preparation of the earth for man. First is shown the creation of the vegetable kingdom, the methods by which the plants multiplied and attained their various forms. Then comes the creation of the animal kingdom. In this prehistoric beings of fanastic shape and size startle the persons who may have made no study of the "world as it was in the beginning." Detail has been closely adhered to and museums and institutions for the study of the prehistoric have been raked for anything that dealt on the subject so that investigations of scientists could be closely followed.

Familiar Scenes Shown.

Old Testament subjects that are as familiar to church-going folk as the faces of the members of their own families, are brought before the people who see the pictures in a most vivid manner.

The exploits of David, the wonderful teachings of Moses and of Solomon, the tribal love of Abraham and of Isaac, are all dealt with carefully, and so there will be a lasting picture in the minds of any or all who see the films.

Then down through the ages, the wonderful story of the three of the fiery furnace, the worship of idols and the thousand and one passages of the Scripture that make the Bible the most-read book in all the world, have been carefully re-enacted that that busy man may have no cry that he has not time to view them.

Coming down to the Christian era, John the Baptist, the birth of Christ, the money changers in the temple, the teachings and parables of Christ in His years of ministrations, the lovable passages from St. Mark, St. Luke and St. John, are all presented before the audiences.

Then comes the final scenes in the life of Christ, the last supper, the denial by Peter, the trial before Pilate, and lastly the terrifying picture of the crucifixion.

In all, the scope of Bible study as it has been arranged for casting upon the screen is the most elaborate since the days that King James set about to have the Bible translated from Latin to the English tongue.

And all of this has been made possible by the International Bible Students' Association. In all there are over two miles of films to be shown and about 500 stereopticon slides. The entire photo-drama requires about eight hours to be presented, and hence it is divided into four sections which will be presented in order, the program changing twice each week.

Accompanying the pictures is one of the strongest talking machine devices that has yet been developed. In a deep, clear voice this machine details to those present the stories and the conclusions that the pictures are to teach.

Part one of the photo-drama was shown yesterday, and the same program will be repeated today and Tuesday at 3 and 8 o'clock p.m. This section portrays in pictures the creation of earth and its preparation for human habitation, the development of plant and animal life, and the creation of the first pair in Eden. It then carries forward the Bible story of the first two thousand years of the history of our race.

CHAS. HEALEY "FOUND" LIQUOR

Chief Thompson Resorts to "Memory" Cure by Ordering Jail Term

Once more Chief Thompson is experimenting with the effective memory cure for blacklisters. For the first time in six months he was forced to fall back on this reliable means of ascertaining where the blacklisters get their weekly supply, when Chas. Healey, a local blacklister, was remanded to jail, this morning, after telling some remarkable fiction regarding the finding of two bottles. Healey started the fireworks by pleading guilty to the charge of beigg drunk but denied the knowledge of being a member of the Indian list. License Inspector Stewart stated that he personally had served Healey four months ago at the King George Hotel. Healey had been drinking at the time.

This hope gone, Healey was called to the box. He said he had walked through the yard or rather lane between the Snowden Hotel and the Montgomery Hotel on Saturday. He walked over to one of the sheds and there found two bottles of Irish whiskey. He took them.

"It's a mean trick to steal another man's whiskey, and you didn't leave him one lone drink," remarked the Magistrate.

"I didn't need to be on the blacklist, I belong to the Temperance Society," remarked Healey. The Chief produced three bottles of booze all of which had been found on his person.

"This looks like it," smiled the Magistrate.

"Oh, I'm not at present," grimaced Healey.

"Be honest and be a man and tell where you got this whiskey, demanded the Magistrate impatiently after Hickey described with various movements that he had merely found the booze in the shed.

MUST MOVE FENCE.

City Engineer Persons informed The Review to-day that the sidewalk on the east side of Lock Street from Lansdowne Street to Gladstone Avenue is being built where staked, despite the objections raised by some of the residents of that block. The residents have their fences out on the city's property, and it was either for the city to have the pavement a foot on the street or the residents to move their fences. The Engineer has decided that the latter would be the wisest course to pursue.

SENATOR DAVIS FAMOUS FOR STARTLING LEGISLATION

Western Member of Upper House is Foe of Tipping Habit, and Is Surprised at Success of His Crusade Against the Festive Gratuity—Once Sought Flat 25 cent. Rate for Telegrams

Senator T. O. Davis, who startled Ottawa by the introduction of an anti-tipping bill in the Senate recently, is no novice in the art of astonishing the effete Easterners. As a matter of fact, he was himself born in the East, in Sherrington, P.Q., some 58 years ago, but in 1874 at the age of 18 he bid adieu to Eastern Canada and entered mercantile life in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, whence he comes periodicaly to Ottawa to help run the country and throw in an occasional suggestion for enlivening the debates of the Red Chamber.

The anti-tipping bill lies close to the Senator's heart, as it does secretly to the hearts of most men who are not supported by the receipt of tips. Ever since 1874 Senator Davis has been absorbing the spirit of the plains, and of the north plains, at that — close by where the broad Saskatchewan comes marching round the curve and under the bridge at Prince Albert. In that country real men do not take tips, though they may give them liberally enough. They work for their living and take what they can get in the form of wages or profit, or directors' honoraria. If they can discount the future of a town lot for ten generations and put the proceeds into more town lots to be further discounted—well and good. But the tip—the pour boire—the gratuity—is not Western.

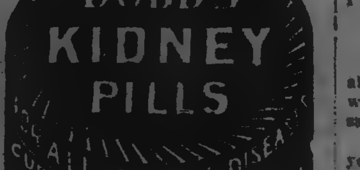
Senator Davis, whose other name is "Whirlwind Orator," according to The Montreal Witness, has had other ideas besides the abolition of tipping. He stands on record as being totally in favor of an all-Canadian telegraph rate of 25 cents, and every once in awhile he makes a speech about it. It is always an interesting speech, for, to begin with, the Senator from Prince Albert is a man of enthusiasm and of vigorous tongue, and to end with there is a sound idea underlying the Senator's proposal. It may suit some men to sit in the Senate all day long and vote steadily and persistently on party lines. It may be considered interesting by some men to be permitted to listen to set speeches and applaud where indicated on the score of the day's proceedings. But Senator Davis has originality and an active mind. Hence his all-Canada telegraph rate of 25 cents. Hence the tipping bill.

No one was more surprised at the early success of the anti-tipping bill than Senator Davis, its father. Bills like that usually have a brief, though brilliant, career, and are finally strung up on the six months' hoist, where they slowly strangle. Senator Davis was prepared for something like this. He supposed there would be the usual enconiums and the usual attempt at an epitaph. He intended to dodge the bouquets forestall the epitaph and rescue his bill in time to be revived for another session. But the Senate took to the bill as only tip-ridden Senators could. They embraced it and swept it along with them, victorious! Even the House of Commons awaits its entre with satisfaction.

Senator Davis' father was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and was for some time principal of Rouse's Point High School. From his father, the Senator-to-be obtained his education. When he reached Prince Albert in 1874 it was scarcely more than a police village, but it had a future and on that future young Davis counted. He became a clerk in a shop. Presently he was made a partner. Then he owned the business. In 1894-5 he was mayor of his city. From 1896 to 1904 he sat in the House of Commons as a Liberal member, and was chief Liberal whip for the Western members for the last four years of his term in the House. In September of 1904 Earl Grey called him to the Senate, where he sits, a sturdy man with a staunch figure, and a strong countenance, with a keen eye and a firm mouth, with just a touch of humor flickering about his chin occasionally and a hint of Irish mischief lurking in his eye.—Toronto Star Weekly.



SCALDED TO DEATH.

Toronto Engineer Is Victim of Boiler Explosion at Haileybury.

TORONTO, July 13.—News reached Toronto last night of the death of Mr. Murdoch Lloyd of this city at Haileybury, as a result of a boiler explosion at Haileybury on Saturday afternoon. From the meagre facts obtainable it seems that Mr. Lloyd, who was interested in Tough Oaks Mines at Swastika, undertook to do something to a boiler at the mine, and while he was at work it exploded, scalding him so badly that he lingered in intense agony from four o'clock Saturday afternoon until 10 o'clock yesterday morning, when he was relieved by death.

Mr. Lloyd was a mining engineer by profession. He was born in Aurora about 45 years ago. He was married to a Miss Smith of Pembroke, who predeceased him about five years ago, and is survived by one child, a little girl.

ANCIENT MAKE-UPS.

Rouge and Flesh Colors Have Been Found In Classic Rome.

Thousands of years ago the art of "make-up" as practiced in the dressing-rooms of actors and actresses of to-day, was known to the Egyptians and Romans. For proof of this one only has to study the many interesting theatrical relics in the British Museum.

The Egyptians supply us with what is probably the oldest wig in the world—a wig, it is true, that was in no way connected with the drama, but one that will compare favorably with the finest creations of the theatrical perruquier. Strangely enough, the tresses are made of plaited crepe hair, exactly similar to that used by modern actors for moustaches.

In the Graeco-Roman department, says the 'Era Annual,' may be seen the cosmetic box of a Roman lady. The white and flesh-colored chalks and rouges are similar to those used for "making-up" in the days previous to the invention and manufacture of grease-paint. There are also two objects of the theatrical life of the past that have their replicas in the theatres of the present day. One is a thin, oblong slab of stone, bearing the Latin words, "Circus Plenus," which was occasionally to be found outside a Roman circus, and corresponded to the familiar modern notice, "House Full." The other is a plain ivory disc displayed in the Egyptian room, but which would hardly attract attention. This common-looking object is a theatre check or pass, but whether of a temporary or permanent character cannot be ascertained.

Much the richest department in stage objects, however, is the Graeco-Roman room, where one case of stage exhibits may be seen. Here are to be found specimens of the masks worn by actors, which were modelled according to strict rules. They were made of terra-cotta, and must have been very uncomfortable to wear. There are also numerous statuettes in bronze and terra-cotta of actors wearing their masks in the various characters they impersonated, in addition to models of masks of every description and kind.

The Dignified Course.

An army examiner once had a candidate before him who apparently was unable to answer the simplest question. At last the examiner lost his temper and, with sarcastic emphasis, lost on the youth before him, said:

"Suppose, sir, that you were a captain in command of a company of infantry; that in your rear was an impassable abyss; that on either side of you towered perpendicular rocks of untraversable height; that before you stood the enemy, a hundred men to each one of yours. What, sir, would you do in this emergency?"

"Sir," said the aspirant to military honors, "I should resign."—Pearson's Weekly.

Gave It Cheerfully.

The father of a Germantown lad had given him a ten cent piece and a quarter of a dollar, telling him that he might put one or the other on the church's contribution plate.

At dinner the father asked the boy which coin he had given.

"Well, father," exclaimed the youngster, "at first it seemed to me that I ought to put the quarter on the plate, but just in time I remembered the saying, 'The Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' and I knew I could give the ten cent piece a great deal more cheerfully, so I put that in."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Grandmother's Story.

Two old ladies were once talking about how small babies sometimes are when they are born. And one old lady said complacently:

"When I was born I was so small you could put me into a quart tankard and shut daoun the led."

And the other old lady said, astounded:

"Wy—did—you—live?"

And the first old lady said:

"They say I did, and growed nicely."—New York Post.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

American Aviator Wins.

LONDON, July 13.—An American, Walter L. Brock, Saturday captured first honors in the aeroplane race from Hendon to Paris and return. Brock out-distanced his nearest rival, Raoul Garros, a French aviator, by more than an hour. His flying time for the distance—502 miles in a direct line was seven hours, three minutes, six seconds.

A thrilling incident of the race was a plunge into the English channel, which Baron Carberry suffered when his aeroplane fell from a considerable height, when half way across on the return trip. Lord Carberry kept afloat with the aid of a life belt until picked up by a passing steamer.

DEACON S. DOLBY

The Sins of a Perfect Man Find Him Out.

By M. QUAD.

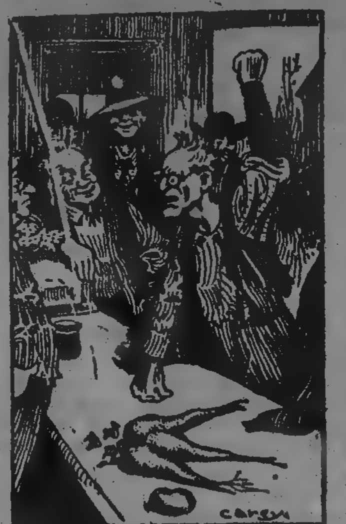
[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

DEACON DOLBY carelessly announced that he must get some few squash seeds, and Mrs. Dolby remembered that Mr. Bacon had some.

When the deacon had finished his meal he set forth, saying he would be back in an hour, Mrs. Dolby mused:

"There goes the best husband in the state! Is there another man for a thousand miles around that would have thought of squash seeds because he knew that his wife doted on summer squashes? Samuel is the next thing to an angel!"

Halfway to his destination the deacon met Mrs. Tonguelash. He knew her to be a gossip and tried to avoid her.



"WHEN THE MEN POKED FUN AT YOU."

"Why, Deacon Dolby! How've you been," she cackled, "and how's your dear wife?"

"Tolerable."

"I was thinking this morning that I orter call and tell her that I have a new recipe for making soft soap. It beats the old way. I'm going as far as the store anyway, and I might as well go along to the house."

The deacon said things to himself as he passed on and hoped he might get home before Mrs. Tonguelash arrived. It was not to be. He had to call at four different places before he could find the seeds and was gone three hours.

On the kitchen table was a note:

"I am going to hang myself. You will find my dead body in the barn!"

"Humph!" said the deacon, as he began to plant his seeds.

The barn was only a few rods away, but he never looked at it.

Mrs. Dolby's dead body at the end of a rope was swaying back and forth in the breeze, but he didn't seem to care.

His task done, he entered the house to get himself some supper. If Mrs. Dolby had hanged herself she couldn't be expected to get supper, nor was the deacon expected to go hungry.

Mrs. Dolby stood at the door for five minutes. Then she spoke:

"Samuel, you did not come to the barn."

The deacon struck at a fly.

"I left you a note stating that I was going to hang myself."

The note lay on the floor.

"You did not come out to look at my dead body!"

He didn't say a word.

"I intended to hang myself, but thought it only right to let you know why."

The deacon's eyebrows went up.

"Mrs. Tonguelash has been here!"

The words were given in a dramatic voice.

"You met her on the street and tried to stop her, but she had a duty to perform, and she could not be turned aside.

"Samuel Dolby, three months ago you gave a stranger $5 for a dime of 1840. He said it would bring $10 in New York. You didn't say a word about it to me. Next day you found you had been made a fool of. When the men poked fun at you what reply did you make?"

The deacon remembered his very words, but evaded the question.

"Here is just what you said. Mr. Tonguelash was there, and he wrote it down. You shouted out:

"'By the living jingo and durn my cats to Jericho, if I ever come across that blasted reptile I'll bust his cocoanut a yard wide!'"

Mrs. Dolby waited for a moment for the awful words to go echoing around the kitchen and then asked:

"Such awful blasphemy, and all this time I was regarding you as almost an angel! Oh, Samuel!"—

Mrs. Dolby's feelings overcame her, and she sobbed.

"Samuel, do you"—

"Yes; I think those squash seeds will be coming up within ten days," he replied as he set off for the barn.

"Samuel didn't show one single sign of guilt, and I'm glad I didn't hang myself," she said as she put the teakettle on.

HUERTA MAY RESIGN.

Reports at Vera Cruz Say Dictator Is Ready to Vamoose To-day.

VERA CRUZ, July 13.—The resignation of Provisional President Huerta may be placed before Congress to-day, the general departing immediately thereafter for Puerta, Mexico, or Vera Cruz, under British escort, according to reports in circulation here last night, which originated from a source that is usually well informed. Odolfo de la Lama, Minister of Finance in Huerta's Cabinet, who arrived here yesterday en route to Europe, while refusing to confirm these reports, said that Huerta's retirement at an early date was not unlikely, and that from now until Monday was "but a short time to await developments."

Reports from the Mexican capital also state that Francisco Carbajal, the newly-appointed Foreign Minister, replacing Esteva Ruiz, the acting Minister, who will arrive here to-day on his way to Europe, will be named Provisional President.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., July 13.—Associated Judge Morance Harmon Lurton, of the U. S. Supreme Court, died suddenly at a hotel here yesterday from heart failure superinduced by cardiac asthma. He was 70 years old.

Opportunity knocks but once—but it's different with the human knocker.

LEBANON VALLEY FLOODED.

Six Persons Are Dead and Many Injured After Cloudburst.

SCRANTON, Pa., July 13.—Six dead and many injured is the known result of a flood which swept through Lebanon Valley on the heels of a cloudburst. Damage to the extent of many thousands of dollars was done in the mining and farming region. Many miners, caught in shafts and cross tunnels narrowly escaped. One of the men who perished near Lebanon stepped on a high tension wire and another was killed by lightning.

Overflowing of a creek in the Lebanon district flooded thousands of acres of corn and wheat, while hail that accompanied the storm destroyed much of the fruit crop. Twenty-five men were caught in a mine 200 feet below the surface at Archbald, near Scranton, when a dam burst and flooded the mine workings. They all managed to escape to the surface.

Two Fatally Injured.

KINGSTON, July 13.—Two persons here are near death's door because of injuries sustained in falls.

John Marshall, a convict at the penitentiary, fell off a wall there on Saturday and received probably fatal injuries. Workmen have been building up a wall, and Marshall was helping them. Peter McLeod fell from the attic of his house, a distance of 30 feet, and had two ribs broken and a lung punctured. He will likely die.

Huge Gathering In Glasgow.

GLASGOW, July 13.—Twenty-five thousand West Scotland Orangemen held a demonstration at Blantyre, Lanarkshire, Saturday afternoon. The grand master of Scotland, Rev. David Ness, declared that their policy regarding Home Rule was "no surrender." Great crowds witnessed the procession through the streets, and lively skirmishes occurred, but only four persons were arrested.

Hunter Sues For Libel.

GODERICH, Ont., July 13.—John B. Hunter, the chief witness in the Elliott Macklin election conspiracy, who was before Magistrate Kelly on Thursday last, has instructed his solicitor, Mr. L. E. Dancy, to take action for libel against The Toronto Globe, The Toronto Mail and Empire and The Goderich Star for statements made in connection with the trial.

Hay Overheated; Barn Burns.

PRESTON, July 13.—The large barn, near Doon, of John Slee caught fire yesterday afternoon through the heating of 30 tons of hay, just put in the barn. On account of no fire protection, the barn and the contents were destroyed, with three horses, several cattle and some chickens.

A good plan is to keep buttons in glass bottles. A glance tells you exactly what is inside, thus saving a good deal of time which would be taken up in turning over the buttons if put in a box.

Demonstration Quiet.

NEW YORK, July 13.—Seven thousand persons, some professed anarchists, some members of the Industrial Workers of the World, the Free Speech League and kindred organizations, and some merely curious, gathered in Union Square yesterday afternoon for a demonstration in memory of the three men killed in the bomb explosion of July 4th. The ashes of the victims were not exhibited in urns, the mayor having forbidden it.

Seven hundred police surrounded the square before the services were begun. There was no disorder.

TWO OUT OF THREE FOR PETES BELTING TWIRLED SHUTOUT

Blountmen Started Early on Last Game With Beavers Scoring Four Runs and Local Heaver Held Visitors in Control

THE Petes finished their week of labor on Saturday with another win over the Beavers, making it four out of six on the two series, two wins from Erie and two from Toronto. Incidentally, they continued the good work by winning against the Senators at Hull on Sunday.

The week-end battle was mostly all Peterboro, as the visitors failed to connect to advantage, with Knute Belting on the firing line. It was a shutout for the Swede, while the Blountmen took six runs. They went after Graham in the first frame, and aided by misplays, tallied a quartette of runs. The fourth run was helped along with an error, but the sixth was cleancut, the productive agencies being King's two base ply, Fox's sacrifice and Belting's double, the latter being sweet revenge for the local heaver, as Ort had been kidding the Swede.

First Innings.

Toronto—Kroy grounded to first, Shultz flew out to short. Ort fanned. No hits. No runs. No errors.

Peterboro—Blount walked. Dolan sacrificed and Blount took third on Harkins' bad throw. Dolan singled him in. Rooney's double scored Dolan. Byrne sent Rooney to third, and he scored on Shultz's fumble of King's grounder. Killilea threw out King at second, but Ort threw wild to first, Rooney and Byrne scoring. Belting fanned. Four runs. Three hits. Three errors.

Second Innings.

Toronto—Belting stabbed a drive from Killilea. Isaacs fanned. King threw out Hunt. No hits. No runs. No errors.

Peterboro—Trout took Blount's fly. Welsh fanned. Dolan beat out a hit and stole second. Rooney fanned. One hit. No runs. No errors.

Third Innings

Toronto—Harkins got a life on Fox's error. Graham struck out. Kroy forced Harkins and Shultz forced Kroy. No runs. No hits. One error.

Peterboro — Killilea threw out Byrne. Shultz took King's foul fly, and Fox grounded to the pitcher. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Fourth Innings

Toronto—Ort was passed. Welsh took Killilea's long fly. Trout singled and Isaac flew to Dolan. Blount took Hunt's fly. No runs. One hit. No errors.

Peterboro—Miller grounded out. Belting fouled to Shultz, and Blount was thrown out. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Fifth Innings

Toronto—Harkins was safe when Belting muffed his fly. Graham fanned and Harkins was caught off first base. Kroy singled, and Belting threw out Shultz. No runs. One hit. One error.

Peterboro—With Welsh gone, Trout made a pretty catch of Dolan's fly. Rooney singled into right and stole. He went home when Killilea threw wild on Byrne's grounder. King singled. Trout pulled down Fox's fly with one hand. One run. Two hits. One error.

Sixth Innings

Toronto—Ort singled, but Killilea hit into a double play. Trout flied to Welsh. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Peterboro — Miller and Belting fanned. Blount singled, stole and made third on Harkins' error. Welsh fanned. One hit. No runs. One error.

Seventh Innings

Toronto—Isaacs grounded. Hunt flew out to Blount. Harkins singled and made third on Graham's hit into right. King took Kroy's drive. No runs. Two hits. No errors.

Peterboro — Dolan walked and Rooney hit into a double play, fast work by Ort and Killilea. Byrne fanned. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Eighth Innings

Toronto—Byrne took Shultz's foul fly. Ort flew out to right, and Killilea skied to King. No runs. No hits. No errors.

Peterboro—King doubled to deep left. Fox sacrificed, and Miller fanned. Belting doubled, King scoring, and Blount flew to left. One run. Two hits. No errors.

Ninth Innings

Toronto—Trout skied to Rooney. Isaacs and Hunt singled. Harkins fouled to Dolan. Burrill, batting for Graham, was passed, filling the bags. Rooney took Kroy's fly. No runs. Two hits. No errors.

COMMENT
As You Like It

Back in the days of seven six
The Yankees ruled the roost;
The blokes were running strong—not! nix!
And nought could their stock
boost.
Again it came in eighteen twelve,
From out the silent night,
Unk. Sam put J. Bull on the shelf
And gave his joys the blight.
But changed the scene, nineteen fourteen
Finds Sammy on the flue,
The Polo Cup has crossed the pond
With Golf and Relay too
And now poor Willie's lost his crown,
Our breath we draw apace
We'll know Friend Sam is slipping back
If Lipton wins his race.
—Montreal Herald.

And amid all these British victories it gives one a certain amount of comfort to know that there's no Aw-lbert about Ty Cobb or old man Matty.

The performance of Gene Hurtubise with John Kolonis awakened interest and love for an almost forgotten game. Wrestling is not nearly so prominent as it was a few years ago and the cause is given that young men are losing interest in it. This should not be the case as without a doubt it is the finest exercise that could possibly be had. Mr. H. B. Cowan had a class last winter in the Y.M.C.A. at which wrestling was enjoyed but only a few availed themselves of the opportunity to learn the tricks of the game. This fall the class will be commenced again and it is to be hoped that a few more of the young men will fall in line.

A meeting of the executive of the Mercantile Baseball League is called for tomorrow night in the Y.M.C.A. at seven-thirty. The main question to be discussed will be the protest of the De Laval over a decision given by Umpire Andrews in the De Laval-Red Caps game.

KOLONIS LOST TO BIG GENE

Local Grappled Two of Three Falls

The wrestling auditorium at the Washburn's Midway Shows was filled to overflowing, Saturday evening to see Gene Hurtubise and John Kolonis, the Greek, meet in a two-out-of-three match. On Thursday evening when the foreigner failed to take a fall out of the local man, considerable kicking arose over the fact that Hurtubise did not work on his man, so to demonstrate that the "challenger of the world" wasn't such a "Frank Gotch" as they thought, Gene secured the Saturday evening bout.

For those who missed the bout it might be mentioned that they missed some of the nicest wrestling seen here in years, as both men were working in earnest. Hurtubise with his great strength and the Greek with masterly science and perfect condition. Right off the start the local grappler assumed the aggressive and attempted to throw the Greek with body holds, but the latter was too well trained to be caught. He wiggled out of several bad corners by using flips and once on top demonstrated the fact that he could use his legs well. He clamped full nelsons and scissors on his opponent with his legs, and it was in doing this that Hurtubise secured a toe hold on him, and forced Kolonis to concede a fall after wrestling twenty minutes.

When the men resumed the fray the Greek worked hard and had Gene in a couple of very close positions. He attempted to use the toe hold, but was unable so he concentrated his full attention to body scissors and nelsons. It was with a combination of these that he finally pinned Hurtubise's shoulders to the mat after eight minutes.

The interest in the match was becoming acute, and when both men returned for the decisive struggle they were both loudly applauded. No sooner had the referee called time than Hurtubise went after his man like a cat after a mouse. He gave him a little "bear hug" which caused Kolonis to worry and then tried a crotch hold, but the Greek by a very clever flip got clear and took up the aggressive end. He slipped on a full nelson with his feet, and right there lost the match. He no sooner had it on than Hurtubise got the toe hold, and it was but a matter of a few minutes that Kolonis was forced to concede a second fall, which gave the local man the bout. Time, four minutes.

The spectators were very jubilant over the victory, their cheers being heard all over the grounds. The Greek made a very favorable impression by his gameness and science. The third man was Joe Dwyer.

PETES WON IN THE TENTH

Took Sunday Game From Ottawa by 5-4

Ottawa, July 12.—After tieing the score in the ninth the locals were beaten out in the tenth by Peterboro at Dupuis Park this afternoon. The score being 5 to 4. Marshall began to pitch for Ottawa, but before he had retired a man there were 4 runs over the pan. Peterson replaced him and didn't allow a run.

Shaughnessy subsequently poled out a home run with nobody on, and Dolan followed it, making it 4 to 2 when Ottawa came up in the ninth. Lage also whacked out a homer, and after Nill had singled Dolan and Powers moved him along to third. Shocker, hitting for Peterson, reached first and Nill scored on a passed ball, while the crowd went wild.

Lill went in to pitch for Ottawa in the 10th and after King had forced Rooney at third and going to second on the play, he counted when Fox slammed one to deep centre. Schettler, who had replaced Tracey after Nill's single in the ninth, saved the match for Peterboro in the extra frame. With Smykal out, Shaughnessy doubled, but Schettler struck out Rogers and Lage and ended the chances.

Ottawa appeared to be playing in the hardest kind of luck throughout. The defeat will be charged against Lill, though Marshall allowed four runs as the score was 4 to 4, with no one on the bases when Lill went in. Tracey will get the credit for the win as it was 4 to 3 for Peterboro when Manager Blount took him out. The weather was very warm and 3,000 spectators saw one of the best games of the season. COUNTY POLICE COURT CASES.

Magistrate Edmison will hear two cases tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock. The first one arises from an alleged breach of warrantee, the defendant being charged with selling a cow which was suffering from tuberculosis.

The other case is against a resident of Otonabee, who is charged with acting as an auctioneer without procuring a license.

Happy is the man who can forget all the mean things he knows about himself.

Alberta and Eastern British Columbia Division C.P.A., J. H. Woods, Calgary Herald, chairman.

WILL INAUGURATE CAMP AT T.A.S. PARK

In view of the fact that more people could enjoy the beauties of the Otonabee if Mass were celebrated Sunday mornings at T.A.S. Park, there is a movement on foot to open a camp at the park and have a chaplain stationed there who will look after the spiritual needs of the campers. Several members of the two Total Abstinence Societies have been working on the project and have decided to open the camp on Monday, July 20th. It is the idea of the committee in charge to afford accommodation for 30 campers and employ a cook to see that meals of only the best variety be served. After considerable figuring the committee have decided that the fee will be $2.00 per week. The new pavilion will be used as a dormitory.

A meeting of all the young men desiring to accept this opportunity of a few weeks of camp life, is called for to-night in St. Alphonsus Lyceum at eight o'clock. A full attendance is looked forward to.

LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC CELEBRATION AT LINDSAY

Anniversary of King William's Victory is Observed by 15000 People

The weather man smiled warmly, fifteen thousand people cheered and about 3,200 Orangemen walked at Lindsay yesterday afternoon in celebration of the 224th anniversary of King Billy's memorable and historic victory at the Boyne. It was the biggest day Lindsay has had in its history. It was a striking occasion and proved that Orangeism has not lost any of its popularity or enthusiasm. The men that marched were accompanied, most of them to Lindsay, by their wives, others by sweethearts and those joined in the loud outbursts that met the marchers as they toiled along. The fife and drum was as prominent as ever. Some band had six or eight fifes and the same number of drums, others had one drum and two fifes or one fife and two drums but regardless of the band's strength the spirit was there and the lodge with only one fife and two drums, marched behind a spirited Protestant Boy, or Cock of the North or British Grenadiers. The only regrettable feature of the day was Col. the Hon. Samuel Hughes' inability to remain long enough to deliver a speech. He was called to Ottawa. Joseph Thompson, one of the lodge's high officials at Toronto, J. H. Burnham, M.P., Evan McLean of Bowmanville another exalted officer were among the speakers and delivered stirring orations.

Local Lodges There.

A striking feature of the parade was the simplicity of the regalia. There was an absence of the old plume, frock coat and bedecked to the limit idea. What is more the simplicity made the show off all the more pleasing. It is safe to say that not one of the seventy odd lodges, gathered from ten surrounding counties outshone the other, because they all looked great and neat. The Peterboro contingent made an exceptionally good showing with their white shirts and headed by the Maple Leaf and the locals' respective fife and drum bands. Douro 457 followed the Maple Leaf band which was headed by Ernie Reid, D.M., and Arthur Holden, D.M., who were mounted. Directly in the rear of 321 came their fife and drum and S. R. Scott, D.D., mounted. Then the Argyle Lodge No. 494 about one hundred strong brought a cheer from Keene friends. Following Keene was Lord Nelson 2490 of Monaghan which made an exceptionally fine showing. Then came a brass band and Lord Beresford 122 from Lakefield. The Young Canadians 1385 from Lakefield followed and their fife and drum brought up their rear in merry fashion. Marching in behind was L.O.L. 80 of Peterboro and with their clear cut stride and precision of march they brought out rounds of applause. Following them were the Young Canadians of this city with their fife and drum band and it was certainly a fine showing. Then came the J. W. Bell Memorial 1175 which created a fine impression. Then was the juvenile lodge Corpus Pious 50 and the Duke of Manchester 50. It would take a page to describe them all but the Indian contingent from Ojibway made a great showing and with their band were cheered to an echo en route.

Ninety Years an Orangeman.

In a cab that played a prominent part in the parade was John Scholer an Orangeman of ninety years of age. He has attended Orange celebrations since he was a child and yesterday was the first time he was forced to ride in a hack. He hails from Manvers.

Another vehicle hove in view with a large streamer on it bearing the following "One flag, one language, one nation." Seated in that vehicle was John Cook of Cameron who declined to give his age but a friend states it is 91. Mr. Cook has attended every Orange celebration in the district for years back.

Throughout the day the crowds were orderly. That big wide street which runs through the centre of Lindsay and which is a credit to the town was just about large enough in breadth to accommodate the crowd that lined up twenty deep to cheer the adherents of Orangeism and the men who honor the famous victory. Not one lodge of the seventy or more walked by without a cheer and one woman sitting in an auto remarked in a whisper that she could not talk loud enough to tell her maid to order a sirloin for hubby who was one of the big guns in the parade.

About two o'clock the procession, marshalled by Rt. Worshipful Sir Knight Wm. Warren, Grand Master Royal Black Knights of Ireland, assisted by Dis. Master Burke, moved out to Victoria Park and along Kent St. west to Adelaide St. to Bond St., and east on Bond to William St., south on William St. to Wellington St., east on Wellington St. and across the river to Lindsay; then south on Lindsay to Kent St., and westerly to the park. All along the line of march thousands of people were lined up to view the parade. The blare of brass bands, the shrill notes of the fife and the skirl of the pipers were heard on all sides, while the brilliantly bedecked members of the different lodges, with their handsome banners, presented a scene not often witnessed.

THE PRINCE OF WALES' FIRST PUBLIC RECEPTION.

His Royal Highness delivered his first set speech at the laying of the corner-stone of St. Anselm's Church, Kensington, on his own estate and is here shown inspecting the guard of honour (24th County of London Regiment) after the ceremony. The Prince spoke in such a low voice that few of the audience could hear him.

After the end of the parade had reached the park, speeches were delivered by prominent members of the order. Practically all the following lodges were in the parade :—

CORDAGE COMPANY CASES ADJOURNED

Three contributaries of the defunct Canadian Cordage Company appeared before Judge Huycke this morning and their cases were adjourned until Thursday owing to the failure of several witnesses to appear. The three contributaries were James Mite, South Monaghan ; Hugh Ferguson, Newmarket ; and Mrs. D. Smythe of Fraserville. The only evidence submitted was that of the defendants who admitted placing applications for stock but later repudiating the applications. E. L. Goodwill acted for the contributaries and S. T. Medd for the liquidators.

PEARS' MANAGER LEFT LARGE ESTATE

London, July 14.—Thos. J. Barrett, managing director of Pears, the well-known soap manufacturers, who died in April left an estate valued at $2,027,320. He bequeathed two pine coolers, two sauceboats, and a tea pot formerly belonging to Nelson to the Royal Naval Hospital at Greenwich.

AN OBJECTION TO REYNARDS

Residents do not Fancy the Presence of Foxes

DISAGREEABLE ODORS

Report on Incinerator From Sanitary Inspector

A new one was sprung on the Board of Health at the regular meeting this morning when they dealt with a complaint of residents of Stewart Street near Smith in connection with one of the residents keeping foxes. The complaint was to the effect that the odors were very unpleasant in the evening, due to the foxes being kept in close confinement. It was impossible to sit on the verandahs with comfort.

After some discussion the matter was left with Sanitary Inspector to investigate and if necessary take steps to alleviate the nuisance. Chairman Dr. Amys was of the opinion that foxes were a nuisance and a detriment to the general health of the nearby residents.

Ald. Duncan expressed the same opinion and moved that the above steps be taken.

Peck, Kerr and McElderry on behalf of their clients O. Sharpe, claimed that Sharpe when able to leave the hospital was stricken with measles due to the negligence of the matron of the hospital. For this reason they disputed the claim for his maintenance of 42 days. The matter was referred to the City Solicitor to take steps.

Dr. McPherson stated that Sharpe spent overtime in the hospital but had not the measles.

A recommendation was passed to the City Council regarding the construction of a sewer on Cambridge Street from Elm Street to Cedar Street as part of the local improvements.

Report on Hospital.

Miss Mowry, matron of the Queen Mary Hospital submitted the following report :

The Incinerator.

In connection with the Incinerator complaints Medical Health Officer Dr. McPherson reported to the effect that he had canvassed several residents in the vicinity of the incinerator. A number of them had suffered from the effects of the disagreeable smell from the incinerator. Recently it had not been so bad.

He pointed out that the factors in making the disagreeable smell were the burning of night soil, dead animals, imperfect combustion and also that the incinerator was merely an experiment in the city. The company should have fully instructed the caretaker in its various uses. He suggested that unless the smell abated, the practice of burning night soil and animals should be discontinued. He also suggested that the hour of burning these be changed which might work out alright.

The report was received and the matter will be taken up.

With the passing of the monthly accounts the Board adjourned. Those present were Dr. Amys, M.H.O. McPherson, Sanitary Inspector Spence and Mr. Murty.

WHO PAYS FOR THE DOCTOR ?

When Youngsters Are Whipped at Police Station

Judge Huycke presided at one of the shortest Police Commissioners' meetings on record yesterday, when assisted by Mayor Buller and Magistrate Dumble, the Commissioners' slate for the month was cleaned in exactly nine minutes.

The various accounts were passed with the exception of the account of Dr. Morgan for medical attendance at the recent flogging of the five youngsters. The matter was left over owing to diversion of opinion in the matter. Magistrate Dumble was of the opinion that it was all right to be charged against the Commissioners, while Chief Thompson expressed himself that he thought it might be charged with the costs of the case. Mayor Buller saw no reason why the city should have to pay.

It was decided to pay to the order of Mrs. Sills, money due her late husband, who had passed away recently.

Judge Huycke asked if they were not of the opinion that something should be done for the widow of the late constable, but no further action was taken.

The recommendation of Chief Thompson of the appointment of Stewart Servante to the police force was accepted.

ENGINEER IS SCALDED TO DEATH

Remained at His Post as Trains Were About to Collide

FIREMAN JUMPED

Canadian Press Despatch.

Edmonton, July 14.—A Canadian Northern incoming freight train and shunting engine with string of cars collided in the Edmonton yard last night. Frank Scott, fireman of the freight, jumped and saved his life, calling to the engineer, George Marshall, to do the same, but Marshall stayed, jammed on the brakes and blew the whistle. He was scalded to death in the escape of steam that followed the collision.

CORNER SAID TO BE DANGEROUS

Street Railway and G.T.R. Tracks in Close Proximity

But Passengers Alight Before Street Car Stops

Several residents in the vicinity of the Church of the Sacred Heart have complained to the Review about the Romaine and George Streets corner. As the G. T. R. Belleville line runs across it, and the street cars utilize the north east corner, it is claimed to be exceedingly dangerous.

The Review has inquired into the matter and finds that the fault lies with the residents, directly, and the City Council, indirectly.

Last evening a Review representative went over the ground with one of the complainants, and found that there was no crossing on the north side of Romaine, but there was on the east side of George. The cars go around the corner at a very slow rate and a passenger standing on the rear platform is tempted to step off as soon as the car starts to turn instead of waiting till the car stops, after the turn is made. While the scribe and the resident were standing there, a pasenger stepped off at the start of the turn, and naturally ran two or three steps. When he gained control of his feet he was right on the G.T.R. tracks, and if a train were close at hand he would find it impossible to get clear. The noise of the street car drowns the noise of an aproaching train, hence a passenger who alights from the car is taking a big risk. The resident agreed that in case of accident occurring under such conditions, the passenger would be the only person at fault. The safest and wisest plan is to remain on the car till it stops on Romaine Street with the rear at the crossing on the east side of George Street.

This morning the scribe interviewed W. H. Munroe of the Radial Railway Company and was informed that the city had promised to build a crossing on the north side of Romaine Street, and if this were built the street cars would stop with the front entrance at it. Until such times as the city constructs this crossing, the cars will proceed around the curve. As the city's men are at present laying sidewalks in the south end, it is altogether probable that the crossing will be provided in the near future.

MONK STABBED BY WOMAN

Power Behind Czar's Throne Reported Dead

HAD BEEN TRACKED

ST. PETERSBURG, July 14.—The mystic lay monk, Gregory Rasputin, a notable figure in the Emperor's court, was stabbed by a woman, named Guseva, at his native village, Pokrovsky, in the Province of Tobolsk, Siberia. One report has it that he died; another that his wound was not mortal.

The attack upon Rasputin has excited intense interest in court and official circles here. He was recently recalled to the Emperor's household after an absence of several months, and was credited with exercising an influence over the Emperor far more potent than any of his Ministers, and was regarded in some quarters as the supreme power behind the throne.

The woman, Guseva, has been tracking him for a long time. She finally approached him in the guise of a beggar and stabbed him in the abdomen. She was prevented from stabbing the monk a second time, as he lay on the ground, by his son, who seized her and held her until the police arrived.

On her arrest, the woman declared that she wanted to avenge one of Rasputin's girl victims, who is now in a convent. After being lodged in a cell the woman attempted to commit suicide by cutting her wrist with a piece of glass.

NO FRICTION IN DERRY OR BELFAST ON "TWELFTH"

Celebration of Anniversary of Battle of the Boyne is Marked by Vigorous Speeches at Drumbeg and Sir Edward Carson Pledges His Followers to Resist Home Rule Bill at Any Cost.

LONDON, July 14.—The recognition of the danger inherent in the existence of two armed volunteer bodies seems to have imbued Irishmen with a sense of added responsibility, and the battle of the Boyne was commemorated yesterday in Ireland with tremendous enthusiasm. But there was a more noticeable absence of disorder than on past occasions of this kind.

Following the custom a great procession marched from Belfast to Drumbeg, where Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, made his now familiar speech defying the Government either totally to exclude Ulster from Home Rule or come out and fight.

Lord Londonderry at Enniskillen and Walter Hume Long, Unionist member of Parliament for Strand, at Garvagh, made speeches in a similar vein to other big demonstrations of Ulstermen, but no disorder was reported at any point up to a late hour last night.

Rival Nationalist and Orange processions at Glendermoat reached the stage of jeering at each other, and for a few moments it looked like trouble, but the police succeeded in keeping them apart until the danger was passed.

LORD LONDONDERRY.

One feature of the situation seems to be that while Sir Edward Carson and other leaders are using unrestrained language, both Ulstermen and Nationalists are showing admirable self-control. Another feature is the more defiant the Ulster leaders' speeches become the more pronounced becomes the feeling among the members of Parliament on both sides that a satisfactory compromise will be reached.

Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons yesterday that the present session of Parliament would come to an end about the close of August, and that the new session would begin in early winter, which is thought to mean December. Before the present session ends, the Government will introduce its proposals for the reform of the House of Lords.

Carson Pledged Covenanters.

DRUMBEG, Ireland, July 14.—The Orangemen's demonstration here yesterday culminated in a scene of immense enthusiasm around the tiny platform where Sir Edward Carson, Bible in hand, pledged the covenanters never to surrender to coercion, to remain loyal to the throne, and never to waver in their support of their leaders in the fight against Home Rule.

Sir Edward Carson, in a speech which evoked tremendous enthusiasm, served notice on the British Government that unless it was prepared to leave Ulster alone it would very shortly find the Ulstermen recognising no government except the Provisional Government of Ulster. He said he had been given authority to act, and if necessary that meant he was to exercise his powers without regard to consequences to himself. The Ulstermen, he added, were not going to give way and were bound to win, because God would defend the right.

Sir Edward Carson offered the Government the alternatives of giving Ulster a clean cut out of Home Rule, or of coming to fight the Ulstermen. These, he said, were the only possible alternatives. Ulster, he concluded, was claiming only justice, and if it did not get it from the Government, would take it for itself.

Opened With Cannonade.

LONDONDERRY, Ireland, July 14.—The Orangemen have begun the celebration of the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne with a cannonade, during which they projected their explosives so that they burst over residences in the Roman Catholic section of the city. The Nationalists, believing the cannonade to be the prelude to aggressive action on the part of the Orangemen, organised for defence, but no collision between the two parties took place.

NEW MOWN HAY CAUSES DISPUTE

Magistrate Edmison Hears Evidence and Reserves Judgment

This morning before Magistrate Edmison, William G. Scott charged J. Kellihe r with taking hay to the value of $15 from a lot on the Monaghan Road. His worship reserved judgment. G. N. Gordon acted for the defendant and Jos. Wearing prosecuted. Scott claimed that he owned several lots on the road and Kellihe r had cut hay from them. The defense was that Kellihe r had been given permission by Reeve Howden to cut the hay on the roadside, and on a lane which cuts throng the survey on which Scott's lots were located. The defendant also claimed that he had been given permission to cut hay off one of the lots in the survey by a man named Walker, who was a real estate agent. The complainant alleged that while cutting on that lot Kellihe r overstepped the mark. The defense attempted to show that on one occasion, Scott had sold the road or street cutting rights to a man when he, Scott, had no authority whatever.

"Carrots are good for the complexion."

"How about the hair ? Will they make it carroty ?"—Kansas City Journal.

Both Administration Officials at Washington and Constitutionalists Confident.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—A real head to the Mexican situation is believed by Administration officials and the Constitutionalists to be rapidly approaching. The State Department view is that unless there are foreign complications the situation will clear after the departure of Gen. Huerta.

That there will be such complications was manifest by statements made in various circles in Washington yesterday. If Gen. Carranza, speaking for the Constitutionalists, will manifest a fair and equitable attitude toward the foreign debts contracted by the Huerta regime the prospective foreign complications may be avoided, or, at least, temporarily postponed.

The State Department has now received definite information that Gen. Huerta is sure to step down and out this time.

Senor Carbajal, once in charge of the executive power, according to information brought to the State Department yesterday, is expected to communicate with the Constitutionalists, offering to turn the Government over to them under certain conditions. Just how these offers will be communicated is not known, but it is believed that they will be made direct to the Constitutionalists, and not through the A. B. C. mediators. The Constitutionalists are expected to rejoin that the Government left behind by Huerta must surrender unconditionally or the Constitutionalists will take Mexico City.

Still the Constitutionalists are not so certain that there will not be foreign complications.

WIRELESS TELEPHONES.

WHEN THE TELEPHONE was first invented many people thought it was impossible to talk over a wire. When experiments were being performed in New York, thirty-five years ago, most citizens thought it was a hoax, and that the conversations were framed up. When typesetting machines were invented, printers invariably declared it was impossible to set type by machinery. But the impossible was accomplished along with many other marvellous things. Wireless telegraphy came, horseless carriages, now called simply cars, were invented, flying machines and machine guns were built, together with submarines, automatic newspaper presses and electric lighting appliances. Now the world is prepared to accept the performance of almost anything through the magic wand of science or invention.

One of the latest announcements is that of wireless telephones. Marconi announces that within the next three months an attempt will be made to talk by wireless telephone from Carnarvon, Wales, to New York, and when the stations for wireless communication between England and Argentina are built, it will be possible for people in London to talk to people in Buenos Ayres—at least that is the prophecy. Some day Australians may telephonically communicate with the Chinese, and New Yorkers with residents in Capetown.

The effect of such an invention on commerce, civilization, and the intercourse of nations, will no doubt be important, but it cannot have as great an effect as telegraphy or electricity had. Nowadays there are too many wonders being performed for one to have exceptionally great influence. The mental attitude of nations is not upset by these scientific improvements. Their commercial conditions are not revolutionized. Their thought and political economy is affected, supplemented, given wider range and greater efficiency, but not profoundly changed. The changes taking place are great, but not so sudden as to be startling. Progress seems to be moving at an even pace, not by long jumps, and hence we accept without difficulty inventions and new ways of doing things that would not have been tolerated a little more than a century ago. To go back one hundred years seems to carry us into another world, strange and curious to the busy people of to-day, who accept but moralize little on the vicissitudes daily taking place. Fifty years hence things may be done so differently that we of today may suddenly realise that we belong to a yesterday as old as that of a century ago. Our great Lift-locks may be quite antiquated and moss-covered from disuse, due to other ways of getting up the Otonabee. Then we shall know, as Carlyle said, that some day our own age will be an ancient one.

THE CLERGY IN POLITICS.

A WRITER to the editor of the Montreal Mail makes some interesting comments on "The Clergy in Politics," which was the subject of an editorial in the Montreal paper. He quotes from a book by Dr. Crapsey, thus:

> "'As the clergyman looks out on the world today he is apt to cry "Where do I come in?" He finds himself debarred from any real and active interest in the political, industrial, educational, or social life of the world in which he lives. And in this enforced isolation his manhood withers and his interest in life dies out.' This 'enforced isolation' of the minister is explained in part by other words in the same volume where the author says: 'Corrupt commercialism . . . builds churches and gladly listens to the preaching of the Gospel and insists on the orthodoxy of its doctrine, but it is careful to keep the minister of the Gospel in that closed compartment over the door of which it writes the mystic word 'sacred,' and in which it does not permit the common affairs of every-day life to be so much as mentioned, lest they disturb the holy quiet of the peace.'
> Now, sir, presuming that these words of Dr. Crapsey are true, it would not be very strange if the occupant of such 'closed compartment' should evince a fairly hearty desire to get outside and into a freer atmosphere, into an atmosphere where he could regain his manhood and could take a real and active interest in the whole of life about him, and so more quickly and efficiently—as he would hope—bring about 'social and economical justice. "

The history of great revivals, such as those wrought by Luther and Wesley in Protestantism, and Ignatius Loyola in Catholicism, seem to us to show, not the necessity of ecclesiastics taking an active interest in the whole life about them, but rather the necessity to adjust religion to life in a proper proportion. The history in these cases is this: religion became dead, ceased to relate itself to the life of the people, or failed to satisfy their spiritual needs; a great reformer arose who forced his character and preaching beyond the bounds of religious work; the effect gradually subsided until another event revived religious enthusiasm. In an age of specialization it is not practical for clergymen to take a real and active interest in the whole life about them. The problem still exists of striking a proper balance between religion and secular life, and disturbing this balance has led to revivals in the past, but, at the present time more than ever before, clergymen have a specialized field. That is why clergymen are out of their element in entering actively politics or business.

If corrupt commercialism builds churches, it is done with the sanction of the churches which compromise with that commercialism. Not in the great world outside is the preacher required under such conditions to take action, but within the church which condones a corrupt commercialism. The problem here is to keep pace with progress, not, as is often the case, to rush ahead or lag behind it. Slow, patient work of an educational nature is required, not drastic changes. That is why we think preachers are defeating their object in entering politics. They try to realize themselves too soon or rush ahead of progress in entering a field different from their own sphere of labour. Their interests and influence extend beyond their specialized sphere, as they should, but, to enter personally and actively into business and politics is as foreign to a clergyman's work as the exposition of a business man on Hegel and Kant who has had little or no training in philosophy. In the one case politics is not redeemed, and in the other we have abominable discourses. Good sense prays to be delivered from both.

GROWTH OF OUR FISHERIES.

WHEN the Dominion's Department of Marine and Fisheries was first organized in 1868 the number of lighthouses, lightships, etc., was less than 200; today there are 1,291, and the Marconi installation is more extensive than anywhere else in the world. Then the vessels on the Canadian registry had a trifling tonnage; today there are over 8,400, with a net tonnage of more than $40,000, giving Canada ninth postion among the shipping countries of the world. As to fisheries, when the department was created, the yield was less than $10,000,000; now it has gone up to nearly $33,000,000.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE OBSERVE that, according to the Hamilton Spectator, many complaints have been made that the new Hydro lights have destroyed the spooning spots, such as shady, cool front verandahs, and the local Hydro authorities will take steps to shade the lights. This is a singularly truthful item from Hamilton. A little Hydro light on some of the "old spooners" who escaped justice and walk around with a counterfeit cloak of respectability would make interesting though not the most classic reading for Spectator readers.

OUT OF DEBT

By Walt Mason

At breakfast time, at eve, at noon, I eat a cabbage and a prune, as oft I've done before; I smile and chortle as I dine, for what I eat is strictly mine, and paid for at the store. No man can say to me, "You loon, you ought to pay me for that prune, before you eat the same"; no man can mortgage, claim or lien, upon the cabbage, rich and green, with which I pad my frame. A cup of water from the rill tastes better than a pint or gill of grapejuice bought on tick; and when I've chewed my victuals down, I'm the serenest guy in town, with conscience smooth and slick. Oh, better far for any man, a can of soup, a pail of bran, a nickle's worth of tripe, than are the viands rich and rare which cause a gent to tear his hair when monthly bills are ripe. 'Twere better far to gnaw a bone that you may truly call your own, than eat a cherry pie, and have the merchants look askance, and tell you that your name is Pance, when you drop in to buy. The worst old scheme invented yet is that of going into debt; it keeps the people broke; within my means I always keep, and while the others wail and weep, I sit in peace and smoke.

LIFE'S TRIALS

LIFE is full of trials. Ye find 'em pretty well all along the track but they seem ter thicken to-ar'ds the end of the journey. big trials thet appal and leetle trials thet vex, they all have the function which is puttin' a stoop in yer shoulders and white streaks in yer hair and makin' ye realize thet human flesh is a mighty weak vessel ter depend on. I remember when I was a boy thet I could streak across a clover medder in the mornin' and never feel a stubble or thistle prick my bare feet, but comin' home at sunset tired with the day's work, oh, then, how thick the stubbles and thistles seemed ter be. So with life's trails, I reckon one sees more of 'em when weariness and frayed nerves grip one, and it's funny the effect they have on a person. A feller will stand a big loss er a big sorrow without a murmer and cuss like a pirate over losin' a trouser's button; all of which goes ter show thet we're mighty queer even fer humans.

BAR NOT THE ISSUE.

Rowell's Stand on Bilingualism Caused His Defeat Says Hocken.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., July 14.—That "Abolish the bar" was not the issue in the recent Ontario elections and that the Liberal party met defeat because it was feared that if they were returned to power bilingualism would be introduced into the schools of the province, was the contention of Mayor Hocken of Toronto in addressing a big Orange demonstration here yesterday. Carried Up by Balloon.

UDINE, Italy, July 14.—While ten soldiers were holding a dirigible balloon by ropes yesterday a sudden gust swept it from the ground. Nine of the soldiers let go, but the tenth was carried up. The crew of the dirigible made efforts to haul him aboard, but he fell from a height of 500 feet and was killed.

NEW ART FABRICS

They Make Striking and Attractive Summer Draperies.

NOVEL COLOR SCHEMES USED

Black and White Designs Carried Out in Geometrical Patterns So Fine They Look as if Etched—Novel and Attractive Gift Boxes.

Cretonne is a fabric we could ill do without in these days of brown bungalows and black furnishings. It gives the note of brightness and airiness to the somber and simple interior.

The importance of these fabrics in our furnishing scheme is due to the popularity of the rattan, reed, willow and wood sets with which we are adorning the summer porch and furnishing the summer home. Custom calls for cushions on the airy chairs and settees, and what material so useful as gay cretonne, which may be easily cleaned when soiled?

Seldom have these materials attracted so much attention as this season. They come in a wide range of colors and designs, but the fad is for the new art patterns, for which we have the German and Viennese schools to thank.

FANCY GIFT BOXES.

Black and white, dark blue and white and dark green and white are favored by the artists to whom the creation of the color schemes and patterns of these fabrics is an important matter. Each minute part is worked out with infinite care. The designs on some of these stuffs are so fine as though they had been etched there.

Flowers in their natural forms or in conventionalized shapes are the favorite motifs. Quaint uses are also made of birds and animals. One of the most remarkable of these fabrics is adorned with a forest scene in which deer, foxes, birds, etc., are cleverly intermingled. With such art are these interesting animals arranged that at a distance it looks like a Persian pattern.

Striped and square patterns are favored in these fabrics, which are carried out in geometrical lines, even when nature subjects are used for the backgrounds.

Not only is furniture for the summer upholstered with such art materials, but the fabrics are used for hangings, couch and table covers and for porch or hammock pillow covers.

They are useful for creating the many fancy articles which are usually fashioned with cretonne, their novelty making them especially popular.

In Paris the large dressmaking houses are giving away boxes covered with new art fabrics and handsomely lined. The boxes hold gifts and may be used for the accessories of the toilet, such as neckwear, corsage bouquets, necklaces, etc. Some of them are large enough to be used as hat boxes.

Cretonne sets are useful for the table. They are easily made, and if the cretonne is of a cool pattern in blue or one of yellow and the centerpiece of yellow or blue flowers to match a most attractive result will be obtained. Mark the plate size with the largest dinner plate and either crochet an edge to these or apply one of Irish crochet that can be bought for very little a yard at any of the shops.

Most attractive breakfast sets could be made of cretonne with a crocheted edge. The different sizes wanted are cut out of the cretonne. The edge is slightly rolled and worked with double crochet. Any desired edge of simple construction can be added.

Any particular color scheme can readily be carried out in these mats, and a simple crochet scallop would be a sufficient finish.

These cretonne sets are not only nice for breakfast use, but they are very appropriate for summer and seaside cottages.

If one would not care to crochet, a buttonholed scallop done in colored mercerized floss or a narrow braid could be used as a finish for the edge.

Every girl enjoys having dainty boxes in which to keep her belongings, and the handy needlewoman can easily make the chintz and cretonne covered boxes not only for herself, but as gifts for her less ingenious friend. Boxes of this kind can be made any size or shape, although the oblong ones are more easily constructed.

Fixing the Bishop.

A venerable and pompous bishop was having his portrait painted, and, after sitting for an hour in silence, he thought he would break the monotony. "How are you getting along?" he inquired.

To his astonishment the artist, absorbed in his work, replied:

"Move your head a little to the right and shut your mouth."

Not being accustomed to such a form of address, his lordship asked:

"May I ask why you address me in that manner?"

The artist, still absorbed in his work:

"I want to take off a little of your cheek!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Six Years After.

A young man and a young woman lean over the front gate. They are lovers. It is moonlight. He is loth to leave, as the parting is the last. He is about to go away. They swing on the gate.

"I'll never forget you," he says, "and if death should claim me my last thought will be of you."

"I'll be true to you," she sobs. "I'll never see anybody else or love them as long as I live."

They part. Six years later he returns. His sweetheart of former years had married. They meet at a party. She had changed greatly. Between the dances the recognition takes place.

"Let me see," she muses, with her fan beating a tattoo on her pretty hand. "Was it you or your brother whom I used to know?"

"Really, I don't know," he says. "Probably my father."—Weekly Telegraph.

HUGO'S WORKSHOP.

His Carpenter's Bench and the Shavings That Fell From It.

A graphic description of a visit to Victor Hugo in Guernsey and of his quaint home there is given by the late Sir William Butler in his autobiography:

"Of the many curious things to be seen in Hauteville House the master's sleeping room was the strangest. He had it built on the roof between two great blocks of chimneys. You ascended to his workshop bedroom by stairs which somewhat resembled a ladder. Quite half of the room was glass, and the view from it was magnificent. The isles of Jethou and Sark were in the middle distance, and beyond lay many a mile of the Norman coast. Alderney lay to the north, and beyond it one saw the glistening windows of the triple lighthouses on the Casquet rocks and still more to the right the high ridges overlooking Cherbourg. The bed was a small camp bedstead, with a table on one side of it and a small desk chest of drawers on the other, with pens, ink and paper always within reach.

"Near the bed stood a small stove, which he lighted himself every morning and on which he prepared his cafe au lait. Then work began at the large table which stood in the glass alcove a few feet from the foot of the bed. This work went on till it was time to dress and descend to dejeuner in the room used for that purpose on the ground floor. As the sheets of writing paper were finished they were numbered and dropped on the floor to be picked up, arranged and put away in the drawer desk at the end of the morning's labor. He called the writing table his 'carpenter's bench' and the leaves which fell from it his 'shavings.'

"It was at this table and in this airy attic that most of the great work of his later life was done. Here were written 'Les Miserables,' 'Les Travailleurs de la Mer' and many volumes of poetry."

How She Does It.

"Ma never has any trouble keeping her accounts straight as treasurer of the club."

"Does she always balance to a penny?"

"Oh, no, but whenever she's short she makes pa put up the difference."—Detroit Free Press.

Nasty Brute!

"You don't have to talk to me if you don't want to," snapped Mrs. Gabb. "Furthermore, I want you to understand that I am never interested in anything you have to say."

"Not if I am awake when I am saying it," responded Mr. Gabb.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Paternal Consideration.

"Do you want your son to follow in your footsteps?"

"Well, I can't say that I do. At least I hope he will never be compelled to crawl upstairs on his hands and knees when he happens to be a little late in getting home."—Chicago Record-Herald.

TRAVEL WITH A ROPE.

Be Sure You Have One Handy if You Take a Trip to Italy.

The following extracts from an article in the Woman's Home Companion explains why no one should travel in Italy without a rope:

"Let me urge the tourist not to fail to provide himself with a stout rope—a piece of clothesline is excellent—with which to tie up the trunk which is to go into the Italian baggage car. If you do not you may miss many train connections. It is a trick of the canny Italian baggage master.

"When you go to check or 'register' your trunk at the railway station this crafty robber will try to stick his fingers under the lock or under the staples at the sides. Then he will shrug his shoulders and tell you blandly that he cannot accept the trunk for registration, as it is not fastened securely enough and if the baggageman stole any of your effects while en route the railroad would be responsible. The trunk must be tied with a rope and sealed, he will tell you.

"You have no time to go rope hunting. You have to buy a rope from him. He charges you what he thinks he can make you pay. The price depends on how many minutes you still have to catch your train. Then he clips on a little leaden tag where the rope is knotted, and your trunk is officially sealed. It is a very serious offense to break this seal.

"Now, then, if your trunk is roped when it reaches the hands of the boss baggageman he is required at your request and upon payment of 2 cents to affix the official seal. So, as a last word, don't forget the rope!"

Golfer's Great Catch.

A good story is told of the late William Mollison, the actor. Playing on a Tayside links, he was driving off at the seventh hole (which stands on a high embankment with a burn in front), and after the usual waggle, he let go. But the head of his driver was loose. It came off and went into the burn and left him with nothing but the shaft, with the whipping straightened out—one end attached to the shaft and the other to the head of the club. There he stood a la angler, then he was heard to shout to his caddie: "Get the landing net ready, you fool! I've got a ten pounder here!"—World of Golf.

Clear Coffee.

It is rather expensive to use an egg every morning to settle your coffee as a great many do, and it is not clear and free from grounds if you boil it. Put your coffee in the coffeepot, pour boiling water in and set where it will be hot, but not boil. If you have your coffee ground fine you will get better flavor and it will be ready in about ten minutes. If ground coarse allow about twenty minutes.

THE ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP THE WELLAND CANAL

Crime for Which Dillon Walsh and Nolan Went to Prison for Life—Nolan is Only One of Trio Now Behind Prison Walls

Karl Dullman (Luke Dillon) who was released on Saturday afternoon from the Portsmouth penitentiary was the former power in the Clan-Na-Gael, and the brains of the Welland canal dynamiting attempt. It is said that there were three primary reasons in releasing him, influencing the department of justice—Dullman's age of sixty-four years, his efforts in bringing about the arrest of the murderer of Dr. Cronin, leader of the Clan-Na-Gael, and his exemplary behavior while imprisoned.

With Dillon free there is but one of the Welland canal dynamiters behind bars. That is John Nolan. The third, John Walsh, died in the penitentiary several years ago.

Had the attempt which these men made to wreck lock No. 24, at Thorold, April 21st, 1900, been successful, hundreds of people would have lost their lives. The valley of Ten-mile creek, with its scores of farms, would have been wiped out. The town of Merriton, would have been swept.

Twelve million cubic feet of water in lock No. 24, greatest of the chain at the head of the long series leading down through Canada's waters from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario, would have been let loose. The drop from No. 24 is sixteen feet. The flood, had it been lessened, would have torn away the gates of each succeeding lock and wrecked the canal.

That the catastrophe of this magnitude did not take place was not Dillon's fault. It was the fault of the men who placed the dynamite, under his direction, Walsh and Nolan.

Blunder Prevents Calamity.

It was averted simply because they made the mistake of placing their charges into the gate pits instead of the gate of the lock.

So by a blunder were the people of a town and throughout a valley saved from destruction.

When the two explosions shook Thorold and the country for miles around that April evening of 1900, the authorities recovered themselves quickly. Less than two hours later Nolan and Walsh were arrested as they returned to Niagara Falls, Ont., A short time more and Dillon had been taken at the Hotel Rosli, in Niagara Falls.

It was seven o'clock when Nolan and Walsh lowered their valises, each containing eighty pounds of dynamite. The fuses were set to make the charges simultaneous.

"Hurry, Jack, or it will go off."

"Passing the two men on the lock bridge, sixteen-year-old Euphemia Constable, who lived with her parents within 300 yards of the lock, wonderingly watch the men lower the grips by ropes at each side of the lock gates and run. Then came the explosion.

The castings of the head gate were torn away. The banks on both sides of the canal were ripped. Huge volumes of water flew into the air. Houses rocked and windows miles distant smashed. People in the vicinity were knocked down. Miss Constable was one of the number rendered unconscious.

But the gates held. The mile long level stretch of canal above, forty feet wide and twenty feet deep, did not sweep down to devastate and kill.

Paraded before the jail photographer Dillon smashed the camera and made a desperate effort to escape. Neither Walsh nor Nolan took part in it. They were loyal to their leader, and did not wish to effect his plea of innocence by going to his aid, although they saw he was being worsted in the attempt to get away. The battle ended only when Dillon was held at the point of a revolver.

That Dillon knew Walsh and Nolan, however, soon was established. Not only that, but is was proved that he laid the plot and had supplied the dynamite.

Dillon's History Revealed.

Originally Dillon was a shoemaker in Philadelphia. About 1881 he became identified with the Clan-Na-Gael, and when a split occurred in the ranks espoused the cause of the Cronin faction, the United brotherhood, which later merged with the Irish Revolutionary brotherhood.

Dr. Cronin, formerly had lived at St. Catharines, near Thorold. In May, 1889, he was murdered in Chicago.

Here Dillon came forward and denounced Alexander Sullivan and lined up against the anti-Sullivan faction, raised funds to prosecute Cronin's murderer. He even went to the extent of advocating casting aside the Clan-Na-Gael oath of secrecy, to run down the assassins. Then, in his testimony he revealed the mystery of the Triangle, the chief three who ruled the Clan-Na-Gael, and made public charges against Sullivan.

But when Dillon was arrested at the Falls all this was not known. He gave his name as Karl Dullman, of Newark, N.J., and as such he went to the penitentiary.

Two years later his identity as Dillon was revealed. There was difficulty in making it positive at first, for many swore Dillon had been killed in South Africa, fighting on the Boer side against the British.

Plans More Swiftly.

Ultimately the grim truth did out. The great leader of the Clan-Na-Gael was serving life sentence in the penitentiary as the principal of the Welland canal dynamiters.

Plans for the blowing up of the canal took shape readily in April, 1900. On April 10th Dillon went to Buffalo from his home in Philadelphia. He was then a cashier in the Philadelphia Dime Savings Bank.

Registered at the Stafford House in Buffalo, as Karl Dullman, he visited Thorold, and returned to Buffalo April 14th. The following day Walsh and Nolan respectively registered as John Smith of New York, and Thomas Moore, of Washington, arrived at the Stafford from Philadelphia. A man never identified, had furnished them money and tickets.

April 16th Dillon gave each his grip full of dynamite, and they went to Niagara Falls, N.Y., by trolley.

The eighty pounds of dynamite in each grip was mixed to the consistency of dough. Every cake had a separate fuse, but they were not attached.

At the Falls Dillon left Walsh and Nolan at the Imperial Hotel, but returned for them a few hours later. All crossed to the Canadian side on the Grand Trunk railway to Merritton. There they boarded a trolley and rode to Thorold, where Miss Constable observed them examining the lock.

Back at the Falls that night Walsh and Nolan changed their rooms to the Dolphin House. Dillon took up his quarters at the Rosli house, in the Canadian Falls.

April 19th was spent driving about near Thorold. Dillon went in a separate rig, but met the others near the lock.

Next day, the eve of the attempt, Walsh carried the first bag of dynamite into Canada. The afternoon of the 21st, a few hours before the charges were let go, he took the second.

Everything appeared right. Escape had been carefully planned. Walsh and Nolan were to meet Dillon in Buffalo. Their way seemed clear all through.

Had they thrown sixteen-year-old Miss Constable into the canal, they might have got away. Her description of Walsh, who had tried to hide his features, when she passed him on the bridge, proved the link which brought the trio to justice.

EMIGRATION AT VERY LOW MARK

London, July 14. — Emigration westwards, which has been gradually falling off since the beginning of the year, has now shown a decided tendency toward a slump. Shipping companies, both of the United Kingdom and the Continent, are feeling the effects very severely. The year 1914 will almost certainly compare poorly with the record year of 1913, and not even show up favorably in comparison with any recent normal year. Ship-owners are hoping the autumn season may show better figures, and though it is true the emigrant stream is usually considerably augmented during the autumn, there is every reason for the fear that the coming autumn will not in any sense make up for deficiencies of the earlier part of the year.

LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC CELEBRATION AT LINDSAY

ness. Such was the announcement of Dr. Wood, chairman of the speech meeting which took place in the park. In addressing the audience and after explaining Col. Hughes' absence, Dr. Wood stated that Orangeism was far from being dead. He stated if Sir Edward Carson required any volunteers he could easily get them out of the parade. His remarks were cheered to the echo.

The Speeches.

Joseph Thompson, former publicity commissioner for Toronto and grand treasurer of British America lodge delivered a stirring address. "If I had resided in Manitoba regardless of the fact that I am one of the strongest Conservatives I know of in the province, I would have voted against the Roblin administration. Why? Because Sir Rodmond Roblin attempted to tamper with the principles I support. This is the fourth Orange celebration I have attended since Saturday. Saturday morning in Toronto we had the finest turnout in our history. Saturday afternoon I had the pleasure of mingling with 7[illegible] Orangemen at Aurora. Sunday at Toronto I attended church service in the ranks of the greatest church service the Orange Order has had in my home city and today ladies and gentlemen, I am pleased to be in the good city of Lindsay to help you celebrate and enjoy the affair all through."

Mr. Thompson continuing stated that it was not the Roman Catholic that the Order had to fight or consider. It had no quarrel with that church. But it was the Protestant who was content to sit idle and enjoy the freedom the order had given him who the order had to contend with. He urged everyone to keep working. Some had said the order had lost its effectiveness but such was foolish statement. "We showed them in Manitoba whether we have lost any of our effectiveness. The Conservative party there trifled with Protestants and Orangemen and, you know the result. The Orange order is not affiliated with any political party. It stands for principle. The order has had a good year. It has fought and won the bilingual school question in Ontario. Its money has appealed the Hebert case regarding the Ne Temere decree until today the case is in the hands of the British Empire's greatest court, the privy council. That's what the Orange order did in Quebec in Quebec, ladies and gentlemen. They say that the order is going back. From the rugged shores of the Atlantic to the peaceful shores of the Pacific the order is thriving. Every Orangewoman is doing her share. She is just as good as the Orangeman. We are praying that the little shore from which many of us come will not be torn in strife, but remain part and partial to the British Empire. We should carry our Orange spirit and enthusiasm the year round. Do not let it diminish or lag after today."

Why They Helped Whitney.

Evan McLean, D.G.M., of Bowmanville, in opening congratulated the people of Lindsay and the committee for the grand showing that had been made and invited them all to go to Cobourg next twelfth. He then referred to the statement made by Rev. John McNeill that Orangeism and alcohol would defeat the Rowell party. "The Rev. John McNeill is dishonest when he makes such a statement. Mayor Hocken and myself were in Oshawa at one celebration and the chief of police informed us that the audience was orderly and not one man was in the cells. The Orange order was formed to prevent any church from trying to make its influence felt in the government of the country. When any church be it Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian or any other attempts to dictate any political policy then it is up to the Orange order to fight them. We helped Whitney because he was with us in bilingualism."

Bro. Crawford of North Toronto congratulated the gathering for the fine showing. He stated he was in Massey Hall when the Rev. John McNeill made the statement of Orangeism and liquor." Father Minehan one of the bitterest opponents of the Protestant faith was chairman of that meeting.

When Rev. John McNeil made that statement he was hooted by the majority of the audience and applauded by others among whom were Father Minehan who pounded his hand on the chairman's table with such force that he spilled the water pitcher. Ladies and gentlemen, I say that any Protestant clergyman who was on that platform and applauded under the circumstances is a discredit to the faith."

Rev. M. Foster spoke of the historic connection with the day and reviewed the history of Protestantism in glowing terms.

W. C. McBrien of Toronto, in his opening words said: "Any person who tells you that the Ulster Unionists have no army of strength is foolish. I have just returned from Ireland and have been all over Ulster. I am a Canadian Orangeman but when I was there I was enthused to a great extent by the things I saw and learned. On one occasion men off a British man-of-war cheered the Ulster volunteers who in my opinion are just as well trained and equipped as possible and could answer the call to arms at any time. There were 30,000 of them in Belfast."

J. H. Burnham, M.P.

In opening Mr. Burnham congratulated the town for the splendid reception it had accorded the visitors and for the splendid invitation extended to himself he thanked the officers. It was an old custom to allow the country to be governed and conducted regardless of religion but this custom had been broken by the Roman Catholics. He then touched on the action of Col. Hughes in breaking up the custom of allowing militia to appear in parades held by the Roman Catholic Church. The French members within the house cursed Sam Hughes but he stood firm. Then they thought they would be doing a great thing by using some old rifles. "If they are content to do without the real thing let them." There would not have been any British Empire of freedom if the battle of the Boyne had not gone the way it did. We know by experience that we would not have the liberties we enjoy if the vice gerant of God held power. He also stated that it was not the Roman Catholic the Order had to watch. It was the unconcerned Protestant." If a man is content to sit idle and take no interest in his country or his religion, then in God's name let him go over to the Roman Catholic Church and stay there," were his closing remarks.

HOW SAN FRANCISCO WILL LOOK AFTER ITS VISITORS NEXT YEAR

The Grand Trunk Pacific, as the most modern of transcontinental railways, passing through newly opened up wonderlands, will be the route chosen by thousands of tourists on their way to the Panama-Pacific Exposition opening in San Francisco on February 20th, 1915. The passenger officials of that company have just been advised that San Francisco now has 2068 hotels, rooming and apartment houses, an increase of 726 in three years. Before the Exposition opens, 150 more hotels, etc., will be ready for occupancy. Every assistance will be given to visitors anxious to secure accommodation by the hotel bureaus, approved by the Exposition Management. The San Francisco Hotel Bureau with a membership of more than 300 hotels has fifty thousand rooms on its lists. Rates will be $1.00 to $3.00 a day, each person, European plan, for any date or any length of time desired.

OPENING OF THE TRENT CANAL

The contract of Dennon and Rogers on the Trent Valley Canal is said to be the cause of the delay in opening the canal to Lake Ontario. The Department has been hoping for some time that this contract would not stand in the way but it has done so to a greater extent than at first supposed. It is well, as Mr. Burnham has suggested for Peterboro to take the lead in preparing for the celebration and now is the time for the aldermen to get busy.

LOGS MOVING SLOWLY.

The Peterboro Lumber Co.'s mill has been running since last Friday but their tow of logs is coming down very slowly owing to the low water, which is also holding up the logs of the McDonald Estate. It will be over a week before McDonald's mill will open. The manager, Mr. John Duignan, informed the Review today that the single mill which was recently destroyed by fire will re-commence operations in the course of two weeks.

START WORK ON RAILWAY SWITCH

Will Assist the New Service of Radial Company

CHARLOTTE ST. LINE

Work was commenced this morning on the placing of a switch on the street railway line between Wolfe and Dalhousie Streets on Park Street. The Street Railway Company received permission from the Board of Works last Friday night to do this work, and The Review learned this morning from street railway officials that it will be completed by the end of the week, and then the company will be able to work their ten minute service to better advantage.

In the course of ten days or two weeks, the work will be commenced on the extension out Charlotte Street and down the Boundary to Sherbrooke Street. As soon as the paving company start on the recently awarded contract, the Street Railway Company will insert the heavier steel on Charlotte Street from Bethune to Park. All the steel is in the city with the exception of some special rails for the corner of Park and Charlotte Streets.

BOTH PURCHASER AND DEALER TOOK CHANCE

Merchants who deal in fruit must be very careful not to retail goods that are not in proper condition for use. In the police court this morning, Magistrate Dumble imposed a fine of $5 following complaint by the Sanitary Inspector.

The defendant claimed that the purchaser was willing to take a chance when he got a basket of cherries at a reduced price.

U.S. COMMISSION FLAYS NEW HAVEN DIRECTORS

Report of Investigation Into Affairs of New England Transportation Corporation Declares That Men Who Manipulated Accounts and Grossly Deceived the Public Were Criminally Negligent.

WASHINGTON, July 14. — The story of the "reckless and profligate" financial operations of the New Haven Railroad, one of the most remarkable chapters in the history of the American railroad and American finance was revealed in part yesterday by the Interstate Commerce Commission in a report to the Senate of its investigation of that road. It told of millions used like stage money, of corporations as pawns in a monster game with all New England's transportation as a prize, which led the New Haven in the ten years just passed, from the height of prosperity to the point where a dividend has been passed, where a dissolution suit is threatening, and where criminal indictments of many of the directors who figured in its deals are at least a possibility.

Hampered by unwilling witnesses, by burned books, and by all the mazes which lawyers invented to cover the trail, the commission estimated that in the progress toward a monopolization of New England transportation the New Haven stock holders have lost between $65,000,000 and $90,000,000 but little of which they may recover. In return, the report said they have on their hands properties which pay no dividends, which eat into the earnings of the parent road, and which will be a burden on its capacity for many years to come.

The report deals with the management of the New Haven under former President Charles S. Mellen, and of the present directing head. Chairman Howard Elliott and Walker D. Hines, special counsel, says "they have cooperated with the commission and rendered it substantial assistance throughout this investigation."

The combination reared by the hands of Mr. Mellen, and approved by the late J. Pierpont Morgan and William Rockefeller, the commission finds to be clearly in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and a monopoly in practical control of the transportation of five states.

The commission's report is unusual in the manner in which the directors of the New Haven are scored for their deeds. It speaks of criminal maladministration and negligence, asserts with positiveness that the directors knew they were perfecting an illegal combination, and says that the dream of a transportation monopoly was unsound and mischievous. The New Haven, the commission says, employed dummy directors, manipulated accounts, used questionable methods in increasing its own stock, paid the dividends of subsidiaries to make a showing, and used many other devices to deceive the stockholders and the public. It dipped into politics, was a factor in "invisible government," made large campaign contributions to the two dominant political parties, bought officials and tried to distort public opinion. All this it did, the commission says, "to carry out a scheme of private transportation monopoly imperial in its scope."

RECEIVERS APPOINTED

Big Corporation's Affairs to be Probed

BUFFALO, July 14.—Judge J. R. Hazel, in the Federal Court here yesterday, appointed receivers for the United States Light & Heating Co., a $17,500,000 corporation engaged in the manufacture of car lighting and heating apparatus.

The application for the receivership was made by Fred. R. Humpage, one of a committee of three appointed last December by minority stockholders' committee to investigate the operations of the company since its incorporation.

In his petition for the receivership Mr. Humpage said the company is solvent and will continue so if properly managed. He criticized many of the acts of the board of directors, which, he alleged, dissipated the funds of the corporation in high and unnecessary salaries, such as $10,000 a year to Chas. A. Starbuck, of New York, as chairman of the board of directors.

THE ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP THE WELLAND CANAL

once instituted pursuit. The mayor of Thorold, one of the many who at once set off in buggies over every road from Thorold, passed the fugitives on the way to Niagara Falls. On their arrival the police were ready.

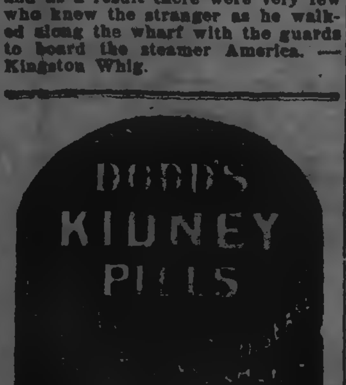
Then followed the chain of circumstances pointing to Dillon as one of the gang. Then his arrest, and the piling up of evidence baring the conspiracy entered upon. Dillon maintained that the canal attempt was not to cause loss of life, but as a blow at Great Britain as expression of the Clan-Na-Gael's hate.

"I'm Lucky All Right."

"Well, I guess I'm a lucky man all right," remarked Dillon, as he passed out through the big gate at the penitentiary, and was once more a free man. After fourteen years of confinement his joy at getting his liberty can well be imagined. He was taken in charge by a couple of guards, one of whom went as far as Cape Vincent with him. Father McDonald also accompanied him to the border.

In spite of his long term, Dillon is in good health and looks well. He appears to have taken on weight while in the "pen." He is a well-built and powerful man.

Very few people had the tip that Dillon was to be given his liberty and as a result there were very few who knew the stranger as he walked along the wharf with the guards to board the steamer America. — Kingston Whig.



AMENDING BILL IS REPORTED

Lords May Give Third Reading To-day

LONDON, July 14. — The report stage of the amending Home Rule bill has been concluded, and the House of Lords will to-day consider the third reading. Optimistic feeling prevailed in Parliamentary circles last night as the result of the latest discussions in the Upper House regarding the prospects of a settlement acceptable to all parties concerned. This hopeful feeling was particularly evident among the members of the Commons, in the lobbies and on the Terrace last night.

Among the many amendments proposed yesterday was one by Lord Weardale, a Liberal peer and a Home Ruler, who believes that civil war can only be avoided in Ireland by the exclusion of the Province of Ulster for the time from the Home Rule scheme. The object of his proposal was to enable a poll to be taken of the whole of Ulster on the demand of one-tenth of the electors in any four Ulster counties on the question of the temporary exclusion of the province. He saw no possibility of a compromise except by giving local option to the whole of Ulster. He was willing to consider whether the majority should not be two-thirds, believing as he did that in a very short time a very large proportion of the people of Ulster would be conciliated to Home Rule.

Lord Crewe found it impossible to give what he termed "formal" support to the amendment. Lord Lansdowne thought the suggestion came too late.

Without further discussion the amendment was negatived without a division.

KENDALL TO STAY ASHORE ?

MONTREAL, July 14. — Captain Kendall, who commanded the Empress of Ireland, is not likely to go to sea again, though he was exonerated by the Dominion Wreck Commission in its finding on the disaster last Saturday. It is understood here that the C. P. R. authorities have given him several months' leave of absence, and that at the conclusion of it he will accept a shore position either in Canada or in England in the service of the company.

Many German Soldiers Sunstruck.

BERLIN, July 14. — Two German soldiers died and over 100 others are ill to-day from sunstroke by which they were affected Sunday during military maneouvres at Frankfort-on-the-Oder, according to The Tageblatt. The men belonged to the Second Prince Charles of Prussia's Brandenburg Infantry Regiment, commanded by Col. Von Reuter, who was transferred from Zabern, Alsace, after the recent conflict between soldiers and civilians there. The weather was the hottest experienced in Germany this year.

"He didn't lie, ma'am," was his reply.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

All plants were placed on full time, and all of the strikers were taken back with the exception of two or three hundred whose places had been filled by imported workmen during the strike. HUERTA REPAIRS ROAD.

Mexican Dictator Probably Thinks He Will Have To Use It.

VERA CRUZ, July 14.—Four hundred laborers, acting under orders from Mexico City started work yesterday repairing the gap in the Mexican Railway, connecting Vera Cruz with the capital, and the rushing of the work is believed here to indicate a possibility that the first train to pass over the repaired road my be the special conveying Gen. Huerta and his family to the coast.

Quantities of rails and ties have been hauled to the break, a little over six miles from the city of Vera Cruz, and the two miles stretch which has been without rails since April 21 will be restored to working order within two days at the most.

Passengers who arrived from the capital yesterday reported an extraordinary session of the Senate there on Saturday, but said no announcement had been made as to the matters discussed behind locked doors. They said, however, the session was followed by a conference between several Senators and Francisco Carbajal, the new Minister of Foreign Affairs.

STUDIES OF THE HAIR

(From the Journal of the American Medical Association)

The attempt to find an illuminating account of the factors which may modify or determine the growth of hair will usually be a vain one. The older writers who did not always hesitate to make dogmatic statements when they were required to produce a finished account, sometimes discussed the subject with considerable freedom. Not so the modern scientific author, who realizes that every sentence from his pen is likely to be subjected to the scrutiny and criticism of someone who has studied the topic at first hand. The general descriptions of the processes of growth have been satisfactory. Facts concerning these processes are permanent acquisitions of physiology, but they do not commonly rise to the level of practical problems. Why does or does not the hair grow in certain regions in certain individuals ? What are the conditions contributory to growth ? How are the natural changes in color brought about and what determines them ?

Experimental studies in this field cannot readily be conducted on man. Certain facts are of course matter of common observation. The beard grows anew after shaving, and the tonsorial practice is believed to stimulate the growth of the hair. Precisely why it does is not clear. The beard is also said to grow more rapidly in summer.

If the pigment which produces the natural color of the hair is lacking the hair presents a grey or white appearance. The silvery color may further be due to the presence of more or less air in the hair. To account for the blanching of the hair—the familiar accompaniment of old age and a phenomenon which frequently begins long before middle life is fairly concluded—various views have been set forth at different times. The silvery gray appearance which is seen in aging persons is probably characterized to some extent by the occurrence of large number of air cavities, and not by the destruction of the pigment. Hair pigment can be destroyed only by the most vigorous treatment. Dry hairs contain more air, and therefore will appear somewhat lighter in color than most ones ; but black may be dried to the utmost without becoming white, and the hair of mummies dried through the centuries will show their pigment precisely as do fresh hairs.

The explanation of the familiar coloring changes of the hair is probably to be found not in a destruction of pigment already present, not on any bleaching of hairs already formed, but rather in a complete renewal of the hair. Pigmented hairs fall out and are replaced by pigmented or white ones. The appearance of gray or white hair is therefore attributed to the formation of a new hair coat, rather than by the alteration of the old one. Completely pigmented hairs never turn gray ; they fall out. It is, nevertheless, observed that the process of pigment formation may cease during the development of a hair. In that event the tip will remain pigmented though the base appears white.

How are we to harmonize these statements with the many published records of hair having turned white suddenly as the presumable consequence of fright or other profound emotion ? A careful study of the reputed instances has invariably shown that they were mythical. It is popularly related that Marie Antoinette grew gray during one night after she was condemned to be executed. It is true that at her death her hair was gray ; but her biographers all record that her hair had been gray long before the time of her death. It is also quite possible that the change while in prison was due to the fact that she did not have access to hair dyes and other toilet preparations. This may serve to illustrate the value of hearsay evidence and popular tradition.

The conspicuous changes which the color of the fur of certain species of animals undergoes at different seasons of the year, becoming white in the winter months, affords an opportunity of investigating the pronounced transformation seemingly so closely related to what is seen in advancing age in men. The studies of Schwalbe have demonstrated that here, too, there is no alteration of the color of the summer fur. The dark hair falls out as the season advances and white grows in their place. No sudden changes are found when accurate observations are instituted.

WOULD CALL IT "HADES"

Some Anglicans Will Try to Have Prayer Book Revised

TORONTO, July 14.—"Hades" will take the place of the word "hell" in the Church of England Prayer Book in Canada if the progressives succeed at the General Synod of the Anglican Church.

The General Synod has been summoned by Archdeacon Mathieson to convene at Vancouver on Sept. 9, and Ontario will be represented by an influential delegation of clergy and laity. Prayer Book revision will be one of the chief matters for consideration.

C. B. St. George is one of the most outspoken advocates of a scholarly, modern revision. In reference to the elimination of the traditional word, Mr. St. George says: "It would be better to have the word 'hades' in the creeds instead of 'hell'."

The progressives also want the prayer for forgiveness of sins, which follows the absolution, omitted as being illogical at such a point in the service. As it stands now, Mr. St. George says, "the whole thing is nonsense."

The progressives further desire the Canadian Prayer Book brought up to date with the American version, by substituting the word "who" for "which" in reference to the Deity. Exception is also taken to the repetition of the Lord's Prayer at the morning service.

It would not be necessary for the General Synod to receive the assent of the Archbishop of Canterbury to any such changes to make them valid, as the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada had full power to revise the Prayer Book, but the changes passed in the lower house must be ratified by the upper house, composed of the metropolitan of Canada and the other bishops.

FARMER FOUND DEAD IN BED

CHATHAM, July 13. — William Daveson, a well known farmer and market gardener, was found dead at his home. Daveson had been in the habit of sleeping in the shed at the rear of his house. Yesterday morning when his relatives went out to waken him they found him dead. Heart failure was the cause. Coroner Bray decided an inquest was unnecessary.

Fireman Injured.

KINGSTON, July 14. — Samuel Keyes, 22, fireman on the steamer Rosemount, whose home is in St. Catharines, was badly injured when he fell down the hatchway, a distance of 25 feet, on the steamer. He had his left arm broken, his hip sprained, and his right arm seriously hurt.

"Didn't that man complain when you charged him for a broken appointment ?"

"No," said the dentist, "He said breaking an appointment with me is worth every cent it costs."—Washington Star.

Creswell Had Bad Start in the First When Senators Made All the Runs of the Game

The Petes failed to solve Kubat's shoots yesterday, and were beaten 3-0. The winning streak was broken by the kalsomine brush. Blount and Byrne led the local hitters with two apiece. There was not an extra base poke in the game. 1500 people watched the game, as it was a big Orange day in the capital, so far as Ottawa was concerned, but a sour lemon for the Petes. The Senators made all three runs in the first session.

Ottawa, July 13.—(Special.)—Ottawa celebrated the glorious twelfth with a victory this afternoon over Peterboro. The score was 3 to 0. Kubat and Creswell were the opposing pitchers, and Kubat had much the better of the southpaw battle, letting Curley Blount's team down with four scattered singles, while Creswell was touched up for nine, four of which were garnered in the first.

GOLF

The qualifying rounds for the club championship must be played by Saturday, July 18th. Owing to a misunderstanding as to the rules governing this contest many players found themselves debarred from taking part in the match. In order to give everybody a chance to compete the Executive Committee has decided to have the qualifying rounds played over again.

It must be understood that only one qualifying game can be played for this purpose and that cards must be signed in regular order by player and opponent.

Scores will be taken without regard to handicap.

Cards may be handed in to the captain or to Mrs. Head at the club house.

COMMENT

As You Like It

Frank Dolan, Ottawa's big first sacker, seems to have come right back to the form, which made him the best man in that position in the Canadian League last year. In the game against Peterboro at Dupuis Park, he banged out a home run—one of the longest hits of the day. Incidentally he had 17 put outs at first base and 3 assists, thus accepting 20 chances without a misplay. Besides he started one dazzling double play and was at the receiving end of another. It was a big day for Dolan and his work delighted his friends. "Diddy" Dolan, the Peterboro first baseman, who was recently with the Indianapolis Federals, was also in the limelight. He had two hits and 15 put outs, driving in one run. The date didn't appear to affect the Dolans to any extent.—Ottawa Citizen.

Frank Fox, who played with Ottawa for a time last year, is starring for Peterboro at short. He had two hits yesterday, driving in the winning run in the 10th. Fox made one great catch off Smykal's bat.—Ottawa Citizen.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

WE don't know any more about the north pole than we did six months ago, but we know a lot more about Cook and Peary.

And the most discouraging thing about it is that whether we get it or not after awhile we don't want it.

A clever man never lets it be known how really clever he can be lest he discount his own ability.

A man may get his picture in the papers for many things, and sometimes it costs him a fortune to get it out again.

All of us have lots of ancestry, and the great thing to be thankful for is that most of us know nothing about them.

Overconfidence in our own ability is merely the complement of underestimation of other men and things.

Our own country is long on climate of varying degrees of intensity.

Anybody can play the fool, but few get encores from their audiences.

An Early Invention.

There is no modern joy ride
Like those we used to take
When snow was on the meadow,
The river and the lake
With school day Sweetheart Sally
Tucked up to bar the cold
All in a homemade cutter
That only two would hold.

Style wasn't on the program,
There was no fancy speed,
But just a pleasant jogging,
With Dobbin for a steed,
Yet those who by the wayside
Observed the passing pair
Had envy in their glances
And wished that they were there.

The tinkle of the sleighbell
Made music sharp and sweet
And brightened up the village,
Gave life to all the street,
And as into the country
It softly died away
Left memories with the hearers
Of days when they were gay.

Those sleighing days delightful
Of life and strength and hope
Before youth went in earnest
Out with the world to cope—
There is no turning backward
To that alluring track.
We've lost the combination
And couldn't get it back.

Truly Wonderful.

"I have a wonderful memory."
"You have?"
"Yes, indeed."
"How many quarts in a bushel?"
"You see that's what's so wonderful about it. It absolutely insists on throwing out all extraneous and immaterial matter."

Where It Would Help.

"The czar never goes anywhere unless he has a bodyguard of soldiers and detectives all around him about four deep."

"It must be very annoying to live that way."

"Yes, unless one wanted to go to a church fair."

Good In Both Trades.

"Young Skidoo is a regular cut-up."
"Is he?"
"You bet."
"Butcher or tailor?"

Some Speed.

"How did you come over?"
"In my aeroplane."
"Yes, like thunder."
"No, like lightning."

Great Attraction.

These Yankee girls, as you observe,
To dukes whose funds are low
Are simply irresistible
If pa has got the dough.

At It Again.

"They buried the hatchet yesterday."
"Well, a resurrection has taken place."

At the Office.

"That new young man is too slow."
"Then I see his rapid finish."

NO PENALTY FOR TUFTENES

Prosecution on a Criminal Charge not Likely

Ottawa, July 14. — The recommendations of the tribunal which inquired into the Empress of Ireland disaster will receive the immediate consideration of the Government and the Department of Marine, and it is safe to predict that they will be given effect to not only by the Canadian authorities, but by the British Board of Trade, whose concurrent action will be necessary.

A meeting of the lighthouse board, whose authority extends to the general supervision of navigation matters on the St. Lawrence, will be called as soon as Hon. Mr. Hazen returns in a day or so. This body will consider particularly the recommendation that pilots in place of being dropped and taken on at a common point, should get on and off at different points for incoming and outgoing steamers, thus obviating any conditions of crowding in navigation.

In respect to closing of bulkheads when a fog comes on, the recommendation is one for the consideration of the board of steamboat inspection. It is safe to predict that the tribunal's suggestion will be acquiesced in and passed on to the British Board of Trade.

Can't Cancel Certificate.

With regard to First Officer Tuftenes of the Storstad, upon whom is placed the whole of the responsibility for the collision, a rather curious condition of things arises. The Government extends to Norwegian vessels coasting priviliges in Canadian waters, but Tuftenes' certificate is not issued by the Canadian board, but rather by the Norwegian government. In consequence it cannot be cancelled save by the authorities in Norway, to whom the report will be sent. At the same time steps will be taken by the Government to remedy the somewhat anomalous condition of things, and to provide that officers of foreign ships to whom are extended the privileges of the coasting trade shall, as far as certificates are concerned, be put on the same footing as officers certificated by British or Canadian marine authorities. Were Tuftenes' certificate issued by the latter it would be cancelled for life. Under existing circumstances and disciplinary action can be taken only by the Norwegian government.

No Prosecution.

It is not thought probable that any prosecution against Tuftenes will be instituted. While upon him has been placed the responsibility for the disaster, it is not suggested that this was due to criminal or culpable negligence or intent, but rather to an error in judgment.

What the enquiry has cost is not yet figured out, but it is likely to be all of the $10,000 appropriated by Parliament. It is understood that Lord Mersey's expenses and those of the British officers will be borne by the British Board of Trade, and the rest by the Canadian Government.

MERSEY DOCK WORKERS STRIKE

LIVERPOOL, July 14. — A strike was started yesterday among the Mersey dock employes with the object of enforcing recognition of the workmen's unions and bringing about the establishment of a joint board of workmen and employers to deal with disputes.

While the strike was not general, many of the power stations were rendered idle and several liners were imprisoned in the docks owing to the impossibility of opening the gates.

St John Police Officer Dead.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 14.—Special Policeman Frank E. O'Leary, who was shot Sunday night by John Braman, 17 years old, while he was arresting him as a burglary suspect, died in the hospital early yesterday morning. He had been gaining apparently, but a change for the worse came late on Saturday. Braman will now face a murder charge.

Cochrane To Inspect Canal.

OTTAWA, July 14. — Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, left for Toronto last night, and to-day he will go over to make a personal inspection of the work on the new Welland Canal.

Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works, will probably spend a couple of weeks' holidays in Kenora after the political situation in Manitoba settles down. He may remain in the west till the end of August.

OBITUARY

LOTTIE L. LEE.

A bright young life was cut short this morning by death when Miss Lottie L. Lee, aged sixteen, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Lee of 213 Charlotte Street, passed away at the Nicholls Hospital after a short illness. The young girl was well known and highly respected by her many associates. She leaves to mourn her demise besides her parents three younger brothers and three sisters, all at home.

The funeral will take place from the family residence on Thursday afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. Robert Pogue, pastor of St. Paul's Church of which the deceased was a member will conduct the funeral services.

TO CARE FOR THE CHILDREN

Where Tuberculosis Must be Fought

HALIFAX, N.S., July 14.—That the welfare of the child is to be the most important phase of the anti-tuberculosis campaign in the future, was the opinion of some of the leading physicians at the opening session of the 14th annual convention of the Canadian Association for the prevention of tuberculosis yesterday morning at the Technical College.

Dr. Holbrooke, of Hamilton, emphasised the point that the root of anti-tuberculosis work is the welfare of children and the prevention from infection. Children did not die of tuberculosis until they grew up between the ages of fifteen and twenty years.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE AUTOISTS

Former Peterboro Boy Invents Wheel Tire

"An expert tire repairer, Alphonse Picard of 162 West 56th St., New York City, invents a new wheel tire of great merit. Engineers and experts claim when completed it will revolutionise the tire industry. This wheel tire is designed primarily to afford a simple but effective substitute for the inflated tire, overcoming the difficulties and inconveniences involved in the use of the latter and having other practical advantages such as strength, combined with resilience and durability, comparative cheapness, etc. In consideration of the abolition of extra tires and tubes, pumps, tire racks, trunks, etc., the appearance of the car will be greatly improved as well as being lightened, and abolishing air pressure entirely; this "Wheel Tire" becomes thereby, positively, absolutely puncture and blow-out proof."

Thus does the July issue of the Scientific Review speak of the invention of Mr. Alphonse Picard of New York, who is an old Peterboro boy and a son of Mr. Joseph Picard, Lock Street. The inventor has been working on this "Tire Wheel" for years and now that he has been successful in this big achievement, The Review unites with his friends and acquaintances in wishing him further success.

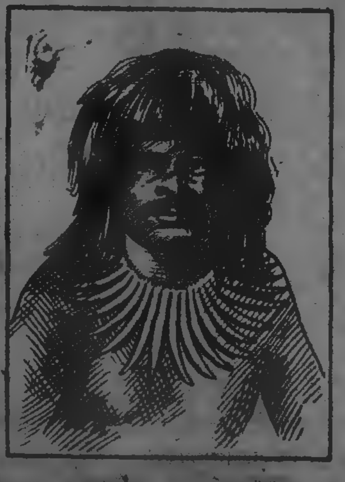
SOLOMON ISLANDERS STILL FOLLOW SAVAGE PRACTICES

Appalling Stories of Human Sacrifices Come From Group of Islands in Southern Pacific Ocean—Whites Are Preferred as an Article of Diet.

Though human flesh is still eaten occasionally in the Marquesas and the New Hebrides, the real cannibalistic hub of the South Pacifics is the Solomons, says Lewis R. Freeman in a recent article.

Cannibalism, which has always been practiced in the Solomons, owes its persistence not to any particular predilection of the natives for human flesh, but to the fact that it is looked upon as a religious and tribal rite. Human sacrifice has been, and still is, the most salient and ineradicable feature of their votive and propitiary ceremonies, and the erection of a temple, the birth of a son to the wife of a chief, the launching of a new head-hunting canoe, or one of a dozen other things, may require the taking of a life and the subsequent eating of the victim's flesh. The sacrifice is not always—in fact, is not usually—a white man, but if a trader or a missionary chances to be within striking distance when a victim is required, the prophets and priests are more than likely to receive intimation from the spirits that only the flesh of a foreigner will answer the dread purposes of the ceremony.

The great orgies of the times when the Solomon chiefs spent their days in head-hunting and their nights in feasting—when it was not an infrequent occurrence for a warrior to gorge himself with human flesh until cramps so serious as often to cause death supervened—are rarely heard of now except during periods of intertribal wars. In those days a chief's puissance was reckoned to be in proportion to the number of skulls which decorated the ridge-pole of his ceremonial house. The most famous of these collections have been destroyed in the increasingly frequent punitive expeditions from British gunboats, and the chiefs of to-day — most of whom are on probation for some devilment or other—are more anxious to destroy these gruesome evidences of their prowess than to display them.



A CANNIBAL CHIEF OF SOLOMON ISLANDS.

One hears reports from time to time in Australia that head-hunting is losing favor with the Solomon Islanders themselves; from which the deduction is immediately drawn in certain quarters that the days of cannibalism are numbered. Unfortunately, nothing could be further from the truth. I have little hesitancy in saying that, where there has been any reform at all along the line indicated, in nearly every instance it may be traced to physical or superstitious rather than moral incentives, like that of the New Georgian chief who, not long ago, was reported by the missionaries to have issued an order that no more human flesh was to be eaten by any of his people. Mass meetings for public thanksgiving to celebrate this most radical victory were held all over Australia, and even in England, and the quarterly steamer carried a dozen mail bags filled with letters, telegrams, and cablegrams of congratulation addressed to the zealous and successful missionaries. The latter, not having the time to answer all these communications individually, addressed modest circular letters of thanks to the Australian papers. In these, they claimed only a small part of the credit themselves, generously attributing the "change of heart" and appetite on the part of the chief in question almost entirely to "rivine intervention."

As missionary letters to Australian papers go, these were singularly meek, humble, and unmilitant, the reason for which only became plain several months later, when a gunboat was hastily summoned to New Georgia to investigate the looting of a stranded labor schooner, and the killing and eating of all of the white members of the crew. Then it transpired that the "divine intervention" of the missionary letters had been in the nature of a severe epidemic of sickness which ran through the tribe after its warriors had gorged themselves upon the flesh of a number of captives brought from a neighboring island.

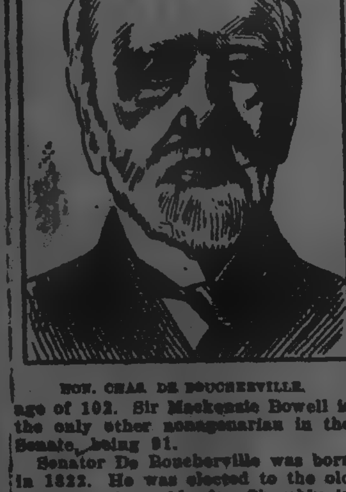
"He meat man blong Kaiti plenty bad. Make man blong Jorga plenty sick. Now no more can eat," explained the chief in voluble "beche de mer" English to the officers of the gunboat when chided for his fall from grace. "But man blong Sydney plenty good. No make man blong Jorga sick. All time can eat."

He had felt that either the digestion of his tribe was deteriorating, or that the tribes of Kaiti Island—his especial preserve — were no longer fit for food, and had forthwith ordered the practice to stop for safety.

DEAN OF THE RED CHAMBER

Senator De Boucherville is Now Ninety-Two Years of Age.

Senator De Boucherville, Canada's oldest Senator, has just celebrated his 92nd birthday. He was the recipient of many words of congratulation in his room in the Houses of Parliament at Ottawa on that occasion. Despite his 92 years he is sprightly and lively and looks as if he will equal the record for longevity of the late Senator Work, who died at the age of 102. Sir Mackenzie Bowell is the only other nonagenarian in the Senate, being 91.



HON. CHAS. DE BOUCHERVILLE.

Senator De Boucherville was born in 1822. He was elected to the old Canadian Assembly for Chambly in 1861 and sat in the Assembly until Confederation, when he was called to the Quebec Legislative Council. He was Premier of Quebec from 1874 to 1878. He was called to the Canadian Senate in 1879. After the dismissal of Premier Mercier in 1891, he was called upon to form a Ministry, but resigned the following year. He is the only man in Canada, a member of two Parliaments, as he still sits on the Quebec Legislative Council as well as in the Senate.

To Celebrate Tercentenary.

The picturesque little town of Penzance, well known to lovers of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic operas, which looks out on the blue waters of Mount's Bay, is about to celebrate the 300th anniversary of its incorporation as a borough. It is the westernmost town in England, being ten miles from the Land's End.

Here the Spaniards made their only hostile landing in England, when they sacked the town and some adjacent villages.

In 1646 it paid dearly for its support of the Royalist cause, the Roundheads under Fairfax laying the place waste. Algerian and other piratical hordes at one time greatly harassed these parts, which fact may have suggested "The Pirates of Penzance."

Organist With Wooden Leg.

Geoffrey Norris, a well-known character in the country parts between Wigan, Southport, and Preston, in England, is a man of remarkable versatility. Although he has a wooden leg, he has played the pedal organ at Wrightington Parish Church for a period of nineteen and a half years. Sexton and parish clerk for twenty years, he digs all the graves unaided, and has personally directed about 500 interments. He has held office in connection with every phase of Sunday school work, and has rung Good Friday "passing" bell for twenty years. For twenty-three years he has missed only one Sunday service, and that was when his own banns of marriage were called, as it is customary for those "named" to abstain from going to church on "banns Sundays."

Speech Made a Hit.

After-dinner speakers, in nine cases out of ten, usually commence by apologising for making a speech, and Mr. Thornton, the new general manager of the Great Eastern Railway in England, followed the usual plan at a dinner the other night. But he apologized in quite an original and delightful manner. "I have always had a great respect for Daniel, the original lion-tamer," he said. "We are told that when in the den of lions they roared and gnashed their teeth, but yet Daniel smiled—and smiled. And he smiled because he knew that, at any rate, there would be no after-dinner speaking." Mr. Thornton's version of the story is not strictly Biblical, but it is certainly witty and amusing, and should set a new fashion in after-dinner speeches.

NEW METHOD OF SAVING CREWS OF SUBMARINES

There have been 17 serious submarine accidents in the last ten years, of which 11 occurred to British vessels. The total number of lives lost in submarines up to the present date amounts to 211.

With regard to the question of having special "lifting ships" in readiness to meet accidents, it has been pointed out by naval officers, first, that British submarines are stationed all around the coast — at such places as wide apart as Prymouth, Portsmouth, Harwich, Dundee and Lamlash, as well as at places abroad, like Gibraltar, Malta and Hong Kong, and that those attached to home ports go to considerable distances and dive in various places, so that it would be impracticable to have lifting vessels standing by in all cases. Secondly, they say that in scarcely any known instance would a lifting ship been of assistance in saving life, if it had been available, and that in all cases of accident where life has been preserved it has been due to the efforts of the crew themselves without any outside assistance.

On the other hand, it has been said that officers and men of the submarine service have not hitherto attached much importance to life-saving appliances as applied to the particular vessels for which they are responsible. They have said that the air-lock and helmet might enable men to escape if circumstances were propitious, but that these same circumstances are not likely to be propitious in the case of accidents. On the contrary, they know full well that if anything serious happens to a boat, the crew are almost certain to lose their lives, and they accept the risks as part of "the day's work."

The Lifeboat.

Mr. Ross's invention includes a submarine lifeboat and buoy. The lifeboat consists of a cylindrical chamber, some eight feet in diameter, held under normal conditions within a watertight compartment by means of a stout screw carried through the base. At one spot within the watertight compartment is a secondary chamber containing a buoy attached to a length of wire. On an accident happening to the submarine, the crew enter the watertight belt and, sealing the door behind them, pass on to the inner cylinder. One stays behind sufficiently long to release, by means of a bevel gear, the buoy in the smaller chamber. The buoy rises to the surface at once, and indicates the whereabouts of the submerged craft. As soon as the crew are within the inner cylinder and the doors are shut the cylinder is released from its contact with the body of the submarine by the unscrewing of the grip beneath the floor. If the compartment in which the cylinder rests has not been damaged the cylinder at once rises to the surface by its own buoyancy.

There is an electric light in the conning tower and an apparatus for firing distance rockets, so that, whether by day or night, attention can be called to the position of the floating cylinder, with a view to obtaining help and avoiding collision. In calm weather a collapsible boat can be launched through the conning tower, to enable help to be sought from the shore or from passing vessels, or to locate the search vessels which might be sent out to look for the submarine. Provision has been made, however, for the contingency of such damage to the submarine as may prevent the lifeboat cylinder from rising to the surface and cause the detention of the crew at the bottom of the sea. Within the cylinder are two other compartments which can be opened to the sea by a convenient gear. These contain buoys which, rising to the surface, carry with them air-tubes, electric light and telephone wires. The buoys are so shaped that they ride on the waves and keep a free air vent, and on the exhaust pipe of one buoy there is fitted a siren.

Could Stay Down Some Time.

By pumping fresh air in through the other buoy and foul air out again through this one, the siren is worked, and the attention of passing or search vessels called to the spot. In proximity to the siren is a plate covering a telephone transmitter, which can be broken by the rescue party, and communication thus established with the men imprisoned below. If the salvage operations are likely to take some time, arrangements can be made for passing liquid food down the air pipe, as has been done in the case of miners buried alive under a fall of earth, but with whom communication has been established pending their being dug out. The inventor maintains, however, if his ideas are properly carried out, the crew would be able to stay at the bottom for a very considerable time, as the lockers under the seat in the cylinder are supposed to be kept stocked with provisions, in readiness for such an emergency, and there is a tank which is to be kept filled with fresh water. In one locker there is an electric battery, to give light to the imprisoned men, and in another is compressed oxygen, in case of need. There is also an inner chamber round the boat, filled with compressed ordinary air, which can be used if required. There is another tank in which sea water can be admitted by a valve to be used as ballast, if necessary, and this tank is also to be used as a lavatory and a means of keeping the boat pure and clean — a very important consideration if life is to be maintained for any length of time.

HOW TO MAKE A GOOD PIE

Making a good pie is the test of good cooking; but a rich puff paste is not at all necessary. A well made flaky pie crust will, in fact, be much better for the family than the richer pastry, and with a little experience and more care even Mrs. Newlywed should be able to produce a specimen above reproach.

Ingredients for pastry making should not be cut too small. One for family pie crust is as follows: Three cups of flour, one of shortening, and ice water to mix (about three-quarters of a cupful.) Butter and lard, chicken fat and lard or beef drippings, and lard in equal quantities make a good shortening.

Always sift the flour and also chop the fat into the flour. If flaky crust is wanted the shortening must not be chopped too fine. Sprinkle the water in a little at a time and toss about with a fork to mix. Turn on a floured board, dust with flour and roll back and forth until the paste is oblong, and fold over in three layers. Roll again and fold when the pastry is ready, though it will be improved by setting away in the icebox for an hour.

The reason why the shortening should not be cut too small is that little balls of it hardened by the ice water mixed with the flour makes the crust flaky after the folding and rolling. Fat rubbed into flour until it feels "mealy" makes a short pie crust. Three rollings are as many as this paste will stand. To press too much breaks the balls of fat while they really should only be flattened. Otherwise the paste will not rise and puff up in the oven.

Some people us a little baking powder in pie crust. In that case less shortening is required.

Never use a rich paste as an undercrust, because it soaks up the contents of the pie. Always cut pastry with a very sharp knife. If it is jagged at all around the edges, the pastry will not rise so well. Cuttings and trimmings should be used for ornamentation or smaller dishes. Putting several pieces together to form one large one is not a success, although it will answer, of course, for the home table.

To give a glazed appearance to a pie, brush over with a beaten egg before putting into the oven. Usually meat pies are glazed.

Pastry will rise better if put ice cold into a hot oven. When the greatest heat is at the bottom the pie will bake most successfully, because the paste will puff up from the heat before the top has a chance to get too brown.

In making pates roll out the paste half an inch thick. Cut two rounds the same size and take a small round from the centre of one. Use the ring left for laying on the other round. Brush with water to make it stick. The small round is used for a cover after filling the plate.

DOES NOT THINK AMERICA CAPABLE OF MAKING FLIGHT

Winnipeg, July 14.—Asked to give his opinion of the trans-Atlantic flight which Lieut. Porte purposes to make, Lincoln Beachey, the Chicago airman, said:

"I can see no termination but fiasco or tragedy. Personally, I would not attempt it for a million dollars, and I have spent five hundred hours in the air where Lieut. Porte has spent one hour. The enormity of the proposition has been under-rated, the preparations have been entirely inadequate.

"I do not believe that one aviator can make the fight. I do not believe that the present machine, the America, is capable of making the flight. I am convinced that the attempt, if made, will only result in giving aviation a terrible wallop in this country.

"While I do not undervalue Porte's ability as an aviator, I am convinced that no one man can perform this feat, particularly a man of Lieut. Porte's unproved calibre. It is one thing to drive a machine for ten or fifteen hours over a stated course over the land. It is an entirely different thing to drive this machine over water. I believe that the mental tension will be more wearing than the physical tax of handling the wheel.

"I do not believe that any man in the world can, without training, stand the terrible strain. And the America should be a seasoned, hardy machine itself. It should be able to speed endlessly. There should be auxiliary power, so that the America would go, go, go."

REPORT ON CROPS

Regina, July 14. — The latest crop reports received by the Statistics Branch of the Department of Agriculture of Saskatchewan are vey encouraging and prospects are that three will be an exceptionally heavy yield of grain this yea. Wheat is from fifteen to twenty inches high and is just starting to head out. In certain districts Marquis wheat is 24 inches high and headed out. Crops on summer fallow and new breaking are making the best showing.

Cold boiled potatoes cut lengthwise and broiled are delicious if served piping hot with plenty of butter, pepper and salt.

RED HAT FOR CANADA

Cardinal Begin Sole Possessor of Place in College.

Archbishop Begin of Quebec, who was one of the thirteen cardinals elevated to the Roman Catholic Sacred College recently, is a son of the late Charles and Luce Begin, of Levis, Quebec. He was born January 10, 1840, and educated at the Levis Model School and the College of St. Michael de Bellechasse and Laval University, where he took his degree of B. A. and was Prince of Wales' gold medalist in 1862. He followed the theological course at the Grand Seminary, Quebec, and at the Gregorian University of the Roman College, where he remained to make a special study of ecclestiastical history and Oriental languages. He later continued his studies at the Catholic University of Innsbruck for two years and was professor of dogmatic theology and ecclesiastical history in Laval University from 1868 to 1884 and also perfect of studies at the Little Seminary, Quebec, and principal of the Laval Normal School from 1885 to 1888.

ARCHBISHOP BEGIN.

In the latter year he was appointed Bishop of Chicoutimi and held that office for three years, being then made coadjutor to Cardinal Taschereau with the title of Archbishop of Cyrene in 1891. He was administrator of the archdiocese in 1894 and in 1898 became Archbishop of Quebec.

An Old Charter.

Doubtless the greatest treasure amongst the archives of the borough of Penzance, in Cornwall, is the charter of incorporation granted by James I., and dated May 9, 1614. This ponderous document, made of stout skins, is in Latin in black letter, some portions of it being ornately flourished. A portrait of his Majesty is enclosed in the initial letter, and the Great Seal of England is attached by a silken cord.

Herein are defined the limits of the borough, and authority is given for the use of a common seal. This seal represents the head of St. John the Baptist on a charger, and is said to have been suggested in a punning spirit by the Heralds' College, as the name Penzance (Pen-sans) means in the old Cornish language holy head (or, rather, headland), from an ancient chapel which formerly stood there, while the parish church once belonged to the Knights of St. John.

What could be more appropriate for its insignia, they argued, than the much-talked-of head of St. John the Baptist? There is a tradition that King James himself proposed these arms.

No Program Dance.

The no-program dance has found favor in Mayfair and Belgravia, and the idea is spreading. Its introduction would serve to mitigate the distress of the more awkward young man or the plain young woman, whose dance, written down fairly on the program, has been cut with deliebration and malice aforethought for one with a prettier face or lighter feet. The no-program dance is a go-as-you-please affair, where you may choose your partners on impulse, without the introduction of a master of ceremonies who does not know your tastes in partners.

A Woman's Church.

A women's church, with women officers and a woman minister, is to be established in Wallasey, Cheshire. Women will preach the sermons, offer the prayers, provide the music, and take the collection, and no man is to have a hand in the administration of the church.

A Marvellous Target.

An Australian is the inventor of a recording target, which shows the course of bullets in relation to both stationary and moving objects.

HIGH COMMISSIONER'S STAFF IN LONDON IS A BUSY ONE

Routine of a Varied Sort is Carried on by W. L. Griffith, a Welshman Who Used to be a Farmer in the Canadian West and Favors the Humble Visitor Above the Influential Man Every Time.

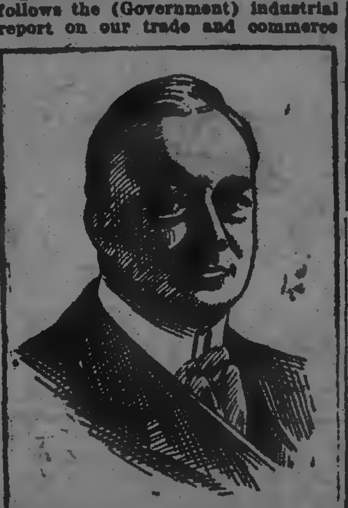
The office of the High Commissioner of Canada, in London, is commonplace, dull and even grimy in outward semblance. But within those arid walls in blank and unresponsive, grey, be-smoked stone, a tremendous mental activity is observable. Nothing outside denotes the importance of the work; even the brass plate itself commanding no passer-by to pause, at the words:

"Office of the High Commissioner for Canada."

The shining brass plate attracts no special attention, being itself a quite ordinary stone-front feature, and dozens of like plates surround it; but once you cross the threshold, you get the Canadian air of "hustle."

One might ask, "What is the use of the office of a High Commissioner?" It is a clearing house for Canadian Trade and Commerce, and also a bonded warehouse for international good-fellowship. The appointment of the new commissioner therefore becomes a matter of international importance.

Every morning, all London looks for a certain paragraph which appears in The Times, and which is headed: "A Cable to the Canadian High Commissioner states."—— Then follows the (Government) industrial report on our trade and commerce conditions, including railways, banks, emigration, grain and cattle returns, stocks, securities, with oil, gas "finds" and other Canadian corporation facts; all of which acts upon the temper of the "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," just as the weight of a hair affects the balance of the jeweler's scales.



W. L. GRIFFITH.

The present staff of the High Commissioner's office numbers twenty. To see the various officials, intermediate and subordinate, at work, is to see an ant-hill in motion. The fountain head, the High Commissioner, has his private office on the ground floor, off which is the private office of his official secretary, Mr. W. L. Griffith, through whose capable, if, at times, somewhat exacting hands must be sifted every call, enquiry or demand of the press and public. Personal calls upon the High Commissioner must be arranged through Mr. Griffith, whose knowledge of Canadian matters is as wide as it is profound. One particular feature noticeable in Mr. Griffith's official attitude—as between the enquirer and the High Commissioner—is shown in the fact that whenever it comes to granting a favor to visiting Canadians, if there be a choice between influential persons or less influential ones, the "under dog" always gets the benefit! Asked as to this unusual course, Mr. Griffith said: "Well, perhaps it is owing to the fact that I, myself, have been a toiler and a pioneer of the west, I having spent my youth on an Assiniboia farm as a 'hand,' and did 'chores' at $15 per. And whenever it is possible, or whenever a choice in applications must be made, my mind harks back to the early days, and the toiler gets first place."

It will interest Canadians to be told that all applications for presentation at Court—that is, to Their Majesties' presence—must be first submitted to the resident High Commissioner, by whom applications, as far as Court etiquette allows, are "put through"; but here the Lord Chamberlain is privileged to use his blue pencil, and unless a lady can claim distinction through a father or a husband, the chances are slim indeed for courtesying to Queens and Kings. Poor old Lord Strathcona used (it is said) to take it much to heart when his appeal on behalf of some (wholesome though artlessly unimportant) Canadian was turned down.

Another official act of the High Commissioner is that of examining and "uttering" passports. This means assuming the responsibility of the bearer going into foreign countries; and, as may be understood in these days of socialistic and anarchistic thought, a passport carries with it something of international obligation. To obtain a passport into, let us say, Russia, the High Commissioner must ascertain all facts concerning the integrity of the applicant. This entails time, patience and a tact beyond telling.—Kate Simpson Hayes in The Canadian Courier.

Lawyers Gone to "Devil."

The phrase "Go to the devil!" had at first no ill-meaning. A public house in Fleet street, London, was called "The Devil." Lawyers in the neighborhood, when they went to dinner, left word they had "gone to 'The Devil'." Eventually the expression became more emphatic than informing.

Explaining the Reason For Peevy's Absence From Church Services.

THE new minister in the parish was making his first calls, and when he reached the home of the Peevys he said to Mrs. Peevy:

"I don't think that I have seen Mr. Peevy at church yet, have I, Sister Peevy?"

"Well, no, you ain't," replied Sister Peevy. "The fact is, Peevy likes to lay abed late of a Sunday morning, an' time he gets up an' has his breakfast an' gets through the Sunday papers an' does his Sunday shavin' an' mebbe an hour or two of tinkerin' around the house that he allus puts off to do on a Sunday an' then has a smoke an' mebbe cuts some o' the children's hair or beats rugs for me or even mops up the kitchen if I'm hurried—time he's done all that it's too late for church. Fact is, Peevy ain't a real spiritual minded man nohow—at least not the same as I am."—New York Post.

EGGS SUCCESSFULLY MARKETED BY PARCEL POST

The United States Government has recently proved that eggs can be marketed successfully by parcel post. At the end of five months' test it concludes that parcel post is of particular value to the man whose flock is too small or who lives too far from express service to permit shipping eggs in the regular commercial 30-dozen case. Of the 9,131 eggs shipped in 466 lots, 327, or slightly less than 3.6 per cent. were broken. Only 209, or slightly less than 2.3 per cent were absolutely wasted; the others, though broken, could still be used. No attempt should be made to market by parcel post any but eggs of the finest quality.

Eggs should never be washed when intended for high-class trade, since the process removes the natural mucilaginous coating and opens the pores of the shell. After thorough elimination of the unfit, the eggs that remain should be carefully packed in a container. The post office regulations require this to be so wrapped that nothing can escape from the package, and each egg in addition to be wrapped separately in excelsior, cotton, or some such material. Soft paper serves the purpose well.

The larger the shipments the producer can arrange to make, the cheaper can he afford to sell his eggs.

To the value of the eggs and the cost of postage must be added the cost of the container and the warpping. For two dozen eggs this may be estimated at 8 cents. With postage at 9 cents it would therefore cost 17 cents to market two dozen eggs, or 8½ cents a dozen. By shipping in 10-dozen lots, it is estimated that the marketing cost can be reduced to 4.7 cents a dozen. Where the container can be used more than once this cost can be somewhat reduced. The shipper must depend upon the care with which he safeguards the reputation of his products. Satisfied customers will soon build up his business for him.

A WEDDING TOUR

It Was In An Improvised Conveyance

By JOHN TURNLEE

Billy Mudge at thirteen went to work in the freight house of the R. F. and L. railroad. Billy was a good boy, did his work well—when the circus was not in town—and was advanced from time to time till at the age of seventeen he was quite valuable to the agent in charge of the station. He was often commissioned to attend to the loading and unloading of freight and frequently gave orders as to the disposition of cars.

About this time—when Billy was seventeen—he and Molly Burnes fell in love with each other. Whether Billy first fell in love with Molly or Molly first fell in love with Billy doesn't matter, and there was probably no first about it on either side, but a natural mating, just like a pair of doves. However, since Molly was but fifteen she knew, as Billy knew, that any suggestion of marriage would result in her removal to a distant boarding school, where she would see her youthful lover only at vacation time, and then only clandestinely. So she said never a word to any one about her "affair" and cautioned Billy not to do so either.

These two youngsters had all the freedom they could have wished for, since no one dreamed that, not having quite emerged from childhood, they would plot marriage. Yet that is exactly what they did.

"Let's get married," said Billy one day.

"What'll we live on?" asked the prudent Molly.

"I have $60 a month."

"Do you have all of that?"

"Yes, I do, and next year I'll get another raise."

"But when people get married the bride must have a trousseau, and they go on a wedding tour, and all that."

"I can't do anything about a trousseau, but I think I can get passes on the road for the tour."

"But to ask for passes would give us away, wouldn't it?"

"I don't know but it would," Billy admitted doubtfully. Then an idea came into his head. It wasn't much of an idea when he conceived it, but it developed with mushroom growth, especially when he communicated it to Molly.

"What are you thinking about?" she asked.

"Why, I was thinking that there are idle freight cars in the railroad yard, and we might contrive to get a wedding journey in one of them."

"How in the world could we do that?"

"While the car is standing in the yard we might fit it up, and then I could get it coupled on to a train"—

"What kind of a train?"

"A freight train, of course. We couldn't aspire to going on a passenger train."

"Oh!"

"We could settle before starting where we would go, and I could make out the ticket for the car and put it"—

"We'll go to Wharton. Lucy Carter is there. We can see her. Maybe she'll show us some attention—give us a tea party or something like that."

"What will we need for the journey in the way of furniture? There's nothing at all in the car, you know."

"Shall we have to get our meals in it?"

"Certainly. We can't leave it till we get to the end of the route. We'd be discovered."

"So we would. Well, we'll need a cook stove. There's one in the wood house mother discarded when we got the new range."

"All right. I can take it away at night."

"And the serving table with folding legs would be handy. Old crockery will do, won't it? There's plenty in the kitchen pantry."

"We'll need something to sleep on."

"There are old bedsteads in the garret."

"I expect we'll have to be content with something easier carried than a bedstead."

"How would a hammock do? One with a"—

"A cot would be better. There's one at the station—unclaimed freight. I'll only have to carry it to the car."

"Since it's summer time we will need very little covering. How about provisions? I suppose I must provide them."

"Bring what you can. I'll buy some meat and things that can't be kept long. There's one important thing in the way that I'm afraid will block us. Who's going to marry us?"

"Oh, goody gracious! I never thought of that."

"We'll have to go to some parson who doesn't know us. I'll fool him with a false beard, and you wear a dress reaching to the floor. You look old for your age."

"Maybe I can pass for eighteen."

After this preliminary dialogue both set to work early to make the necessary preparations. Billy's mind being on his matrimonial scheme, his employer found it hard to get much work out of him, and, as for Molly, she appeared so innocent, was so quiet and so sweet to every one that it seemed butter wouldn't melt in her mouth.

Yet all this time the minx was gathering things for her wedding journey.

The car Billy selected was an old caboose that had been converted into an ordinary box car. It had since been discarded. Billy remembered that he must seal it up and couldn't do this from the inside, so he made a trapdoor in the floor. They put the bridal outfit in the car at night when the yard was deserted. Billy took Molly out one evening, ostensibly to the circus, but really to the car. He had provided candles, and Molly, who, as her mother's assistant, had learned housekeeping, put everything in order. Then they sat down on a couple of stools, and it is questionable if any couple about to be married looking over the sumptuous dwelling they were to occupy together took more pleasure in it than these two youngsters in what was before them.

"We won't need curtains, will we?" remarked Molly. "How about light in the daytime?"

"The car's an old one. There are plenty of cracks."

"No need for a garbage can. The trapdoor will do for that—that is, unless we stop too long in one place."

"We'll be moving most of the time."

"I couldn't bring my piano, could I?"

"No; you couldn't."

"Seems to me we should have at least one window. We can't see out as it is."

"I'll tell you what I can do. I can cut a square place in the side and put hinges on it."

"Oh, do! It will be so much nicer to be able to look out and see the scenery!"
